ABATEMENT OF RENT , in respect of leased out land of which tenant got no possession — Limitation—Acquiescence—Presumption. A tenant is entitled to abatement of rent in respect of leased out land of which he did not obtain possession. Although the question of limitation does not arise in connection with the plea of abatement, the question of acquiescence and the presumption arising from such acquiescence may arise. Ram Narain Chakrabarty v. Pootin Behari Lal Singh , 2 C. L. B. 3 (1878) referred to. RAJ KUMARI BOSE CHOUDHURANI v. ACQUITTAL by title paramount. (Diara proceeding.) Where a portion of the lands comprised in a tenure was wrongly resumed by the Government in a diara proceeding and formed into a separate estate, and the Government settled it with the tenure-holder and realised rent from him in respect of the same, and the landlord did not object to the resumption proceedings and accepted malikana . Held, in a suit for rent of the tenure by the landlord against the tenure-holder, that the act of the Government was an ouster of the Defendant from a portion of his tenancy under the Plaintiff by a title paramount, and such title having been admitted by the landlord, the tenant was entitled to an abatement of rent in respect of the tenure to the extent of the amount payable by him to the Government. When the question of credibility of a witness depends upon the light which is thrown upon it by his demeanour in the box, by the manner in which he answers the questions, and by how he seems to be affected by the questions that are put to him, and so on, the trial Judge has an advantage not shared by the Appellate Court. But when the views upon credibility are founded upon argumentative inferences from facts which are not disputed, then the Court of Appeal is really in as good a situation as the Judge of first instance. C applied for execution of the award, against B. Held—That C the assignee, was entitled to execute it against B under Or. 21, r 16 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908. Held also—That when under the provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act sec. 15, the legislature provided that an award on being filed was enforceable as if it were a decree of the Court it intended that all the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, applicable to the execution of decrees, should apply to an award so filed. Louis Dreyfus & Co v Purusottom Das Naraindas, 1 L R 17 Cal 29 at p. 33 (1919) referred to Tribhuvandas Kaliaudas Gajar v Jhanchand, 1 L R 35 Bom 196 at p. 198 (1910) Rajmath v Ahmed Mussau, 1 L R 10 Cal 219 at p. 230 s.c. 17 C W N 195 (1912) and F D Sassoon v Ramdutt Ramkissendas, 1 L R 50 Cal 1 at p. 9 s.c. 27 C W N 660 (P C) (1922) considered. GLADSTONE WYLLIE & CO v JOSEPH PETER MAHOMED & CO 666

BENAMI transaction—Nature of evidence necessary to establish benami discussed—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec 66, operation, if retrospective—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec 317. Where it is asserted that an assignment in the name of one person is really for the benefit of another, the most important test to be applied is the source from which the consideration came. When from the lapse of time, direct evidence of a conclusive or reliable character is not forthcoming as to the payment of the consideration, the Courts will deal with the case on reasonable probabilities and inferences arising from proved or admitted facts, having regard to the surrounding circumstances, the position of the parties, their relations to one another, the motives which could go on their actions and their subsequent conduct, including their dealings with or enjoyment of the disputed property, not permitting the real question to be obscured by the form of expression used in the deeds of transfer or by recitals therein of obviously untrue statements. Where however the Plaintiff contended as in the present suit that the purchaser at an execution sale which took place sometime ago was a benamidar for the judgment-debtor and all that he was able to prove was that the judgment-debtor was at the time of the sale in involved circumstances, that certain voluntary transfers by him were fictitious, that the auction purchaser was directly related to him and paid a small sum as purchase-money, and there was evidence that the properties sold were heavily encumbered and no evidence that the judgment-debtor continued to be in possession after the execution sale. Held—That although there might be ground for suspicion and although some of the circumstances might engender doubt, no inference could be drawn, based on legal testimony, that the auction-purchaser was a benamidar for the judgment-debtor. Quære—Whether the Plaintiff in this suit was debarred from raising the question of benami having regard to sec 66 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. PROMODE KUMAR ROY v KALI MOHAN SAHA PRAMANIK 305

BENGAL COURT FEES AMENDMENT ACT (IV of 1922), whether ultra vires. Fee at the enhanced rate for grant of letters of administration whether to be levied on portion situate in Bengal or in respect of assets outside Bengal as well. Under the provisions of sec 80A (1) of the Government of India Act, the Local Legislature has power to make laws, and under sec 80A (2) the Local Legislature may, subject to the limitations mentioned in cl (3) repeal or alter as to that Province any law made before or after the commencement of the Act. The limitations imposed by cl (3) relate inter alia to the imposition of new taxes other than those set out in Sch I of the Scheduled Taxes Rules [sub-cl (a)] and Acts set out in the Schedule to the Previous Sanction Rules [sub-cl (h)], the previous sanction of the Governor-General being required in either case. Stamp duties the amounts of which have been fixed by Indian Legislation, and which under Sch I (8) of the Scheduled Taxes Rules cannot be altered by the Local Legislatures without the previous sanction of the Governor-General, mean some such duties as are imposed by the Indian Stamp Act and do not comprise court-fees imposed by the Court Fees Act, which Act being also not contained in the Schedule to the Previous Sanction Rules, Bengal (Court Fees Act Amendment) Act IV of 1922 was not ultra vires by reason of its having been enacted without the previous sanction of the Governor-General. The sum charged upon a grant of probate or of letters of administration is not a tax or duty levied upon the property upon which the probate or administration operates, but it is merely a fee levied by the Court issuing the probate or letters of administration for the work done in this connection wherever the property may be situate. And this is not ultra vires the case because the fee is levied upon the value of the property. Therefore court-fee on probate or letters of administration is rightly levied at the enhanced rate on the value of all the assets whether in the Province or outside. IN THE GOODS OF GEORGE THOMAS WILLIAMS 812 summed by Government before expiry of lease, validity of—Act VII of 1868, s 1, tenure, such karsha if fall within the meaning of. A howladar holding a howla under Government regretted his bargain and asked Government to manage the howla during the unexpired term. In the howla there was a karsha, and after the howla had been placed in the hands of the Government by the howladar, the karsha fell into arrears and, to realise the arrears, a sale was held under Act XI of 1859 at the instance of the Government. Held—That the karsha was liable for the rent payable to the howladar, but the arrangement which the latter entered into with the Government could not have the effect of changing the rent into revenue, and thereby rendering the karsha liable to sale under the provisions of Act XI of 1859. Consequently the sale held under the Act was made without jurisdiction. UKILADDI KHAN v. SMAT ALI MUNSHI 723

BENGAL MUNICIPAL ACT (III, B. C. of 1884), ss. 250, 295, 297—Rules framed by Local Government under s 250—Rules 4, 9 and 24. Ultra vires—Rules requiring rate-payer who takes private water connection to pay for meter and authorising cutting off of water supply in case of non-payment, reasonable and intra vires—Rules, if impose a tax. A Rule framed by the Local Government requiring owners or occupiers paying water rate to provide a meter at their own expense as one of the conditions for allowing them to lay down communication pipes from the service pipe of the Commissioners, for the purpose of leading water to their premises for domestic purposes, is within the powers conferred by sec 290 of the Bengal Municipal Act, and being reasonable is intra vires. It is not inconsistent with sec 295 of the Act, which makes it lawful in certain circumstances to have a meter fixed at the expense of the Municipality and to expend the Municipal funds for the purpose. As no one is obliged to have a house connection, the rule has not the effect of imposing a charge or tax on the rate-payer. Rule 24 (e) of the Rules framed under sec 290 of the Act authorising the Commissioners to cut off water supply, upon the owner or occupier refusing to comply with a notice to pay fees and charges imposed in accordance with the rules, is consistent with sec. 297, reasonable and intra vires. NAGENDRA LAL DAS v. BENGAL TENANCY ACT (VIII of 1885), sec. 22 (3), before amendment by E. B. & A. Act I of 1907—Co-sharer landlord purchasing non-transferable occupancy holding and letting out holding to tenant—Latter, if under-ryayat. Under sec. 22, sub-sec (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act (before amendment by Act I, E B and A C. of 1907), a co-sharer landlord purchasing a non-transferable occupancy holding did not acquire title in the holding as a ryayat. 22, before the amendment by E. B. & A. Act I of 1907—Co-sharer landlord purchasing occupancy holding and settling lands on tenants—Their status respectively of non-occupancy ryayat and under-ryayat. The legal effect of the purchase on 5-5-1899 of an occupancy ryayati holding by a co-sharer landlord was that the holding ceased to exist as an occupancy holding and the purchaser, co-sharer held the land as a non-occupancy ryayat. Therefore a tenant inducted on the land by him was an under-ryayat. ABINAS CHANDRA BHATTACHARJEE v. AMAR CHANDRA DE 760n

30 (b) and 182, enhancement of rent of holding consisting of homestead and tank, if allowable under—Enhancement under sec. 30 (b), if depends on the use to which the holding is devoted. Where on application asked for enhancement of the rent of certain holdings consisting of homestead or homestead and tank under sec 30 (b), Bengal Tenancy Act, and the Revenue Officer refused it on the ground that they grew no agricultural crops. Held per Curiam, J.—That there is nothing in sec 30 (b) to restrict the enhancement to the land actually used for cultivation. To attract the operation of the section it would seem to be sufficient that the land in question is a holding held at a money rent by an occupancy ryayat. Neither would sec 182 remove homestead lands from the operation of sec 30. It would no doubt be open to the tenant under sec 182 to prove that the rent of homestead land by custom or local usage is not liable to be enhanced under sec 30 (b), but failing the proof of any such custom or usage homestead land would come within the operation of sec 30 (b). Per Pantam, J.—That nothing is said about "agricultural crops" in sub-sec 30 (b) or in relation to it, and there is nothing in the wording of sec 30 which indicates that an enhancement under sub-sec (b) can only be made when the holding grows "agricultural crops". Such an enhancement bears no apparent relation to the use, agricultural or otherwise to which the particular holding is devoted. RAJAT RESHMI KESH LAW v. CHINTAMONI DALAI 962

Where tenants paying rent in kind having been recorded as settled ryayats instituted suits under sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to have them entered as ryayats at fixed rents, and provided uniform payment of rent for over 20 years, but the suits were dismissed on the ground that the presumption under sec

50 of the Act was not applicable to cases of rent in kind. Held—That sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applied and the tenants were tenants at fixed rents. The presumption under sec. 50 is applicable to a tenure-holder of a raiyat holding at a rent payable partly in cash and partly in kind or entirely in kind. The term "rent" in the said section is not restricted to "money rent" and bears the meaning attributed to it in sec. 3, d (3) of that Act. Reference to the Report of Select Committee and proceedings of Legislature is not permissible in aid of the interpretation of a statutory provision. DINA NATH PAL v. 50 (2), tenant is entitled to benefit of presumption under, when the land was permanently settled after 1793—"Permanent Settlement," whether exclusively made the Settlement of 1793. Where rent was sought to be enhanced in respect of land which was permanently settled after 1793 but in 1905. Held—That the words "permanent settlement" in sec. 50 refer to the Permanent Settlement of 1793. To gain the advantage of sec. 50 therefore the Defendant has to show that the rate of rent has not been changed from the time of the Permanent Settlement of 1793. Though rent has not been changed during 20 years prior to the institution of the suit a finding that the jama was altered long after 1793 is a finding to the contrary within the meaning of the concluding part of sub-sec. (2) of sec. 50, i.e. that no presumption can arise that the tenant has held at the same rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement. Tamasha Bibi v. Ashutosh Dhur, 4 C. W. 50, occupancy raiyat if entitled to the benefit of the presumption under—Rent-receipts for 20 continued years if necessary to establish the presumption—Sec. 155, if excludes the presumption under sec. 50 in proceedings under sec. 105. In certain proceedings under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for settlement of suit and equitable rent by way of enhancement of the existing rent, the Defendant, who had been entered as an occupancy raiyat in the record-of-rights, contended that he had the status of a tenant at a fixed rate, and produced rent receipt, though not for 20 continued years, to show that he had held at the same rate for more than 20 years. Held—That there is no reason why an occupancy raiyat should be excluded from the category of a raiyat for the purpose of the presumption under sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. A raiyat at fixed rate is not created by sec. 50 which merely furnishes a rule of evidence to enable a person to prove with facility that he is a tenant at fixed rate. Sarbeswar Patra v. Mondaraja or Bijoy Chaud Mohalap, 26 C. W. N. 155 (1911) and 243 (1921) and Binsidha v. Jagadip Narain Chowdhury, 1 L. P. 24 Cal. 152 (1896), referred to and cited on. That the Defendant was entitled to the benefit of sec. 50 notwithstanding the fact that he was recorded as an occupancy raiyat. If the discontinuous receipts produced show that rent has been paid at the same rate for the years covered thereby, the Court may, by an application of the principle of continuity, infer that there has been no change in the intervening periods. What has to be established is not actual payment of rent but the fact that the tenancy has been held at a certain rate. Kattiyani Datta v. Soonduree Dabee, 2 W. R. X have been exhausted. Pirthi Chand Lal v. Basarat Ali, 1 L. R. 37 Cal. 30 S. C. 13 C. W. N. 1149 (F. B.) (1909), referred to and followed. NARENDRALAL CHOWDHURY v. BINODI BEHARI SADDHU KHAN

P, the proprietor of an estate after sale of an 8 annas share of the same to C, granted a lease of a plot of land to the Defendant. Plaintiff as proprietor of P's remaining eight annas share having sued Defendant for the entire rent, the latter pleaded that he stood discharged in respect of an eight annas share of the rent as he had paid the same to C's representative who was registered as proprietor of an eight annas share of P's representative's share registered as proprietor of the remaining 8 annas. Held—That neither sec. 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act nor secs. 78 and 79 of the Land Registration Act apply where the suit is by an owner. The receipt which under sec. 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is to operate as a discharge for rent received by a person or persons preferred by the owner or owners of the entire estate and not only of a part of the estate. The third person referred to in the concluding portion of sec. 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act means a third person whose name is not registered of all. Seemle.—If secs. 78 and 79 of the Land Registration Act had applied to the case, the right of P and his successors to recover the entire rent under the written lease granted by P to the Defendant would secs 93, 95—Common manager, appointment of, must be of the entire estate and not of a portion—Appointment of common manager in respect of properties some of which are portions of estates or tenures—Removal of common manager—Appointment of successor—Objection, if can be taken to the appointment of a new common manager on the ground that it was made in respect of portion of estate or tenure when such objection not raised to the appointment of the previous common manager. An appointment of a common manager must be to the entire estate or tenure and not to a portion thereof. Where a new common manager was appointed and objection was taken to his appointment on the ground that he could not be appointed to a part of an estate or tenure, and the District Judge held that as the previous common manager had been appointed to the properties in question no objection could be taken to the new common manager being appointed to the same properties. Held—That the District Judge proceeded on a wrong principle, if the original order was illegal in this respect this would not validate the second order. The order of the District Judge, so far as it rejected the application objecting to the appointment of the common manager on the ground that the common manager had not been appointed to the whole estate or tenure, was set aside, and the District Judge was directed to deal with the application according to law. Indu Bhusan Bose v. secs 103B, 104H, 104J—Suit for rent—Plea of tenant that landlord has dispossessed tenant from a portion of the holding and rent should be suspended—Entry in record-of-rights as to area of holding, if conclusive. An entry in the record-of-rights as to rent settled under Part II of Ch X of the Bengal Tenancy Act cannot be challenged otherwise than by a suit under s. 104H and except in so far as is allowed by such suit, the other entries in the record-of-rights cannot also be challenged so as to affect the amount of rent settled and recorded in such entry. These other entries, however, are not conclusive for any other purpose. Where an entry in a record-of-rights prepared under Part II of Ch X of the Bengal Tenancy Act as to the area of a tenant's holding is questioned by the tenant in a suit for rent, for the purpose of showing that the tenant has been dispossessed by the landlord of a portion of the holding and that therefore the rent should be suspended. Held—That the entry as to area in the record-of-

s. 105, settlement or fair and equitable rate in respect of tenures held at a fixed rate of rent. Construction of documents, upon consideration of all the terms of the instruments—Quotation of rates of rent when the entire evidence is before the Court, how far material—Jamadani—It imports fixity of rate of rent in perpetuity. Certain tenures under the direct management of the revenue authorities were in 1856 settled with some tenant-holders who had been in occupation in many instances from before the date of the Permanent Settlement of 1793. In the documents, by which the settlements were made, specified amounts were mentioned as jamakamel, in some cases from the commencement and in some cases after a period of two years. The landlords made the present applications under secs 105 and 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act for settlement of fair and equitable rent in respect of the lands held by their tenants. Held—That the construction of the grants must depend upon the interpretation of all the terms of each instrument, and except in a case of ambiguity, extrinsic evidence would not be admissible. It had nothing to do with the questions whether the tenures were in existence in 1793, whether they had been held at a uniform rate of rent since then, or whether by application of s. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act they were presumed to have been so in existence and held at a uniform rate of rent during the period mentioned. N. E. Railway v. Hastings, [1909] A C 261, Hebbert v. Purchas, 1 R 3 P C 605 (1871), Dhunput v. Gooman, 11 M L A 433 (1867) and Suttosurran v. Mohesh, 12 M L A 263 (1868) and several other cases referred to. Each case must be considered on its own facts, and in order to ascertain the effect of the grant resort must be had to the terms of the grant itself and to the whole circumstances so far as they can be ascertained. Upadishtha v. Divi, 1 R 46 I A 123 s c 21 C W N 129 (1919) and Chidambara v. Veerama, P C 15th May 1922. Reported 27 C W N 217, referred to. The word jamakamel means "the full amount of rent or the highest rent payable." The word being preceded by the word "sahana" (annual) and followed by the word "haishel" (all years to come) the three terms taken together unmistakably pointed to the conclusion that the rent mentioned was the highest rent ever payable, which indicated fixity of rent. The landlord therefore, had precluded himself by his grant from claiming rent at an enhanced rate. No debate on the question of burden of proof arises when the entire evidence on both sides is once before the Court. Seturatham v. Venkatachala T., R 47 I A 76 s c 25 C W N 45 (1919).

ss. 105, 109—Application for settlement of fair rent before Revenue Officer—Withdrawal—Suit to recover rent at enhanced rate, if lies—Jurisdiction of Revenue Officer to grant leave to bring a suit; An application for settlement of fair rent made under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and withdrawn has not the same effect as if the application had never been made. Sec. 109 of the Act therefore operates in such a case as a bar to the maintainability of a subsequent suit in the Civil Court by the landlord for rent at an enhanced rate. Quere—Whether the Revenue Officer has jurisdiction to grant leave to withdraw proceeding before him with liberty to bring a suit in a Court of different jurisdiction. Soroj Kumar Acharji v Umed Ali Howladar, 25 C W N 1022 (1921), referred to. Abeda Khatun v Majubali, 1 L R 48 Cal 157 s c 24 C W N 1020 (1920), Cheodditti v Tulsi Singh, 1 L R 40 Cal 428 s c 17 C W N 167 (1912), Aswini Kumar Aich v Saroda Charan Basu, 24 C L J 79 (1916) and Kamini Sundari v Abdul Habin, 28 C L J 251 (1918), considered. SASI KANTA CHARJA CHOUDHURY v SALJM SHEIKH 987

In a suit under sec. 106, Bengal Tenancy Act, for correction of the entry the landlords alleged that the rent was enhanced and produced quinquennial registers prepared under Reg. 48 of 1793 and the tenants contended that the rent had remained unvaried for over 20 years and filed some road cess returns. Held—That having regard to the provisions of the Cess Act the road cess returns in question were not admissible in evidence at all. To start with there was a presumption in favour of the tenants from an entry under sec. 103 Bengal Tenancy Act. Therefore the onus of proof rested entirely on the landlords to negate the effect of the said presumption. Assuming that the entry in the quinquennial register was admissible in evidence, the said entry by itself was not sufficient to negative the presumption in favour of the tenants. PROMODE CHANDRA ROY CHOUDHURY v BINAYAKIAS ACHARYA CHOUDHURY 948

session from the heirs of the purchaser of the interest of the original tenant. The lower Appellate Court held that to make the holding transferable the tenant would have to prove uniformity of rent since the Permanent Settlement, as the presumption under sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act would not be available to him under sec. 115 in consequence of the framing of the record-of-rights. Held—That sec. 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not exclude evidence of uniform payment of rent for the statutory period in support of an entry of fixity of rent in the record-of-rights, such entry being presumably based on the evidence of such uniform payment. The tenant, if denied liberty to prove this, would be deprived of the presumption under sec. 50, not only "after" the particulars under sec. 102 (b) of the Act have been recorded, but also in respect of the period prior to its publication. Prithichand Lal Choudhury v Basarat Ali, 1 L R 37 Cal 30 s c 13 C W N 1119 (F 73) (1909) *Secretary of State v. CALCUTTA MUNICIPAL ACT (III, B. C., of 1893), ss. 14 (xi), 357, 556—Acquisition of land by Municipality to provide dhamshala for pilgrims to Kalighat Temple—"Public purpose," acquisition, if for, and for carrying out a purpose of the Act—Discretion given by statute to Municipality, if may be questioned in Court. The provision of suitable and decent accommodation for the large numbers of worshippers who at certain seasons crowd into and about the Temple of Kali in a part of the town is, in view of the general questions involved, of public convenience, proper sanitation and the prevention of danger and disease to the worshippers themselves and to the ordinary resident population, a "public purpose" and not the less so because the persons mainly interested would be the worshippers and dignitaries of the Temple. By the construction and maintenance of a dhamshala, the Corporation of Calcutta carries out a purpose of the Act within the meaning of cl. (xi) of sec. 14 of Act III, B. C., of 1893. Sec. 556 of Act III, B. C., of 1893, plainly confers upon the Corporation of Calcutta power to acquire land and buildings which are, in the opinion of the Corporation, necessary for carrying out a purpose of the Act. The exercise by the Corporation of the discretion thus expressly placed with it by secs. 14 and 556 of the Act cannot be questioned in a Civil Court.

of a Municipal requisition.] The Calcutta Municipal Corporation called upon the Plaintiffs to carry out certain improvements in their bustees and, upon their failure to comply with the requisition, instituted successive criminal prosecutions to compel execution of the works. The Corporation also undertook under sec. 409 of the Calcutta Municipal Act to carry out the improvements at the cost of the owner, as some of the tenants of the land having obstructed improvements in their portions, the owner failed to carry out fully the required improvements. It appeared that Plaintiffs had taken proceedings against the tenants under sec. 623 of the Act. Held—That though some of the tenants refused to afford facilities to the Plaintiffs and thus rendered it impracticable for them to carry out completely all the improvements required by the Corporation, the Plaintiffs could have carried out some at least of the improvements. It would be unreasonable to construe sec. 623 (3) in the sense that an owner, who has not complied with the requisition at all, is discharged from liability merely because the occupier of a portion of the land has rendered compliance impracticable only in part. The owner is discharged from liability only to the extent that compliance is rendered impossible by the conduct of the occupier. It cannot be said that if the General Committee of the Corporation decides to take recourse to sec. 409, the owner is forthwith absolved from the liability he has already incurred by reason of his failure to comply with the requisition under sec. 408. If the requisite improvements are carried out by the General Committee under sec. 409 the default on the part of the owner vanishes, but till the work has been completed, the default remains, entire or partial, and the liability of the owner to be prosecuted still continues in operation. Emperor v. Nader Shah, 1 L. R. 29 Bom 35 (1904), distinguished. The tendency of modern decisions is that even if the Court has jurisdiction to restrain criminal proceedings for the recovery of a penalty imposed by a statute for breach of its enactments, it will not interfere as a general rule. The principle deducible from the decisions is that though the extreme position cannot be maintained that there is absolutely no jurisdiction in the Court to restrain proceedings before a Magistrate, the Court will not interfere unless in very special circumstances by way of injunction or declaration of right where the legislature has pointed out a mode of procedure before a Magistrate. A Court of Equity may in a proper case interfere by injunction to restrain an act or proceeding, criminal or quasi-criminal in form, which tends to the impairment of property rights, and proceedings for the enforcement of Municipal ordinances, such as the present one, have been treated as quasi-criminal. There is however, the well-settled rule that it is not the practice of the Court to interfere with corporate bodies, unless

s. 18, jurisdiction of President of the Tribunal to revise Rent Controller's order fixing the standard rent under s. 2 (f) (ii)—President's jurisdiction to revise, if limited to standard rents fixed under s. 15 only—"Fix," meaning of; In respect of certain premises let out "after the first day of November 1918," the Rent Controller, after a consideration of the evidence, determined the standard rent of the premises under sec 2 (f) (ii) of the Rent Act On an application to the President of the Tribunal under sec 18 for revision of the order, he held that revision under sec. 18 could be made only in cases where the Controller fixed the standard rent under sec 15 of the Act and that hence the present order was not open to revision by him. Held:—That the order of the Rent Controller is liable to revision by the President of the Tribunal under sec 18 of the Act. The Act contemplates fixing of the standard rent by the Controller even in cases not coming under sec. 15 in other words, in cases coming under sec 2 (f) (ii). In the absence of any definition in the Act, the word "fix" means "to settle," "to specify" or "to determine," and there is no sufficient reason for limiting the word to the case of settlement of the rent by the Controller, when there is no clear indication in the Act that the word is used in that restricted sense. ASHUTOSH CHATTERJEE v.

the Controller that the subject-matter of the order did not come within the definition of "premises." In a standard rent case the landlord contended that the room in question could not be described as "premises" within the meaning of the Calcutta Rent Act and as such the Controller of Rents had no jurisdiction to fix a standard rent. The Controller fixed a standard rent and on the landlord's application to the President of the Improvement Tribunal for revision of that order under sec 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act the President held that he had no jurisdiction in the matter inasmuch as the Petitioner himself had contended that the room did not come within the definition of "premises" in the Act.
Held:—that under sec 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act the landlord Petitioner was entitled to a decision from the President of the Tribunal as to whether or not the Controller had jurisdiction to fix any standard rent in the case which was brought before him. MESSRS DAMA-

209: s. c I. L. R. 23 All. 152, 5 C. W. N. 52 (1900), and other cases referred to. It is not essential that an adjudication should be covered by one of the specific cases of preliminary decrees mentioned in Or 20 of the Civil Procedure Code in order that it may form the basis of a final decree. Where the son of a previous shebait assumed the office of shebait immediately on his father's death, though he did not become entitled thereto till his uncles died. Held—That this did not make any difference in the liability of the son. If a person, by mistake or otherwise, assumes the character of trustee when it really does not belong to him and so becomes a trustee de son tort, he may be called to account by the cestui que trust for the moneys he received under colour of the trust, such a person cannot be held to pay for his own benefit that he had no right to act as a trustee. Lyell v. Kennedy, 14 A. C. 437 (1889) and other cases referred to. Held, further—That in order to obtain an account on the footing of wilful default against a trustee, the cestui que trust must allege and prove at least one instance of wilful default. He must consequently prove that there is some part of the trust funds which should have been received but was not. When the cestui que trust has charged wilful default in his pleadings, either originally or as amended, but has not obtained a judgment on that footing the Court at any stage of the proceedings order an account to be taken on that footing, if evidence of wilful default is adduced. Noyes v. sec. 10, Court if bound to stay rent suit claiming cesses, pending the decision of appeal in which the question of cesses for previous period is in issue. Two suits involving claims for certain cesses against the Petitioners were decided against them and were pending in appeal, when a rent suit was brought against the Petitioners. They thereupon applied for stay of the suit under sec. 10, C. P. C., inasmuch as it concerned cesses alleged to be due for a subsequent period. Held—That though for this purpose suits include appeals, sec. 10 did not apply to the present case. It was a suit for a different debt altogether and for a debt which was not in existence when the last of the previous suits was brought. Under the new Code the section does not apply unless the previous suit is before a Court which is competent to grant the relief claimed in the subsequent suit. Prassanna Kumar Chatterjee, 5 C. W. —Power of execution Court to enlarge or alter the decree by consent of parties—Sec. 47, if bars a Defendant in a fresh suit from setting up a defence which could have been made a ground of objection under the section—The section, if applies when the fresh suit is based on a different cause of action—Sec. 11, res judicata, the principle, if applies to a new suit when one of the parties to the suit was not a party to the compromise in the execution proceeding. Certain persons having sued for recovery of four pakhis of land, got a decree for three pakhis of land measured according to a certain standard rod. During execution proceedings before the Commissioner by consent of the parties, excepting one who was absent, the decree-holders were given possession of three pakhis of land measured according to a different standard rod, the result being that they got 3½ pakhis of land measured according to the standard in the decree. They were subsequently dispossessed by the judgment-debtors and brought a suit for recovery of the 3½ pakhis of land. Held—That sec. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code had no application as the suit was based upon a different cause of action. That it was competent to the Defendants to set up a defence based upon

That as one of the Defendants was not a party to the agreement in the execution proceeding, and the length of the measuring rod was not in issue in the previous case before a Court of justice and there was no adjudication on that point, the elements constituting res judicata were wanting and hence "the principle underlying sec. 11, C. P. C., was not applicable to these proceedings. The executing Court is not competent to enlarge, extend or modify the decree, even by consent of parties subsequent to the decree, unless it is in adjustment of the decree, and the only adjustment of decrees of which the execution Court can take cognizance is the adjustment contemplated by Or 21, r 2, C. A suit was thereupon instituted by the judgment-debtor for a declaration that the rent decree had been satisfied and for a perpetual injunction restraining the decree-holder from executing the decree and also for a temporary injunction. The Court below held that such a suit was not maintainable but allowed stay of execution of the decree on taking security from the judgment-debtor under Or 21, r 29 of the C. P. C. Held—That the provisions of Or 21, r 29 of the C. P. C., are inapplicable to a case like the present. Azizan v. Matuk Lal Sahu, I. L. R. 21 Cal. 437 (1893) and Dina Bandhu Nandi v. C., is very wide and if the rule stood alone, the Court would have the power to stay execution of the decree, "as provided in the Rule. But in view of the sec 47 and Or. 21, r 2 (3) of the Code, the Court had no such power, and the order of the lower Court staying execution of the decree was set aside. MAJOR A Y REILY v. Held, also—That the purchase by the mortgagee was not void but voidable, and the Defendant who in the lower Courts treated the sale as absolutely void and did not place before the Courts material for the exercise of their discretion under Or 21, r 72, cl (3), could not in second appeal ask their written statement to be treated as an application under Or 21, r. 72. to the parties to adduce additional evidence if they choose to do so. When in a dispute between the cultivating tenant and an inamdar or pattadar, the question arises whether the latter is entitled to both the melavaram and the kudiwaram or whether the former have occupancy right (kudiwaram) in the land, the issue must be dealt with in each case upon its own facts with special regard to the evidence and the circumstances therein. There is no suggestion in Suryanarayana v. Pothanna, L. R. 45 I. A 209 s c 23 C. W. N. 273 (1918) and in Seturatnam Aiyar v. Venkatachela Goundan, L. R. 47 I. A 76 s c I. L. R. 43 Mad 567; 25 C. W. N. 485 (1919) of an initial presumption in favour of the inamdar or pattadar on the one side or of the ryot on the other, and the inference drawn by the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Muthu Goundan v. Perumal Iyer, I. L. R. 44 Mad 588 (1921) in favour of such a presumption is not correct. When the entire evidence on both sides is once before the Court, the debate as to onus is purely academical. The use of the term "inam" in a grant by a zamindar or polygar gives no indication of the intention of the donor to convey the kudiwaram to the grantee, even if he had the right to bestow it. Prima facie, a zamindar or polygar is a rent-receiver and his right to direct possession of the lands is confined to his private lands and the "old waste land." It does not extend to raiyati land. The question whether Act I of 1908 (Mad.) applies to rights in litigation at the time of the passing of the Act did not require decision in the case as the tenants were found to have acquired occupancy rights by prescription long before the statute came into force. *SRI CHIDAMBARA SIVAPRAKASA PANDARA SANNADITHAL v. In a suit for rent under Madras Act I of 1908, sec 77 the Defendants being admittedly occupancy riyats having permanency of tenure and other rights attaching to that position. Held—That although past practice may have its weight as one of the elements which are considered in fixing under the Act what are the fair and equitable conditions of a particular puttah, it cannot derogate from the status privileges and obligations of the parties under the statute, and the riyats cannot validly maintain that payments made during the course of 20 years should form the lines and limits of their obligations for all time. Parthasarathy Appa Row v. Cheendra Venkata Narasayya, I. R. 37 I. A 110 s c 14 C. W. N. 938 (1910), referred to. As muchuksas decreed for any revenue year remain in force until the beginning of the the year for which fresh ones are exchanged or decreed, the decision in respect of one Fasli year cannot operate as res judicata in regard to a dispute as to the rent payable in a subsequent Fasli year. But it stands to reason and is in accordance with secs 27 and 28 of the Act that the old rent decreed shall continue until reduced or enhanced by special applications under the statute. Even in regard to penal provisions with a strict construction, it is a sound general principle that no construction is open to a Court of Law which is in violation of what that Court considers to be the true meaning of the provisions. *RADHA KRISHNA AIYAR v. Further, before it could be held that the decision involved a question of wide public importance, there should be some evidence that the rights of zemindars and putnidars in Bengal in respect of similar lands are, generally speaking, Defendant upon the same facts as appeared in the present suits and that the terms of the leases regulating such rights were similar to the terms of the pattas in these suits. BIHUPENDRA NARAYAN SINGH v. But apart from that action it is inherent in the general jurisdiction of the Court to act rightly and fairly, according to the circumstances, towards all parties involved, and one of the first and highest duties of all Courts is to take care that the act of the Court does no injury to any of the suitors, and when the expression "the act of the Court" is used, it does not mean merely the act of the primary Court or of any intermediate Court of Appeal, but the act of the Court as a whole from the lowest Court which entertains jurisdiction over the matter up to the highest Court which finally disposes of the case. Rogers v. The Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris, L. R. 3 P. C. 465 at p. 475 (1871), referred to. An execution sale of certain properties was set aside, but before that event the purchase money was distributed amongst creditors of the judgment-debtor who had attached the property and the auction-purchaser had also discharged two mortgage bonds to which according to the sale certificate granted to the purchaser the property was subject. Held—That it would be inequitable and contrary to justice that the judgment debtor should be restored to the property without making good to the auction-purchaser the moneys which had been applied for his benefit to satisfy the attaching creditors but the payment to the mortgagee which was an optional payment, made without any order of the Court, stood on a different footing and the making good of this payment could not be made a condition of restoration to the judgment-debtor. Semble—The payment to the mortgagee entitled the auction-purchaser to stand in the shoes of the mortgagee as holder of the mortgage bonds. JAI BARHAM v. his predecessor-in-office, legacy of. In decreeing a suit by a judgment, dated 20th February 1918, the Judge made the decree dependent upon Plaintiffs paying within one month from the date of the order a further court-fee of Rs. 65, and signed the decree on the 26th February 1918. The Plaintiffs did not carry out the order within the time limited by the order. On an application dated 5th July 1920, after the Judge who passed the decree had been transferred, his successor permitted the Plaintiffs to deposit the further court-fee of Rs. 65 as mentioned in the aforesaid judgment and decree. Held—That assuming, though not deciding that no appeal lay, the circumstances of the case demanded that the appeal should be treated as a petition under sec. 115 of the C. P. Code, the order made being without jurisdiction. That the decree which was drawn up on the 26th February 1918 was in itself a final decree and, the default provisions mentioned in the judgment of the 20th February 1918 having been incorporated in it, it was a self-contained decree. Therefore, subject to such rights of amendment as for instance the rectification of a clerical error and so forth, it could not be modified by the Court which passed the decree. NAWAB KHAFEH HABIBULLA v. (Act XIV of 1882), s. 278 order under, bar to suit after, it has become final, even though wrong. Certain properties were mortgaged to L. by a deed of 10th January 1882. On 21st March 1885 the properties were again mortgaged to L. by a deed which expressly provided that the mortgage of 10th January 1882 should continue. L. sued on both mortgages and got a decree under sec. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act for sale of the mortgaged properties on 12th January 1886 and had the properties attached on 20th May 1886. Meanwhile one K. had obtained a money decree against the mortgagor on 2nd April 1884 and having attached the properties on 27th June 1884 in execution thereof had the properties sold and purchased them on 16th August 1884. On 8th September 1886, K. objected to the attachment by L. under sec. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code. On 14th September 1886, the Court passed order exempting the properties purchased by K. from L's attachment. L. did not appeal against the order. On 10th January 1912 the Plaintiffs, who meanwhile had purchased L's decree executed it and purposed to purchase the properties in execution thereof in proceedings to which K. or his representatives were not parties, sued to recover from the latter possession of the properties on the strength of such purchase. Held—That it was unnecessary to enquire whether the order of 14th September 1886 was right or wrong. s. 294—Leave to bid refused to decree-holder—Purchase by decree-holder in benami of another, if a nullity—Sale voidable—Questions which arise upon proceeding to set aside sale—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 12.] A purchase by a decree-holder who has not obtained permission is not void nor a nullity, but is only to be avoided on the application of the judgment-debtor or some other person interested. The fact that the decree-holder had actually applied for permission and had been refused would make no difference. The question upon an application to set aside such purchase is not whether the decree-holder had been contumacious, but whether the property had been really realised to the best advantage. If it had not, the Court would set the sale aside; if it had, then it did not matter that the decree-holder bought without permission or that he had applied and been refused. The sale being voidable only and not void, Art 12 of the Limitation Act applies and the suit must be brought within one year. RAI RADHA KRISHNA v. BISHESHAR SAHAY

The sale was confirmed and the sale-certificate granted on the 11th of December 1908. Being unable to obtain possession, the Plaintiff instituted the present suit, on the 16th April 1917, against several persons, among others, the mortgagees who had received the purchase-money, for recovery of possession and in the alternative, for recovery of the purchase-money. The claim for possession being negatived the question arose whether the Plaintiff was competent to maintain the suit for the recovery of the purchase-money or whether the only remedy left to him was an application under Or. 21, r. 93 read with r. 91 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. Held—That under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, the Plaintiff, on the 11th of December 1908, acquired a right to obtain a refund of the purchase-money either by application or by suit within the period prescribed by law in one contingency, namely, if it should be discovered that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest at all in the property sold, and that this right could not be deemed to have been extinguished by the promulgation of the Code of 1908 which came into operation on the first day of January 1909; and that accordingly the Plaintiff was competent to (Act V of 1908), Or. 1, r. 3—Joinder of parties—Parties, if can be joined as Defendants in one suit when cause of action against one of them was outside jurisdiction.] Where X had distinct and separate causes of action against A and B and the cause of action against A arose within, and that against B outside the jurisdiction of the Court, and X brought a suit against A and B claiming relief against both. Held—That the joinder of A and B as Defendants in one suit in the circumstances stated is not contemplated by Or. 1, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code and that the cause of action against B having arisen outside jurisdiction, the Court was not competent to try the suit as against him on the ground that it was competent to try the suit as against A. Per Woodroffe, J.—Or. 1, r. 3 is a provision which relates to joinder of parties, and it assumes the existence of a suit in a proper forum, the Court having jurisdiction to try the suit. If the Court has such jurisdiction, then Or. 1, r. 3 may come into play. Per Richardson, J.—Rules defining the jurisdiction of the Court must be distinguished from rules regulating the procedure of the Court in respect of causes of action within jurisdiction. Argument from convenience might be of assistance if the relevant statutory provision is of doubtful or ambiguous import but not where no such doubt or ambiguity exists. THE BENGAL & NORTH-WESTERN RY CO. After this suit was decreed, Plaintiffs instituted another suit for recovery of mesne profits for the period subsequent to the date of delivery of symbolical possession. Held—That the claim for mesne profits for the period subsequent to the delivery of symbolical possession up to the institution of the previous suit was not barred by Or. 2 r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. The test to be applied was whether the claim in the subsequent suit was based on the cause of action which was the foundation of the claim in the previous suit. The claims for mesne profits prior and subsequent to the delivery of possession could not be deemed to be based on an identical cause of action, because the delivery of symbolical possession was the line of demarcation between possession antecedent and possession subsequent, whereby the adverse possession of the judgment-debtor was interrupted, this being the case, even where the decree-holder was entitled to actual possession. Thakur Sri Sri Radhakrishna Chanderji v. Or. 2, r. 2—Mortgage, stipulation in mortgage that on failure to pay interest, mortgagee may sue for both principal and interest—Suit to realise interest only by sale of property, decreed personally—Suit for principal, if lies—Cause of action, splitting up. Where a mortgage provides for an independent obligation to pay the principal and the interest, suit to obtain a personal judgment in respect of the interest alone will not, under Or. 2, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code bar a subsequent suit for the payment of the principal, as in such a case the cause of action would be distinct. But where under the terms of the mortgage, non-payment of the interest causes the principal money also to become due, the same cause of action, namely, non-payment of the interest, gives rise to two forms of relief, viz., for principal and interest, which cannot be split up under the Code. Where therefore, according to a stipulation in the mortgage, both principal and interest became payable upon default by the mortgagor to pay interest, and the mortgagee sued to realise the interest alone by sale of the mortgaged property. Held—That though in that suit only a personal decree was passed in the mortgagee's favour, a second suit to realise the principal money by sale of the mortgaged property was barred by Or. 2, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code. Muhammad Hafiz v. tiffs "to have a two-fold declaration, namely, first, that their title to the mortgaged properties had not been affected by the execution proceedings and, secondly, that a supplemental personal decree subsequently passed could not have been validly made against them. Held—That the suit was not one to set aside a decree or to obtain a declaratory decree with consequential relief under sec. 7 cl. 4, sub-cl. (c) of the Court Fees Act, but was one for possession under cl. 5, sub-cl. (a); the declaration prayed for that a personal decree could not have been made against them would be consequential on the success of their substantial claim in the suit, as the personal decree could be made only if there had been a valid and operative sale which had led to a partial satisfaction of the amount due under the mortgage-decree. Held further—That when a plaint is insufficiently stamped, the Court is bound to give the Plaintiff time to make good the deficiency. The provisions of Or. 7, r. 11, C P C are mandatory and can be brought into operation at any stage of the suit. The fact that the objection is heard at a time subsequent to the registration of the suit is immaterial. RADHA KANTO SAHA v. DEBENDRA NARAIN SAHA . . . 566

Or. 12, r. 6—Judgment on admission, if the Plaintiff can have judgment when the Defendant pleads that the action is premature—Object of Or. 12, r. 6—Judgment if can be claimed as of right. A suit was instituted by the Plaintiff Company against Saleji & Co. as principal and against Galstaun as surety. The Defendant Galstaun in his written statement took the plea that the conduct of the Plaintiff had been such as to absolve him from liability under the guarantee and that the suit was premature. Subsequently Galstaun, in course of his deposition before the Registrar in Insolvency in a certain proceeding, in answer to the question "Up to now you have had nothing to pay as guarantor?" said, "But I shall have to pay." Thereupon an application was made for judgment on admission. Mr. Justice Greaves allowed the application. On appeal it was held that the statement in the deposition of Galstaun could not be construed to imply that he had abandoned his defences in their entirety and that judgment on admission should not have been pronounced. In order to entitle the Plaintiff to have judgment on admission there must be a clear admission that the money is due and recoverable in the action in which the admission is made. Koramall v. Between the dates of the two decrees R. granted a lease of a term of years of the right of mining for mica and otherwise exploiting the jungle to M. who subsequently to the Appellate decree surrendered his lease. In pursuance of that decree, to which M. was no party, mesne profits were assessed and finally decreed against R., and no appeal was preferred against that decree. Meanwhile Plaintiff had applied under Or. XXII, r. 10 of the Civil Procedure Code to make M. a party in the proceedings so as to have the mesne profits ascertained in his presence and thereby avoid future objections by M. he averred belonged to the superior landlord, the zemindar. The application was refused by the trial Court but granted on appeal by the High Court long after the decree passed against R. Held, reversing the High Court—That the liability, if any, of M. to pay damages for removal of the mica was not a liability which devolved to him from R., they both being liable, if liable at all, as trespassers. That there being no assignment, creation or devolution of any interest within the meaning of Or. XXII, r. 10, C. P. C., that rule did not apply. That the questions which arose between Plaintiff and M. could not be raised in execution proceedings under sec. 47 of the Code. In an appeal from a final decree in a suit for partition one of the Respondents, whose share in the property had been sold and which share had been subsequently re-acquired by his heirs, having died, the Appellant applied for substitution of his heirs out of time. Held—That on the death of the said Respondent, his interest was not in his heirs, but having devolved on a third party, who was made a party before the appeal came on for hearing, Or. 22, r. 10 of the Civil Procedure Code applied. The three months' limitation does not apply to a case of assignment or devolution of interest pending the suit. An application under Or. 22, r. 10 can be made in the Appellate Court, even though the devolution of interest occurred when the case was pending in the trial Court. When, in a partition suit, all the heirs of certain deceased Defendants were made parties to the appeal and all persons interested in the property were before the Court though the deaths occurred and the heirs of the deceased Defendants were not substituted while the suit was pending in the Court below. Held—That inasmuch as it appeared that the Plaintiff was not aware of the deaths of the Defendants in the Original Court, the suit should not be dismissed at that stage on the ground that the heirs were not substituted in the original Court. *RAJANI KANTA ROY v. Matters in difference in a suit were by a consent order, referred to two arbitrators under the provisions of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code. The order provided, inter alia, that the arbitrators should make their award within six months from the date on which an office-copy of the said order should be served on them or within such further time as they might allow themselves by endorsement on the said office-copy. The arbitrators, from time to time, enlarged the time for making their award under the said order. After a considerable number of sittings had been held extending over a period of two years the Plaintiff applied that the reference should be recalled or superseded and the suit proceeded with. Held, re-alling the reference—That the provision in cl 3 of Sch II of the Civil Procedure Code, viz., "the Court shall . . . fix such time as it thinks reasonable for the making of the award," is mandatory, an order which allows the arbitrators to enlarge the time, in the manner aforesaid for making their award is not a compliance with it, and, if by such an order an unlimited authority to extend the time was meant to be given to the arbitrators, it was bad and of no effect. Co-Operative Hindusthan Bank v Bhola Nath Borooah, 19 C W N 165 (1914) dissented from. Raja Har Narain Singh v Chaudhrai Bhagwant Kuar, 1 L R 13 All 300 (P. COMMISSIONER PLEADER, taking from a party a mortgage bond in discharge of an untaxed bill of fees, etc.—Bond, if legal and can be sued upon—Duties of a Commissioner—Liability of party at whose instance appointment made to indemnify Commissioner.) A pleader Commissioner took a mortgage bond from a party, at whose instance he had been appointed, by which the said party promised to pay a certain sum as his fees, etc., and the Commissioner sued upon that bond. Held —That the taking of the mortgage bond by the Commissioner was a breach of duty towards the parties and to the Court and it could not be sued upon as being an illegal contract. The duties of a Commissioner are inconsistent with approaching an individual party and getting him to pay sums of money in discharge of an untaxed bill of costs. It is an improper advantage obtained by an officer of Court by abuse of his position as such officer. Gopalaratanamayyar v. Bupalanarasimma Nayadu , 1 L R 4 Mad 399 (1882), distinguished. There should be no doubt cast on the broad rule that a Commissioner appointed by a Court must keep himself clear of any ambiguous conduct towards any party in the matter of his fees. The work done by the Commissioner is not work done for the party but work done for the Court. His right to sue the party at whose instance he was appointed does not arise out of a contract of employment with that party, but upon a different principle, namely that where one party does work or incurs an obligation at the instance of another, there is, in certain circumstances, an implied provision of indemnity. PPAMATHA NATH SEN GUPTA v. to generation. The word miras means inheritance or heritability. The right to plant and grow trees and erect buildings coupled with the acquisition of the miras right should point to one conclusion only, namely, that the lease was intended to be permanent and heritable. By "selling building" it is ordinarily understood selling building with the land on which it would be standing and not selling building materials, and the stipulation that a fourth of the price on such sale should be paid to the landlord is not inconsistent with the permanent nature of the tenancy. The Plaintiff stamped his memorandum of appeal against this decision with the fixed fee provided by Art. 17 (iii) of Sch. II of the Court Fees Act. Held—That in determining the amount of court-fee payable, the Court is not to consider whether the suit is properly framed, whether the Plaintiff is entitled to the declaration asked for or what would be the effect if the Plaintiff succeeds in obtaining a declaration as prayed for. The Court has only to see whether it is a memorandum of appeal in a suit to obtain a declaratory decree where no consequential relief is prayed, and if it is such a suit, the fixed fee of Rs. 20 is sufficient under the provisions of Sch. - EJECTMENT, suit for, against transferee of occupancy holding without landlord's permission—Estoppel; In a suit by proprietors of land to eject one D who came upon the land as a tenant, the High Court found that the latter, being a rayat, could not be ejected without notice to quit. Pending an appeal by the proprietors from the decree of the High Court to the Privy Council, the tenant died and his administrator sold the lands to M and C, whereupon the proprietors being notified of the sale by petition stated that though they did not admit the validity of the sale to M and C, they were advised that they should be added as Respondents, and on their prayer M and C were so added. In a suit by the proprietors to eject M and C, on the ground that the lands being those of a non-transferable occupancy holding M and C had acquired no title by their purchase and were trespassers, the Courts in India held that the proprietors were estopped by their presentation of the petition referred to above and the statements therein made from denying that M and C had acquired title to the lands as tenants. Held—That there was no estoppel, the position of the proprietors then and afterwards having all along been that M and C were trespassers without any title to the possession of, or interest in, the lands. DAMODAR NARAYAN CHOWDHURY v. Held—That there was nothing in the scheme of election which ordained that the right to vote was dependent on the entry of the names of voters in the voters' list, nor did it provide or follow, in the absence of an express direction to that effect, that those not so entered could not vote. There was therefore no infringement of any mandatory rule. Shyam Chand Basak v Chairman, Dacca Municipality, I L R 47 Cal 524, 24 C W N 189, 30 C L J 270 (1919), referred to. Held also—That the English common law of parliamentary elections should not be applied to regulate the election of temple trustees in this country though the principles which underlie that law may be involved if they appear to the Court to be in conformity with the rules of justice, equity and good conscience. RAGHUNATH SARMA v JIBAN CHANDRA SARMA 312

nesses. No attesting witness was examined and the suit was dismissed on the ground that there was no reliable evidence to show that the bond was executed in the presence of two attesting witnesses. Held, per Richardson, J.—That an admission of execution is sufficient proof as against the party making the admission and dispenses with the necessity for calling an attesting witness or giving any other evidence. Nibaran v Ram, 22 C. W. N. 444 (1917) and Satish v Jogendra, 1 L. R. 44 Cal 345, s. c. 20 C. W. N. 1044 (1916), followed. Jogendra v Nital, 7 C. W. N. 354 (1903), referred to. But the case is different when the admission of the signature is coupled with an express denial that the document was signed in the presence of the attesting witnesses. The policy of the law makes the ceremony of attestation essential to the validity of a mortgage instrument, and no admission of execution is effective under sec. 70 of the Evidence Act unless it amounts to an acknowledgment of the formal validity of the instrument. What the Defendant said in the present case amounted not so much to an admission of execution as a denial of execution. "Execution" of a document means something more than the mere signing by the party. It must certainly include delivery, and it also includes signing in the presence of witnesses where witnesses are necessary. Shama Patter v Abdul Kadir, 1 L. R. 39 I. A. 218 s. c. 1 L. R. 35 Mad 607, 16 C. W. N. 1009 (1912), referred to. Per Suhrawardy, J.—Sec. 70 of the Evidence Act qualifies sec. 68 of the Act but does not affect or control sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, which is a later enactment. Hence it follows that whatever may be the meaning, technical or ordinary, of the term "execution," the word is used in sec. 70 of the Evidence Act in the sense of due execution or execution in the way in which a particular document is required to be executed and admission of execution means execution in the manner in which a document is required by law to be executed. ARJUN CHANDRA BHADRA v KAILAS CHANDRA DAS 263

sec. 92—Admissibility of evidence of conduct to prove contract not intended to be acted upon—[impossibility of performance.] The Plaintiff brought a suit for the recovery of damages on account of the Defendant's failure to deliver certain papers under the terms of a patni kabulyat. The defence was that during 35 years since the execution of the kabulyat the patnidar never submitted any paper nor did the zemindar demand the same and that the stipulation was never intended to be acted upon. Semble:—That evidence of the conduct of the parties was admissible to prove that the stipulation was never intended to be acted upon, i.e., from the very beginning. Preonath Shaha v Madhu Sudan Bhuiya, 1 L. s. 52, oral evidence to show that the consideration for a conveyance was more than the sum recited in the deed, admissibility of—A party, if competent to prove that he had committed a fraud—A party, if can be permitted to establish a case which is contrary to his pleadings. In a mortgage suit the Plaintiff set up a conveyance, the consideration for which was stated in the plaint to be Rs. 3,600. The Defendants alleged that the sale had been effected not for Rs. 3,000 but for Rs. 2,000, and the conveyance, when produced, showed that the consideration was Rs. 2,000. The Plaintiffs thereupon asked for leave to amend the plaint, which being refused, they adduced oral evidence to show that although the conveyance recited the consideration as Rs. 2,000, the actual consideration was Rs. 3,000. Held—That while want or failure of diligence in kind of the consideration may be proved, evidence to vary the amount of consideration in a registered sale-deed is inadmissible. If such a course were permissible the protection afforded by sec. 92 of the Evidence Act would be completely nullified. Adityam Iyer v Rama Krishna Iyer, 1 L. That the Plaintiff could not be permitted to contradict the statement in the conveyance, as thereby he would be permitted to prove that he had violated the law and committed a fraud upon the revenues of the country. A party cannot come into Court with fraud on his lips and ask for a relief, as to such the Courts of justice are not open. Gregory v Haworth, 25 California 622 at p. 657, referred to. Held further—That the parties should not be permitted to depart from their deeds and to establish a case which is contrary to their pleadings. A recovery if had must be secundum allegata and must be grounded upon facts which are averred in the complaint and not upon those which are denied. The determination in a case should be founded upon a case either to be found in the pleadings or involved in and consistent with the case thereby made. Eastern Chandra Singh v Shama Churn

Held—that in view of the fact that the Plaintiff's case came (in the absence of documentary evidence) to rest entirely on the recollection of persons who were present at the marriage, the evidence of the agreement had to be clear and convincing in order to establish her claim against her husband's estate. That though it appeared that the social standing of the Plaintiff's family was much below that of her husband's in whose family the customary dower of females was proved to be a lakh of rupees, as the marriage appeared to be a love match, there was no inherent improbability in the husband, infatuated as he seemed to be with her, agreeing to such a large dower if the Plaintiff's relations insisted. But in the absence of evidence of such insistence and having regard also to the generally unsatisfactory character of the evidence adduced by the Plaintiff, the Judicial Committee advised the High Court in dismissing the suit though the same had been decreed in the Original Court. MUSAMMAT HAFIZAN BIBI v. That the fact that the deposits became repayable to the officer when he left the service did not remove them from the category of compulsory deposits. Per Richardson, J.—A compulsory deposit is a deposit which goes into the fund as a compulsory deposit and is at that date received and classified as such, and there is no ground for a different classification of such deposits or a different description being applied to them after the officer's death or retirement. As long as the deposits subsist in the fund, so long, at any rate, both as matter of legal construction and in the common and ordinary way of speaking, they are properly and correctly described as compulsory deposits. In this respect no distinction exists between the deposits made by the depositor himself on the one hand and the contributions in respect of those deposits and the interest or increment accrued on them on the other. *Veerchand v. antecedent debt, what is—Mortgage illegally effected, if may support subsequent sale as for "antecedent debt"—"Pious obligation" to pay, if arises in father's life-time. The antecedent debt for which in the absence of justifying necessity a Mitakshara Hindu can mortgage ancestral property without the consent, express or implied, of his descendants who are his co-partners in the property must be quite distinct from the debt incurred in the mortgage in fact as well as in time. It must, as laid down in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh, 1 L. R. 44 I. A. 126 s. c. 21 C. W. N. 698 (1917), be incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate. Jogi Das v. Ganga Ram, 21 C. W. N. 957 (P. C.) (1917), referred to. A mortgage of ancestral property effected by the ancestor without necessity and without such consent and not for an antecedent debt in the above sense cannot, on the principle of "antecedent debt," form the consideration for a sale of such property subsequent to the mortgage. The doctrine of "pious obligation" cannot be invoked in the lifetime of the father of the person sought to be charged. CHIT RAM v. RAM SINGH

That no heritable shebaitship was established by the Will, U having been appointed shebait during his lifetime, and that after his death, there being no express provision made for the worship, the necessary duties would have to be performed by the persons properly appointed for that purpose. That the gift in question was in effect a private trust to which the provisions of sec 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not apply and consequently a scheme for its administration was inappropriate. A direction given in an administration a suit has the effect of an order binding all parties and determines the construction of the Will to which it gives effect so that after the lapse of time necessary for appeal it becomes final and conclusive. *Pearath v. HINDU LAW—contd.

if effects severance in interest—Sale by cosnarer, if may be attacked by other co-snarers on the ground of want of consideration; It is settled law that in the case of a joint Hindu family subject to the law of the Mitakshara, a severance of estate is effected by an unequivocal declaration on the part of one of the joint holders of his intention to hold his share separately,
 even though no actual division takes place.
 Where N a member of such a family, claimed his half-share of the ancestral property, and after discussion all the joint holders signed an agreement appointing one G to partition the property agreeing to accept whatever partition he might make.
Held—That this claim and agreement were sufficient to effect a severance in interest and to prevent the share of N from passing by survivorship. That the subsequent division of the property between the co-owners which was accepted by all parties and was not alleged to be unfair could not be disturbed, and a sale by N of his share to the Plaintiff could not be set aside in a private or family debutter which may convert the debutter into secular property must be distinguished from acts which may amount to nothing more than a breach of trust. It is not the shebait only who by their dealings can give the property a different turn. The persons who by their consent can convert the debutter property into secular property are the members of the whole family, male and female, interested in the worship of which the shebait is merely managers. It is not dealings with the property which change the original debutter character, but it is the consent of the entire family interested in the sheba, though dealings subsequent to such con-of consent. Where property was dedicated to a particular debata, and the surplus of the profits thereof was also directed to be invested in the name of or employed in ac-mode of. A widow of a separated Mitakshara Hindu sold property belonging to her husband's estate in her possession as limited owner for Rs 5,300 in order to pay off Rs 1,588-2-2 due on two mortgages executed by her husband. The balance of Rs 711-13-10 was appropriated by the widow to reimburse herself for expenses previously incurred at the marriage of a daughter of the husband's brother. Held— That the sale was not invalid because a portion of the purchase money (Rs 711-13-10) was spent on a purpose which did not constitute a legal necessity, as the purchasers were not bound to see how the widow applied the purchase money. That the fact that the purchaser was able to realise a much larger sum by selling the property bit by bit to cultivating raiwats did not establish that the sale by the widow was necessarily improvident, as it was not responsible to suggest that the widow should have gone about endeavouring to find persons who would purchase the property in small quantities. That though the purchase by the widow's vendees was speculative the sale was a genuine and not a sham sale. The price at a private sale of a considerable extent of land purchased in lump would depend not so much on the valuation of its component parts, calculated on a regular scale as on the need of the vendor for money and the competition for lands in that locality at the time of the sale. MEHAI DATAVOI

HINDU LAW—contd.

the dedication or alienation of a small fraction of the property by a Hindu female for the continuous benefit of the soul of the deceased owner. The Hindu system recognises two sets of religious acts. One is in connection with the actual obsequies of the deceased and the periodical performance of obsequial rites prescribed in the Hindu religious law, which are considered as essential for the salvation of the soul of the deceased. The other relates to acts which, although not essential or obligatory, are still pious observances which conduce to the bliss of the deceased's soul. With reference to the first class of acts, the powers of the Hindu female who holds the property are wider than in respect of the acts which are simply pious and, if performed, are meritorious so far as they conduce to the spiritual benefit of the deceased. In one case, if the income of the property or the property itself, is not sufficient to cover the expenses, she is entitled to sell the whole of it. In the other case, she can alienate a small portion of the property for the pious or charitable purpose she may have in view. KUNWAR SARDAR SINGH v. KUNJ BEHARI LAL 653

Mitakshara—Madras Province—Adult members of joint family incurring liability in connection with business not joint family business—Joint family property belonging to them, if bound—Minor member's liability. In the Madras Presidency, members of a joint Hindu family cannot escape from liability to perform contracts entered into by them on the ground that their contracts were not such as would bind the joint family and that they had no property other than that which was the property of the joint family. Decrees made against such members upon such contracts can be executed against their interests in the joint family property. A contract purporting to have been executed by an adult member of a joint Hindu family as the guardian of a minor member does not bind the minor or his interest in the joint family property, when the business for the purpose of which the contract was entered into was not a business of the joint family. P. Conversion to Hinduism, ancient, how far abrogates non-Hindu tribal customs—Survival of such custom, onus of proof as to—Custom of non-adoption—Primogeniture, custom of, prevalence of, if indicative of non-adoption of Hindu social usages and law. In regard to ancient conversions to Hinduism of non-Hindu Indian tribes, the Judicial Committee have admitted the possibility that they might carry with them abrogation of former customs, though some such custom may continue as survivals along with the general Hindu law by which they may come to be governed. On the evidence, the Judicial Committee agreed with the conclusions of the High Court in this case, that the clan in question, even supposing its origin to be not Hindu, had adopted in general not only Hindu religion and Hindu social usages, but also the Hindu law regulating the succession of landed property, and this though there were still some relics of non-Hinduism. The Judicial Committee also affirmed the finding of the High Court that a custom of non-adoption did not survive the general adoption of Hindu religion, social usages and law which took place about a hundred years ago. The custom of primogeniture is usually found to exist where the estate belongs to a King or independent Chief or even a semi-independent Chief of sufficient importance. The custom in such a case affords no indicia whereby to determine that a family does not follow Hindu law as a whole, merely because in Hindu law an estate only becomes impartible by custom and that custom has in each case to be proved. SAHDEO NARAIN DEO v. KUSUM KUMARI 901

One member mortgaging joint family property on representation of his competence, if can afterwards invoke the title of another member in order to defeat the mortgagee or his representatives—Estoppel—Share of another member subsequently inherited by said mortgagor if bound by the mortgage—Burden of proof as to knowledge of true facts, whether on mortgagor or mortgagee—Assignee with notice from person without notice, position of. Two members of a joint Hindu family, for family necessities, mortgaged some of the joint family properties, representing that they were entitled to deal with the whole interest. One of them inherited the shares of the other members, and after the properties were sold in execution of the mortgage decree, he brought a suit for the recovery of the shares of the member who had not joined in the mortgage. Held—That having regard to the representation made in that mortgage by the Plaintiff, he must be bound by the estoppel created by the statement and it was not open to him to assert that the share of the member who had not joined in the mortgage was not bound by the mortgage. Ranga Rau v. Bhavayanni, I L R 17 Mad. 473 (1894), distinguished. That in view of the representation as to the competence of the mortgagor to deal with the share of a member who was not joining in the mortgage, the burden shifted on the mortgagor and those claiming under him to show the mortgagee's knowledge of the true facts. If the original mortgagee did not know, the mere fact that the person claiming through him may have known, does not prevent the latter getting a good title to the properties and relying on the estoppel which the original mortgagee could have set up against any claim by the Plaintiff in any

Succession—Disqualification of heir—Onus—Leprosy, when disqualifies. The presumption of Hindu law is against disqualification, and the burden of proof of disqualification lies on a person who seeks to exclude another who would be an heir, should no cause of exclusion be established, and where it is contended that a person is excluded from inheritance by reason of disease, the strictest proof of the disease as will disqualify him at the time the succession opened, will be required. Held—(1) That the presumption of there having been legal necessities as recited in the sale deeds stood un rebutted, and (2) that the sale being voidable only by the reversioner himself, any person other than the reversioner could not impeach it. Dayabhaga—Mixing up of joint and separate property—Presumption that property acquired out of mixed fund joint property.] The general presumption that arises when members of a joint family who have control over the joint estate blend that estate with property in which they have separate interests is that the properties acquired with such mixed up funds are intended for the benefit of the joint family. There is no difference in this respect between a case where the separate estate is brought into the joint family account as in Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal, L. R. 44 I. A. 201 a c 21 C. W. 		INDIAN ARBITRATION ACT (VII of 1918)—Indian Stamp Act (II of 1899), ss. 35, 3, and Sch. I, cl. 5 (c)—Arbitration proceedings—Award made on submission not stamped, whether its validity may be challenged in suit to set aside the award.] Where the Plaintiff and the Defendant submitted their disputes under a contract to arbitration by a document which did not bear any stamp and the arbitrators having made their award in favour of the Defendant, the Plaintiff brought a suit to set aside the same and contended that the award was invalid, inter alia, on the ground that the document containing the submission did not bear any stamp. Held—That the award was valid and its validity could not be challenged on the ground that the document containing the submission did not bear any stamp.

INDIAN ARBITRATION ACT contd.

Per Sanderson, C J—The submission having been admitted in evidence by the arbitrators, it was not open to either of the parties to call in question such admission in the arbitration proceedings on the ground that the submission had not been duly stamped. The award therefore was a valid award and it was not open to the Plaintiff to rely upon the fact that the submission was not stamped for the purpose of showing that the award was invalid.

Per Richardson, J—Once an instrument is admitted in evidence in any proceeding either under sec 35 or 36 of the Indian Stamp Act it is available in that proceeding for all purposes as if it had been properly stamped at the outset. The proceeding will go through to a valid termination and cannot afterwards be challenged for want of jurisdiction by reason of non-compliance with the Stamp Act. Sec 36 would be entirely nullified if on the conclusion of the proceeding in which the instrument is admitted, the proceeding could be set aside by a separate proceeding initiated by one of the parties on the sole ground that the person having authority to receive evidence had admitted or acted upon an unstamped or insufficiently stamped document. RUNG LAL KALOORAM v KEDAR NATH KESRIWAL.

(IX of 1899), ss. 9 (b), 14 and 15—Agreement by contracting parties to refer dispute to arbitration under terms inconsistent with s. 9 (b)—Arbitration under the section, ultra vires—Award if may be questioned by suit—Enforcement of award in execution, it bars such suit—Consent order to abide by decision of Judicial Committee—Objection to jurisdiction if entertainable upon appeal from order.] By eleven contracts, bearing various dates, Appellants agreed to buy from the Respondents a number of bales of jute of certain specified quality. The contracts were all in a form approved by the Calcutta Baled Jute Association and provided that any disputes shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the Rules and Bye-Laws endorsed on the contracts, under one of which, where one of the parties to a dispute failed to appoint an arbitrator within the time limited, the Chairman of the Association was to appoint an arbitrator on behalf of the defaulting party. The contracts further provided that both arbitrators and umpire must be persons engaged in the Baled Jute Trade and that their award shall be final, subject only to a right of appeal to the Committee of the Association.

Held—That this agreement was quite inconsistent with sec 9 (b) of the Indian Arbitration Act, under which, on the failure of one party to appoint an arbitrator, the decision is to be by a single arbitrator chosen by the other party only, whereas under the agreement in question in every case of such failure—which includes a failure to appoint a substituted arbitrator on the death or retirement of an arbitrator originally appointed—there were always to be two arbitrators, one appointed by the parties and the other by the Chairman on behalf of the other party. Under the agreement, moreover, the decision was to be by a domestic tribunal constituted of men engaged in the trade and the decision was to be subject to an appeal to the Committee of the Association. That an award made by a single arbitrator appointed by the Appellants alone, upon the failure of the Respondents to appoint an arbitrator as required by the terms of the agreement, acting under sec 9 (b) of the Arbitration Act was without jurisdiction. Any objection to an award on the ground of misconduct or irregularity on the part of the arbitrator ought to be taken by motion to set aside the award. But where it is alleged that an arbitrator has acted wholly without jurisdiction, his award can be questioned in a suit brought for that purpose. The fact that the award has been entered by execution under sec 15 is no bar to a suit to have it declared void and for consequential relief. Where the High Court on appeal having declared the award void, with the consent of parties, ordered the Appellants to repay to the Respondents a sum of money which the Respondents had paid to them in execution of the award upon an undertaking by the Respondents to return the amount if the award should be found valid by the Judicial Committee on appeal.

Quære—Whether any technical objection as to the jurisdiction of the Court to question the award could be maintained before the Judicial Committee having regard to the fact that the order appealed from was to some extent a consent order and contemplated that the question of the validity of the award should be finally determined by the Judicial Committee.

Held—That it was in the discretion of the umpire to refuse to state a special case for the opinion of the Court and to decide the point of law himself and that his refusal did not amount to misconduct. Sec 7 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, 52 and 53 Vict c 49, and Russell on Award and Arbitration 10th Ed., p 175, referred to. Where the umpire awarded damages as also interest thereon until payment:

s 9 (2) (iii). Company managing Railway on behalf of Secretary of State—Surplus profits of Company only liable to tax—Guaranteed interest and interest paid on borrowed capital, if to be included in computing the taxable income. The Bengal Nagpur Railway Co. was assessed to income tax on an income made up of (1) the Company's surplus profits and (2) the guaranteed interest, the item No. (2) being made up of (a) the interest debitable to the undertaking of the Secretary of State's open line capital, (b) the payment to the Secretary of State of the amount of the guaranteed interest payable by him to the Company in England on the share capital of the Company which the Company by agreement had made over absolutely to the Secretary of State and (c) the amount payable on account of interest on debenture stock and debentures. Held—That the matter could not be tried as a case of a Company owning in the ordinary way a Railway, as a private venture. The liability to tax must be determined with reference to the special agreement between the two parties and the nature of their relation to one another. From this point of view the Secretary of State is the owner of the Bengal Nagpur Railway which has been constructed and is managed for him by the Company. This is their business on the income of which tax is leviable. The principle applicable is that the Company should pay tax on what they get. In that view the Company are liable to income-tax in respect only of item No. (1) representing their share of surplus profits which they get in return for their services in the management of the Railway. The Company are not liable in respect of sum (2) (a). Though this capital has been the means where by profits have been earned in which the Company share this is not the Company's property. All receipts earned by the use of these sums are paid to the Government account and the interest is deducted before the profits in which the Company are entitled to share can be ascertained. Nor are the Company liable in respect of sum (2) (b). This in effect represents monies which the Secretary of State pays in London to the Company and which he recoups himself in this country out of the earnings of the Railway and which has to be deducted before the surplus

INFANT, lease on behalf of—Alteration of terms so as to make it reasonable in order to bind minor, if permissible—Incomplete tender—Liability to pay interest—Rate of interest, what is reasonable in India? A lease which taken as a whole was an unfair and inequitable transaction could not be altered and reduced into a proper and reasonable form in order to make it binding on an infant on whose behalf it was executed when the objectionable features of the lease did not admit of separation from its general structure as an independent bargain between lessor and lessee. A tender of payment accompanied by a condition which prevented it from being a perfect and complete tender does not relieve the payee of the obligation to pay interest. Award of interest at 12 per cent. per annum was upheld as such a rate though considered high in England, may be a very proper and reasonable rate to impose in the local conditions of India. NARAIN DAS v. INTEREST at unusual and exorbitant rate under a kabulyat executed before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, if allowable—Exorbitant interest, if one of the ordinary incidents of tenancy: In a kabulyat executed by a raiyat in 1882 before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, there was a stipulation for payment of interest at the rate of 75 per cent. per annum on overdue instalments of rent. The holding was sold for arrears of rent but the sale proclamation did not specify the interest payable on rents in arrears. Held—That the kabulyat having been executed before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the provisions of sec. 67 are not applicable to the case and, as a purchaser at the rent sale, the Defendant purchased it with the ordinary incidents of a tenancy. 		KHANKAHS, what are—Sajjadanashin, his rights—Right of succession to the office—Right to surplus income, if exclusive of other heirs—Dedication, proof, though word wakf not used, from user. On the death of a sajjadanashin of a khankah, his eldest son, if qualified, is the natural successor of his father. Ordinarily speaking, the sajjadanashin has a larger right in the surplus income than a mutwali, for so long as he does not spend it in wicked living or in objects wholly alien to his office, he, like the mahant of a Hindu math, has full power of disposition over it. Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami, Ayyar , 1 L. R. 48 I. A. 302, 322. s. c. 26 C. W. N. 537 (1921), referred to. But this does not mean that in every case the whole income from a khankah is at the disposal of the sajjadanashin and it was plain from the authorities as well as from the evidence in this suit that at certain shrines the members of the founder's family other than the sajjadanashin are treated as entitled to share in surplus offerings which remain after payment of expenses (including a reasonable remuneration to the sajjadanashin). LANDLORD AND TENANT—Origin of tenancy not known—Evidence necessary to prove the nature of tenancy—Circumstances under which permanency of tenure may be presumed—Estoppel and acquiescence—Pucca structures built by tenant, without objection by landlord When the origin of a tenancy is unknown, the evidence and the mode of dealing with the demised land and the acts and conduct of the party constitute the best if not the only, evidence for the purpose of proving the nature of the tenancy. Ismail Khan Mahamad v Jaigun Bibi, 1 L R. 27 Cal 570 (1900), referred to. Permanency has been presumed in various cases where there was a series of successions and a series of recognitions by the landlord, the rent being allowed to continue at a uniform rate for a long series of years, but this presumption cannot be drawn from the mere fact that there have been two or three transfers and that again within recent years. In order that the tenant might avail himself of the plea of estoppel or acquiescence against the landlord, it is necessary for the tenant to show that in spending money for the erection of buildings of a permanent character he was acting in an honest belief that he had a permanent right in the land and that the landlord knowing that he was acting in that belief stood by and allowed him to go on with the construction. Mere knowledge of the landlord or his agent is not enough. Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal, L. R. 26 I A. 58 s. c 3 C. W. N 502 (1899) and Ramsden v. Dyson, L R 1 Eng & Ir App 129 (1866) referred.

When a pleader, in the course of an agitation against a local tax, did not confine himself to protests, however vehement, against the tax or against its injustice but urged an organised resistance to payment and attempted to establish a system which would have impeded and might have defeated its recovery with grave danger to public peace, and was bound over to keep the peace and later on dealt with by the High Court under the Legal Practitioners Act with the result that his sanad of practice was cancelled "until such time as he satisfied the Court by his conduct that he was fit for re-admission." Held (without expressing either approval or disapproval of the order)—That the circumstances were sufficient to found jurisdiction under sub-sec (f) to sec. 13 of the Act, and as it was entirely a matter for the discretion of the Court that made the order, no leave to appeal against it should be granted by the Judicial Committee *SANKAR GANESH DABIR v. - Pleader—Application for renewal of certificate after lapse of years—Discharge from Government service if a ground for refusal to renew the certificate—Suppression of facts relating to the discharge, how far should interfere with the renewal. A pleader, on getting Government service, applied to the High Court and obtained an order of suspension for the period of his employment under Government. After a number of years, being discharged from the service, he applied for renewal of his certificate, but in the application the facts relating to his discharge were not mentioned. On enquiry by the High Court it was elicited that the applicant had been discharged for his reprehensible conduct, e.g., untruthfulness, in connection with a criminal case. Held—That the conduct of the applicant in relation to the criminal case, though open to serious comment, was not such as would justify the refusal of his application for renewal of certificate. That it was incumbent on him to make in his application a full and complete disclosure of the facts which had led to his removal from Government service and as such his conduct was not calculated to inspire absolute confidence. Therefore, although he was not excluded from practising his profession for all time the High Court ordered that the certificate should not be renewed at once, but after six months. In re Abiruddin Ahmed, J L R. 38 Cal 309 s c 15 C W N 357, 12 C L J 625 (1910), referred to IN THE MATTER OF MUKUNDA LAL DHAR 129

On adjustment of accounts a sum was found due to the pleader and the pleader sued on that adjusted account though no agreement had been filed in Court. Held—That it may be conceded that where there is no agreement between the pleader and his client, the pleader is entitled to maintain an action for recovery of reasonable remuneration for services rendered. But where there is a contract between the parties, such contract to be enforceable must be deposited in Court within 15 days from the day on which it is executed. The agreement in the present case not having been so filed was not enforceable under sec 28 of the Legal Practitioners Act, Kamini Debi v Khetter Mohun, 15 C L J 660 s c 27 C W. LETTERS PATENT, cl 12—"Suit for land"—

High Court's jurisdiction to entertain suit for specific performance of a contract to purchase a tea estate in Assam—Appointment of Receiver, discretion of Judge—Construction of statute. A, carrying on the business of tea planters, owned a tea estate in Assam. B entered into an agreement with A in Calcutta to purchase the estate for a certain sum, but subsequently failed to do so, and A brought a suit on the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court for specific performance or in the alternative, for damages. On an application by the Plaintiff the Judge appointed a Receiver, against which order the Defendant appealed, urging that the suit being a "suit for land" the High Court on its Original Side had no jurisdiction to try the suit in view of the terms of cl 12 of the Letters Patent and hence had no jurisdiction to appoint a Receiver. Held per Sanderson,

C J.—That if the word "suits for land" are given their natural meaning, the suit does not come within the meaning of those words. Sudamdih Coal Co., Ltd. v
Empire Coal Co., Ltd., 1 L R 42 Cal
942 (1915), distinguished. Land Mortgage
Bank v Sudurudeen Ahmed, 1 L R 19
Cal 358 (1892), relied on. In construing a statute it is necessary for the Court to give the natural meaning to the words which are used, and if it is thought advisable to include cases which are not covered by the words of the statute in their natural meaning, it is not for the Court to strain the language of the statute so as to include them, but it is the function of the Legislature to amend the statute and the same principle applies to the construction of the Charter. Having regard to the fact that the agreement, which it is sought to enforce, was made in Calcutta, the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The appointment of a Receiver is a matter for the discretion of the Judge—a discretion which must be exercised judicially and upon well recognised principles. Gibbs v.

David, L R 20 Eq Cas 373 (1875), referred to. Per Richardson, J.—That this is not a suit for land either within the natural meaning of those words or within the meaning which had been given to them in previous decisions of this Court. Nothing can be decided in this suit between vendor and purchaser which directly affects the land or binds third parties who may have or may claim rights therein. That being so, the suit does not appear to be a suit brought for the purpose of establishing title to or acquiring possession of or control over land. The agreement having been made in Calcutta, and the suit being not a suit for land, leave was properly given to institute it proposition that in determining what period is to be deducted in any case, the time actually consumed in obtaining the decree is to be regarded. On the question whether this was the practice, the Judicial Committee on being referred to a well-known book on practice observed that it did not appear to be laid down in terms to plan and not hesitating that their Lordships could rely upon it for the purpose of saying that it had become established

S. It was further provided that on default in payment of any one instalment the whole would be recoverable with interest. The instalments for 1309 to 1311 B. S. were paid out of time and accepted. The mortgagee sued for the subsequent instalments. Held—That the article applicable to the suit was Art. 132 of the Limitation Act. That though Art. 132 does not provide for cases of waiver, and there is no case directly deciding that the principle of waiver would apply to mortgage bonds payable by instalments having regard to the weight of authority in connection with cases under Art. 7. and instalment decrees, it may be held that the payment and acceptance of overdue instalments in the present case constituted a waiver, and that the mortgagee was entitled to recover the subsequent instalments. Hurronath Roy v. MAHOMEDAN LAW—Wakf—Property settled in perpetuity for aggrandisement of family under colour of charity—Wakf, illusory—Remote gift to the poor, if validates wakf—Wakf Validating Act (VI of 1913), not retrospective—Suit to set aside wakf as invalid—Compromise—Agreement confirming the wakf and stipulating for payment by mutwali of allowances to members of the family out of the income of settled properties, how far binding—Contract for valuable consideration creating charge on property, not accompanied by delivery, validity of. Held—That two deeds of 1816 and 1868 which purported to create by gift a perpetual succession of interests for the aggrandisement of the family of the donors were invalid by the Mahomedan law and were not validated by the use of the term wakf or by the mention of a remote trust to the poor. That the Mussulman Wakf Validating Act, 1913, cannot be construed as validating deeds executed before its date. A suit brought in 1860 to set aside the deeds as invalid was compromised in 1881 by two agreements made and concluded between the members of the family on the one hand and the then mutwali on the other which whilst purporting to confirm the wakfnamas provided for the payment by the mutwali of fixed allowances to living and named members of the family out of the income of the settled properties, in consideration of which stipulation the mutwali was confirmed in his possession of those properties. The allowances were made payable to the persons named immediately and were to be continued to their heirs. Held—That the purpose of the agreements was quite different from that of the wakfs and the agreements were enforceable though the wakfs were invalid. The allowances payable under the former were intended to take effect as immediate and heritable charges on the income of the properties, taking priority of all the limitations contained in the settlements. That the direction in the agreements to pay the allowances "out of the income" of the settled properties showed an intention to create a charge and this intention was not frustrated by the ineffectual attempt to keep alive the subsequent and invalid limitations of the settlements. That the agreements were not gifts but being contracts for valuable consideration were not required to be accompanied by delivery, and the charges on land created by them could be enforced like other charges by the Courts. That the fiduciary character of the mutwali's possession and the conditions on which it was given could not be repudiated by his heirs and the latter allowed to keep the properties in their own hands free from all charges. Where before the Defendants, purchasers of the equity of redemption, had acquired any interest in the mortgaged properties, the mortgagees applied, according to the suggestion of the mortgagors, a part of the compensation money received on account of some of the mortgaged properties under the Land Acquisition Act in satisfaction of certain unsecured debts due from the mortgagors to the mortgagees and applied the balance in reduction of the mortgage-debt. Held—That the purchasers of the equity of redemption had no right to demand that the mortgagees should give credit for the entire amount of the compensation money in reduction of the mortgage-debt, as they did not acquire any interest in the mortgaged properties at the time of the arrangement. 		OUDH TALUQDAR , primogeniture sanad to—Construction—"Successor," if includes transferee by Will or deed—Sunni, Mahomedan law—Document whether deed or Will—Test—Inartistic drafting in India—Gift inter vivos, conditions of—Delivery of possession, actually or constructively, sufficient—Gift of immoveable property reserving usufruct in part—Delivery of actual possession of the other part, sufficient as delivery constructively of the whole. Held, on a construction of a primogeniture sanad granted to an Oudh Taluqdar, that the word "successors" in it meant those designated persons who would succeed in the event of an intestacy and not persons who took by sale, gift or bequest. That the grantee's widow to whom the Taluqdar left the Taluqdari property by Will, when by right of inheritance under the sanad it should have gone to the elder of the two surviving brothers, was not competent to alienate the property under the terms of the sanad as a "successor" of the grantee, but could do so subject to the provisions of the Sunni Mahomedan law, the personal law by which she was governed.

In Mahomedan law the broad distinction between a gift (hiba) and a bequest (wasiat) is that in the case of a gift the immediate right of property in the subject of the gift is conferred and in the case of a bequest the vesting of the right of property is postponed. Held, on a construction of the document in question in this case (after adverting to the difficulty of construing Indian documents owing to the absence of a uniform and accurate system of conveyancing and to the fact that deeds and Wills are as a rule most artistically drawn frequently by persons not possessed of legal knowledge), that it was intended to be an irrevocable disposition by the donor of all her moveable and immovable property and all her zamindari and lainbardari estate mentioned in the deed and in the schedules thereto, subject to the reservation for her own use during her life-time of the usufruct of some of the immovable properties. The reservation of the usufruct does not by itself make the gift of such property by a Sunni Mahomedan void under Mahomedan law. Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Mussummat Mohummed Begum, 11 M. L. A. 517; 10 W. R. P. C. 25 (1867), followed. For a valid gift inter vivos under the Sunni Mahomedan law, the three conditions which are necessary are, (a) manifestation of the wish to give on the part of the donor, (b) the acceptance of the donee, either impliedly or expressly and (c) the taking of possession of the subject-matter of the gift by the donee, either actually or constructively. The old and admittedly authoritative texts of Mahomedan law relating to gifts could not have been intended to lay down for all time what should alone be the evidence that title to lands had passed. The object of the Mahomedan law as to gifts apparently was to prevent disputes as to whether the donor and the donee intended at the time that the title to the property should pass, from the donor to the donee and that the handing over by the donor and the acceptance by the donee of the property should be good evidence that the property had been given by the donor and had been accepted by the donee as a gift. Where by the same act, the donor gave the whole of her zamindari property to the donee, but a part of it being given subject to the reservation of the usufruct in the donor, actual physical possession was taken by the donee of the rest only. Held—That the taking possession by the donee of a part only amounted to taking possession constructively of the whole zamindari including the part of which physical possession was not taken even though the donee did not apply for mutation of names in respect of the latter property. *KHAN BAHADUR MAHAMMAD ABDUL GHANI KHAN v. by former Taluqdar to wife for life rent-free by Will—Proprietor claiming taluq under same Will, if can repudiate legacy to wife—Construction of Will—"Sirat makbuza," meaning of—"Sir," popular sense of, includes "guzara" lands as well as home-farm lands—Paper-book in Privy Council appeal—Courts duty in India to control inclusion of irrelevant documents.) R. Taluqdar of Mahewa in District Kheri in Oudh, by Will bequeathed all his moveable and immovable properties to a nephew J, subject to certain legacies of which that to his wife was in these terms. "To my wife for life five hundred rupees per mensem besides sirat makbuza (which means 'sir land in possession') will be given from the estate." Held—That R. by his Will intended to bequeath to his wife an absolute estate for her life as a proprietor and without liability to have the same assessed to rent in the "sir land in her possession." That the expression "sir land in her possession" covered manza Chhauch which had been given to her for her maintenance by R. in his life-time and was not confined to the home-farm lands the special meaning assigned to the term "sir" by Act XXII of 1886, the word "sir" being generally used in Oudh to cover both classes of lands. That J who took taluqa Mahewa under the Will could not repudiate the condition of the Will that manza Chhauch should be held by R's widow for her life rent-free. That under the terms of the Will J would not be the "proprietor" of manza Chhauch so long as R's wife continued to be the proprietor for life, and Act XXII of 1886, as amended by Act IV of 1901, consequently did not apply. *Parbati Kunwar v. A duty lies upon the Courts in India to exercise control upon the wholesale inclusion, in the records transmitted to England of irrelevant documents by the parties to an appeal to the Judicial Committee which is a scandal and a hindrance to the proper administration of justice. *JAI INDRA BAHADUR SINGH v. I, Arts. 62, 97—Pleadings, defective—Relief given upon materials on record } Under the Ouddh Estates Act, the succession to collaterals opens on the death of the widow just as under Hindu law. Under the ordinary Hindu law, transfer by such a collateral of his expectancy to succeed to the estate on the death of the widow of the last male owner is inoperative. The widows of the last male owner of an estate in Ouddh entered in List II attached to the Ouddh Estates Act. I of 1869, having set up a Will of the deceased husband, empowering them to adopt the then next reversionary heir expectant sued the widows and obtained against them a declaration that the Will was void and invalid and that he was entitled to succeed to the estate on the death of the last surviving widow. Held—That the decree was binding only on the widows and the Court of Wards which had taken over the estate and did not create in the Plaintiff an interest in the estate that did not otherwise exist. Held therefore—That a purchaser of the estate from the Plaintiff in the suit, in the life-time of the widows, was not entitled to recover possession on the strength of his purchase. That the purchaser was entitled to recover the consideration money which he paid, under sec 65 of the Indian Contract Act, limitation for such a suit running from the date when he discovered that the sale was void. Sec. 65 of the Contract Act deals with (a) contracts which become void and (b) agreements not enforceable as contracts and therefore void from their inception. An agreement discovered to be void, within the meaning of the section, is therefore one discovered to be not enforceable by law from its inception as distinct from a contract which becomes void. There being materials on the records justifying the Court in holding that there was a misapprehension on the part of the purchaser as to the rights of his vendor in the estate he professed to transfer and that the true nature of those rights was not discovered by him until his demand for possession was resisted, and that this date was well within the period of limitation, the Judicial Committee gave him a decree for recovery of the consideration money in accordance with the provisions of sec 65 of the Contract Act, although the case, as bearing on the provisions of this section had not been satisfactorily presented or developed in the pleadings and the proceedings before the lower Courts. THAKURAIN HARNATH KUAR v. vents and several creditors whereby G guaranteed payment as guarantor for the amounts which the insolvents were to pay and he assumed the position of a trustee for the purpose of collecting the assets and the effects of the insolvents. On the 11th September 1911 the composition was approved by the Court and adjudication was annulled. On the 29th July 1922 J. S. & Co. made an application under sec. 30 (2) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, for (i) an order that the debtors and the trustee G do pay the sum due to them under the composition deed, and that in default they be committed for contempt and (ii) an order that the debtors be re-adjudged insolvents. On the 31st August 1922 the Court directed G to pay as guarantor and so far as the debtors were concerned, the said application was allowed to stand over. G failed to pay and on the 21st November 1922 the debtors B. R. and B. were re-adjudged insolvents and it was further ordered that that order be not drawn up or completed for a period of a fortnight in order to enable G or the insolvents to pay. The fortnight expired, and G and the debtors did not pay. The order was settled but it was not drawn up. On the 6th February 1923, on the application of J. S. & Co. the order dated the 21st November 1922 was vacated and on the 7th February 1923 the Court directed a writ of attachment to be issued against G inasmuch as he had failed to comply with the order of payment made on the 31st August 1922. G appealed from the orders. Held—That on the 21st November 1922 when the debtors were re-adjudged insolvents there was an end of the composition and the Appellant G's liability under the covenant came to an end. Held also—That G was a guarantor in the real sense of the word Quære—Whether the learned Judge had jurisdiction under sec 30 (2) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act to deal with the personal liability of the Appellant as a mere guarantor of the amounts which the debtors had covenanted to pay. Ex parte Mirabita: In re Dale, L. R. 20 Eq 772 (1875). Held, further—That in view of the long period which had elapsed before J. S. & Co. applied to enforce the covenant and the fact that the order of the 31st November 1922 which had the effect of discharging G from liability under the covenant was made at their instance, the order should not have been vacated, assuming that the Judge had jurisdiction to vacate it. Seemle—If the application was to be regarded as an application by a creditor against the trustee under the composition deed as such transferee, then the learned Judge had jurisdiction under sec 30 (2) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act to deal with the application. The reasoning laid down in Ex parte Mirabita: In re Dale, L. R. 20 Eq 772 (1875), was applicable to the construction of sec. 30 (2) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. GORIND DAS PITY v. On their application to set aside that order on the ground that the order should not have been made as they resided more than 200 miles from Calcutta. Held per Curiam—That the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the application under sec 56 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and that the deposition of X and of the proprietors of the firm of M R. taken under sec. 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act were admissible against themselves for the purpose of showing the circumstances in which they took their respective assignments. of his intention to do so and such notice should specify the depositions on which he intends to rely. Per Curiam—Repeated demands for payment or threats of legal proceedings by a creditor who knows that the debtor is unable to pay do not constitute bona fide pressure and do not prevent a transfer by the debtor to the creditor from being an undue preference over other creditors within the meaning of sec 56 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. Ex parte Hall, L. R. 19 Ch Div. 580 at p 585 (1876) referred to. Per Sanderson, C J.—After it has been established that the assignment by the insolvents to X was fraudulent and void as against the Official Assignee, the onus lay upon M R., if they desired to bring themselves within the provisions of sec 56, sub-sec (2) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, to show that not only did they give consideration for the assignment but also that they acted in good faith. adjudication of insolvency after a previous adjudication on the same facts and materials had been annulled, legality of.] An insolvent was adjudicated on his own petition but having failed to apply for his discharge within the time provided by the Act, his adjudication was annulled. Subsequently on his own application, on the same facts and materials, his second adjudication took place, and a creditor applied to annul the adjudication. Held—That the presentation of the second insolvency petition by the debtors was an abuse of the process of the Court, and the second adjudication order founded upon it must be annulled. *Mal Chand v. s 41, jurisdiction of the Registrar in the Insolvency to annul an adjudication under r. 142B of the Calcutta Insolvency Rules—S. 8, Court, if can review order passed by the Registrar.] Where the Registrar in Insolvency annulled an adjudication order under the provisions of sec. 41 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act as the insolvent had not applied for his discharge within the time fixed by r 142A of the Insolvency Rules. Held—That the Registrar had jurisdiction to make the order annulling the adjudication. Sec 6 of the Act authorises delegation to an officer of the matters set out in sub-cl. (2), which includes matters to be dealt with in chambers and applications for annulment can be heard and determined in chambers. Held further—That under sec 8 of the Act the Court can review its orders, but as the order was passed by the Registrar he was the person to whom the application for review must be made (see Or. 47, C. He might have stated that it was his intention definitely to give it up and not to resume business in Constantinople at all. Thereupon probate was granted to the applicant and about two months after the date of grant the executor who had renounced made an application for withdrawing his renunciation and for being appointed one of the executors. Held—That at the time when the application for withdrawal of the renunciation of executorship was made, the grant of probate had already been made and therefore the application came too late. The date of grant of probate is the date on which the order granting the probate is passed and not the subsequent date on which an order is passed that probate should issue. *In re Golap Sundari Dassi, 5 C. That the idol was the residuary legatee within the meaning of sec. 89 of the Indian Succession Act, which is applicable to Hindus, and that the person entitled to letters of administration under sec. 21 of the Probate and Administration Act was the shebait of the idol. Held, further—That the appointment of a priest (purohit) to conduct the worship of the idol by the shebait does not transfer the management of the debutter estate from the shebait to the priest, and that the priest is not entitled to the grant of letters of administration as residuary legatee or otherwise. Maharaj Indurjeet Koor v Chundemun Misser, 16 W R 99 (1871) and Nafar Chandra v Kailash Chandra, 25 C W N 201 (1920) referred to. - jurisdiction of Small Cause Court to try a suit upon a contract to pay a certain sum as compensation for things misappropriated—Construction of plaint—Discretion to award interest. Defendant in collusion with certain Railway Officers took some coal belonging to Plaintiff and misappropriated it. The Plaintiff and the Defendant discussed the matter and the Defendant executed a chit promising to pay a particular sum made up in a particular way. Plaintiff brought a suit in the Small Cause Court alleging in the plaint the aforesaid collusion and misappropriation and the execution of the chit agreeing to pay the money. In deciding the suit the Small Cause Court Judge awarded interest at 21 per cent per annum on the ground of Defendant's conduct. Held—That the plaint properly read is a plaint upon the chit and is not a suit for damages either for theft of coal or for the conversion of the coal in any sense. As there was nothing in the plaint to show that the transaction was represented as two alternative causes of action, there was no objection in law to the case being tried in a Small Cause Court. Although in the absence of evidence of custom 21 per cent. per annum is a high rate, the Court had jurisdiction to grant it. RAKHAI CHANDRA CHATTERJEE v. MOHINI KUMAR CHATTERJEE 549

Subsequently B having acquired an interest in one anna share of the zamindari created a putni in respect of this one anna share in favour of F, but later on sold the interest of F under Reg VIII of 1819 and it was purchased by P, who thereafter sued D for rent of the putni to the extent of one anna share. Held—That the idea of a putni being created over another putni is absolutely foreign to the scheme of the Putni Regulation. The putnidar is therein described as a taluqdar of the first degree and it is difficult to imagine that a tenure can be created over a taluqdar of the first degree. Raj Coomar v. Probhat , 9 C W N. 656 (1904), distinguished. That assuming that F's interest was superior to that of D, then it could not be sold by the Collector under Reg VIII of 1819, and P acquired no interest by such sale. The whole scheme of the Putni Regulation is that the putnidar is the only person whose interest can be sold under the Regulation and not the interest of a person in the position of F by whatever name it may be called. The mere giving of the name of putni to the interest of F would not make it a putni as contemplated by the Regulation so as to bring into play all the provisions of the law. That there can be no objection to the assignment of the right of the zemindar to receive rent from the putnidar which he is entitled to get under the putni settlement and the assignee would be entitled to recover rent from the putnidar by virtue of the assignment. Madhusudan v. The principle that those who rely upon deeds and powers executed by purdanashin ladies should satisfy the Court that they had been explained to and were understood by them applies to agreements to compromise litigation, though it may be sufficient in such a case to show that the general result of the compromise, as distinct from the details and legal technicalities involved, was understood by her and that disinterested and competent persons with a fair understanding of the whole matter advised her to execute it. Tacoorden Tewarry v. Where in a suit by a purdanashin lady to set aside a compromise entered into on her behalf, as having been made without her authority, no evidence was given of the affirmative proposition that the compromise was made and entered into with the knowledge and consent of the lady, and it was denied by the lady and her witnesses, but the High Court upheld the compromise because the depositions of the lady and her witnesses were in its opinion unreliable. Held—That an affirmative proposition is not established by showing that the evidence of witnesses who depose to a contradictory negative proposition is not reliable. Duty of a pleader acting for a purdanashin lady, when a compromise is proposed to be made on her behalf, indicated. Sec 9 of Reg. VII of 1822 does not appear to do more than en- able the Collector to ascertain and record the rents actually payable at the time when a settlement or re-settlement is made. RAILWAYS ACT (IX of 1890)—Liability of Railway Administration for loss of goods— Indian Contract Act (IV of 1872) , ss. 151, 152 and 162—Care to be taken by the bailee —Inference from facts not disputed, whe- ther a question of law in second appeal. Under sec. 72 of the Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890) , the responsibility of a Railway Administration for the loss of goods delivered to it to be carried by Rail- way is that of a bailee under ss. 151, 152 and 162 of the Indian Contract Act . The bailee is only bound to take as much care of the goods bailed to him as a man of ordinary prudence would under similar circumstances take of his own goods of the same bulk, quality and value. A man of ordinary prudence would not send his own goods in a boat with 20 or 30 leaks on its side, 1 or 1½ inches in length, and keep the goods in the hold of the boat for 30 hours. When the facts are not dis- puted, the propriety of the inference to be drawn from the fact is a question of law and can be gone into in second appeal. Consequently it was open to the High Court in second appeal to see whether the Court below was right in holding that the De- fendant in despatching bailed goods in a boat with 20 or 30 leaks through which water entered into the boat, the goods being left in the hold of the boat for 30 hours, complied with the requirements of sec. 151 of the Indian Contract Act . LAKSHMI NARAIN BATTINATH v. A Hindu governed by the Davabhaga School established certain family duties, but imposed no condition as to their location. His son acquired a piece of land and erected thereon a thakurbari for one of the duties. By a declaration of trust he declared that he, his heirs, executors, representatives and administrators should for ever hold the land to and for the use of the deity, that the Thakur should be located and worshipped in the premises and that the Thakur should not on any account be removed therefrom unless and until a similar or better thakurbari was built. The grandsons of the founder separated and the palas of worship were divided. One of the grandsons, not having got any share of the family house, removed elsewhere and built himself a separate residence where he wanted to remove and worship the Thakur during his turn of worship. Held per Curiam—That the condition, viz., that the Thakur should not on any account be removed from the thakurbari unless and until a similar or better thakurbari was built, being for the benefit of the Thakur, was valid in law and should be observed by future shebait. Held per Richardson, J.—That the condition did not make a change in the character of the worship. Juggut Mohini Dassee v. Musamat Sokheemoney Dassee, 14 M. I. A. 289 at p. 302 (1871), referred to. SALE of future goods to be made by named Mills—Fixed quantity to be delivered as and when received from Mills, but fully by a certain date—Supply of goods by Mill, if condition precedent to fulfilment of contract—Goods not received from Mills, owing to latter taking up contracts to supply Government—Case, whether one of "frustration of contract"—"Methods and points of view of business men," how far to be looked into in interpreting business contracts. Upon an agreement for sale of future goods to be manufactured at and obtained from named Mills, "the same to be taken delivery of as and when the same may be received from the Mills," the Defendant failed to deliver the whole of the 864 bales agreed to be delivered to Plaintiff in full by 31st December 1912, by reason of the Mills preferring to execute contracts entered into by them with Government. Held—That the words "as and when same may be received from the Mills" cannot be construed as if they were "if and when the same may be received from the Mills." The words certainly regulated the manner of performance but did not reduce the fixed quantity sold to a mere maximum or limit the sale to such goods, not exceeding 864 bales, as the Mills might deliver to the Defendants during the remainder of the year. That the refusal of the Mills to deliver the goods to the Defendants did not constitute a "frustration of the contract" within the principle of Taylor v Caldwell, 3 B. & S. 826 (1863), and other cases, when it appeared that the Mills continued to exist and manufacture the goods in question, though these were made for and delivered to somebody else. Semble:—That the closing or even the destruction of the Mills would not affect a contract between third parties which, as in this case, was in terms absolute. In interpreting a business bargain, it is important to appreciate the method and point of view of business men, but this does not justify the Court in excluding liability expressly incurred by a business man on the ground that it was not a liability which a reasonable business man would have bound himself to. HURNANSEN .. 878

—, of immoveable property, without title by registered conveyance—Suit for refund of purchase-money—Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 62 and 116, applicability of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 55, cl (2)—Covenant of title when implied.] The Plaintiff brought a suit for the recovery of possession of certain property by right of purchase under a conveyance, and in the alternative claimed a refund of purchase money on the footing that at the date of sale the Defendant No. 1 had no title to convey inasmuch as the property had passed to other Defendants by a previous sale. The trial Court dismissed the suit against the other Defendants but gave a decree against Defendant No. 1 for refund of purchase money with interest. On appeal by Defendant No. 1 to the District Court the point was taken for the first time that the suit was barred under Art. 62 of the Limitation Act. The District Court remanded the case to the trial Court for a finding on the point after taking additional evidence. No additional evidence was offered by either party, and the trial Court held that the suit was barred under Art. 62 and that decree was affirmed by the District Court. Held—That the order of remand was bad in law. The Code makes no provision for a remand where the issue had been settled and the case had been fully tried. That if no covenant of title was expressed in the conveyance, the conveyance itself imported such a covenant under sec. 55, cl (2) of the Transfer of Property Act and a suit for refund of purchase-money might be regarded as a suit for damages for breach of this covenant. The conveyance being registered Art. 116 of the Limitation Act applied to the suit. Basaraddi Sheikh v. Enajaddi Maleah, I L R 25 Cal 298 (1897) and Arunachala Aiyer v. Ramasami Aiyer, I L R 38 Mad 1471 (1914), referred to. If "a contract" in the sense of Art. 116 is in writing the writing represents the implied as well as the express covenants, a breach of either of which would bring the case within the article. INJAD ALI v. SANAD—concl'd.

the Defendants claimed to have acquired title by purchase in 1906 from persons who under two rent-free grants made in favour of their predecessors, in 1836 and 1849 by an ijaradar and a superintendent respectively of the Plaintiff's predecessor had excavated the tank and remained in possession of the same from generation to generation. The first document recited that the ijaradar was directed by the landlord, to make the grant for excavation of a tank. The second document purported to have been granted by the landlord through the pen of a person who described himself as his superintendent and it recited the previous grant and stated that on measurement the tank had been found to extend over a larger area and so a supplementary grant was necessary. The grants stated that the grantee was to hold putra-poutradikrame (from generation to generation). The Plaintiff contended that the burden lay upon the Defendants to establish that in respect of the first document the ijaradar, and in respect of the second document the superintendent, had the requisite authority to make a grant which would be operative against the landlord, and that the vendors of the Defendants had no transferable right. Held—That the application of sec. 90 of the Evidence Act does not justify the inference that the documents which are established to be genuine were in fact executed by persons possessed of the requisite authority. It does not, however, follow that it is necessary for the grantee of the document or his successor in interest to establish by direct evidence that the executant had the requisite authority. When a grant has been in operation for a long series of years, as in this case it may be impossible to adduce direct evidence of authority. In such a contingency the Court may draw an inference from all the surrounding circumstances. In the present case, the grantee and his successors in interest from generation to generation had been in possession, if the grants were unauthorised the landlord might have been expected to take steps long before this to eject the grantees. Ubilack v. Dallial, I L R 3 Cal 557 (1878). Uggra Kanta Chowdhury v. Harro Chandra Shickdar, I L R 6 Cal 209 (1880). Maharaj Chhapraji v. Telamuddin Khan, 15 C L J 220 (1911). Airey v. Stapleton, [1897] 1 Ch. 164 and Naina Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar, 33 Mad L. J. 84 (1916), referred to. The burden thus shifted upon the landlord to prove how he came to acquiesce in the long possession of the grantee and his successors. Besides, it was the landlord who should be aware of the scope and extent of the authority conferred by him upon his lessee, or upon the superintendent of his estate. No evidence being forthcoming from his side, it was open to the Courts below to draw an inference that the grants must have been made by persons who possessed the requisite authority, and the Plaintiff could not now urge that the thereof, and K agreed to send in his requisitions within 5 days from the date of the delivery of title deeds. The requisitions were to be answered within 5 days thereafter, and K was to complete the purchase within 14 days from the date of the delivery of the title deeds. More than a fortnight was spent in the preliminaries, e.g., delivery of title deeds, answering requisitions, etc. for which G was primarily responsible. It was found that plot B belonged to G's wife. At the end of the fortnight G rescinded the contract on the ground that K had failed to complete the purchase within the specified time. Held That time was not of the essence of the contract, and as the plots contracted to be sold were two distinct and independent lots, performance of the contract, so far as it related to plot A which belonged to G, was both practicable and proper though performance of the contract, so far as it related to plot B which belonged to G's wife who was not a party to the agreement was both impracticable and improper. The present case came within the purview of sec. 16 of the Specific Relief Act, under which specific performance of so much of the contract as related to plot A should be enforced with an abatement in the price agreed upon. *Rutherford v. — FOR RENT—Cause of action—Jurisdiction—Sale—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 20, 21, Or. 21, r. 3—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) s. 144—rent suit may be instituted in Court where Defendant resides—Sale to be held in Court where tenure or holding is situate—Jurisdiction.—A suit for rent may be instituted in a Court where the Defendant resides, but the sale in execution of the rent decree, must be held in the Court where the tenure or holding is situate. (a) and (b) of sec 20 of the Civil Procedure Code allow a landlord to institute a suit for rent where the tenant resides. Chintaman Narayan v. Madhavray Venkatesh, 6 Bom H. C R (A C J) 23 (1899) relied on. Sec 144 of the Bengal Tenancy Act merely defines the expression "cause of action" as applied to suits between landlord and tenant for the purposes of the Code of Civil Procedure. Fazlur Rahaman Abu Ahmed v. Dwarka Nath Choudhury, 1 L R 30 Cal 453 s c 7 C W N 402 (1903), referred to. A Court which has no jurisdiction over a property is not competent to bring it to sale, and the effect of such a sale is a nullity. It is an elementary principle of law that if a Court has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter, its judgments and orders are mere nullities and may not only be set aside at any time by the Court in which they are rendered but may be declared void by every Court in which they are presented. These principles apply not only to original Courts but also to Courts of appeal. Jurisdiction cannot be conferred upon a Court by consent of parties and any waiver on their part cannot make up for the lack or defect of jurisdiction. Rajlakshmi Das v. Katyani Das, 1 L R 38 Cal 639 at p 668 (1910), Ledgard v. Bull, 1 L R 13 I A 134 s c 1 L R 9 All 191 (1836), *Minakshi Naidu v. Sec 21 of the Civil Procedure Code which is an exception to the above rule cannot be so interpreted as to have a wider application than what is justified by its terms. When the Judge has no inherent jurisdiction over the subject-matter of a suit, the parties cannot, by their mutual consent, convert it into a proper judicial process although they may constitute the Judge their arbitrator and be bound by his decision on the merits when these are submitted to him. This however can be accomplished only when the parties have expressly consented to such a procedure. KUNIA MOHAN CHAKRAVARTY v. MANINDRA CHANDRA ROY CHOWDHURY the ground of fraud on the part of the decree-holder—Suppression of notices in the suit and in the execution proceedings—Bona fide auction-purchaser for value without notice of the fraud, if necessarily protected—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, r. 90, cancellation of execution sale on the ground of irregularity or fraud in publishing it—Decision according to the principles of “justice, equity and good conscience,” significance of—Burden of proving good faith on the purchaser.] The mourashi mokarari right of a tenant was sold in 1907 in ex parte execution of an ex parte decree of 1904 for arrears of rent. The purchaser, however, never obtained possession through Court and never paid rent to the landlord who again sued for rent got an ex parte decree in 1914 and got the tenancy again sold in 1916 in execution thereof supplying all notices, etc. The mourashi mokarari tenant on being dispossessed in 1917, sued for cancellation of the ex parte decrees and consequent execution sales on the ground of fraud on the part of the decree-holders. Held—Per Moonje, J.—That an execution sale, which has been brought about by fraud of the decree-holder, is liable to be set aside on that ground even though it is not established that the auction-purchaser has participated in or has been cognisant of the fraud. Kaherode Sundari v. Jnanendra Nath, 6 C. W. N. 233 (1901), Nimai Choud v. Dina Nath, 2 C. W. N. 691 (1893) and other cases discussed. The above principle has received legislative approval in Or. 21, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code, where provision is made for cancellation of an execution sale on the ground of material irregularity or fraud in publishing it, provided the applicant has sustained substantial injury thereby. The Code does not exclude specifically the application of r. 90 in cases where the purchaser is a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the irregularity or the fraud and the Court may set aside the sale even in cases where the purchaser falls within the category of bona fide purchaser for value without notice. Parashnath v. Hari Charan, 1 I. L. R. 38 Cal. 622 (1911), referred to. In the absence of specific statutory directions, the Courts are to act according to justice, equity and good conscience, and this has generally been taken to mean so much of the English law and usage as seem reasonably applicable in this country. The doctrine of bona fide purchase is not a rule of property. It does not determine the question of title between the parties. It is in most cases available only by way of defence. Abdul Hai v. Nawab Raj, 9 W. R. 196 B. I. R. F. B. 911 (1867), Jungee Lal v. Sham Lal, 20 W. R. 120 (1873), Chitambar v. Krishnappa, I. L. R. 26 Bom. 513 (1901), Lala Bungsl-dhar v. Bindhoshree, 10 M. I. A. 454 (1886) and other cases discussed. The rule in the elastic form enunciated in Abdul Hai v. Nawab Raj, 9 W. R. 196 B. I. R. F. B. 911 (1867), approved. In the application of that rule to a concrete case, it may be usefully borne in mind that a bona fide purchaser for value without notice has always been a favourite with Courts of equity. But to crystallise the rule further would only be to impair its utility. Per Rankin, J.—Judicial sales fraudulently procured will not give a good title to a purchaser who does not take in good faith and without notice. Chitambar v. Krishnappa, I. L. R. 26 Bom. 513 (1902), referred to. The burden of proving that he acted in good faith and without notice of the fraud is in the first instance upon the purchaser. This is an essential feature of the equitable rule. The rule is not that there is a special favour for every one until he is shown to have been dishonest or a volunteer, but that equity, where it can will favour those who show that in innocence they have given value. In Re Nisbet and Pott's contract, [1905] 1 Ch. 391, referred to. BIRSEWAR CHOSE v. PANCHKOURI CHOSE 537

Held—That B's possession being in assertion of a clear intention to terminate the co-tenancy and in open assertion of a hostile title to the knowledge of A, a suit for possession by the purchaser from A was rightly dismissed. *Ayenenussa Bibi v. — BY TRANSFER OF CONTRACT, if maintainable when notice of assignment does not state the address of the transferee—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 130, exception to the proviso in, when comes into operation—S. 131, provisions of, whether mandatory or may be waived—Statement of the address of the transferee's solicitor, if sufficient compliance with s. 131.] A having entered into certain contracts with B assigned them by a deed of assignment to C. The notice of assignment which was sent to B did not state C's (the transferee's) address. B refused to deal with C under the contracts and settled the same with A. C thereupon brought this suit against B for damages for breaches of the contracts. Held—That in order that the exception mentioned in the proviso to sec. 130 of the Transfer of Property Act may be operative, there must be a strict compliance with the requirements of sec. 131 of the Act. That the notice of assignment not having stated the transferee's address did not comply with the provisions of sec. 131 of the Act; and the suit must therefore fail. Hunsraj v. Nathoo, 9 Bom. L. On the other hand if the provision has been enacted from reasons of public policy, he cannot be permitted to waive it. The provisions of sec 131 fall, in my judgment, within the latter category, but I am not prepared to maintain as an abstract proposition of law that under no conceivable circumstance can the provisions of sec 131 be waived by the debtor. Venkata v. Subba, 15 Mad. L. T. 533 (1915). [1915] Mad. W. N. 822 referred to. Per Rankin, J.—At common law a chose in action was not assignable, in equity it was freely assignable upon certain principles as to notice. The Indian legislature has composed a new scheme which has some of the features of both and, as I read sec 130, it says that the law, while regarding the transfer of an actionable claim as valid if effected in, a certain manner, will not undertake to enforce against a debtor the assignment, except upon the terms that the debtor may arrange with his original creditor, unless and until he has received a particular kind of notice. If, therefore, the Plaintiffs' claim is entirely on the basis of an assignment and if the claim is wholly without any other juristic basis, it seems to me that the section which enacts certain conditions must be rigidly complied with. *MESSRS SADASOOK RAMPROTAP v. The thakbast maps prepared by Amins prior to a regular survey, were rough maps which laid down the locality without any guarantee of scientific accuracy, and the thak khasras were rough registers in which the Amin entered particulars regarding the plots gathered from people who collected to watch his measurements. The statements entered in these registers have by themselves no evidentiary value. Statements to the detriment of the actual owner recorded in such registers unless knowingly acquiesced in by the owner cannot be used as evidence against him. Once the landlord has proved that the land which is sought to be held rent-free lies within his regularly assessed estate or mahal, it lies upon those who claim to hold the lands free of the obligation to pay rent to show by satisfactory evidence that they have been relieved of this obligation, either by contract or by some old grant recognised by Government. It follows that the presumption arising under sec 103 (B) of the Bengal Tenancy Act in favour of the correctness of an entry in the record-of-rights that certain lands were by the occupiers thereof held rent-free would stand rebutted upon proof that the lands lay within the estate or mahal of the zemindar. The onus shifting on those who claimed to hold the land rent-free. Rajsh Sahib Perchad Sein v. Doorguneshad Tewarree, 12 M. I. A. 286, 331 (1849), referred to. When a mahal had been held continuously in thika, the

sec. 99—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 34, r. 14—Sale in contravention of these provisions, if a nullity—Purchase by mortgagee of mortgagor's equity of redemption at an execution sale in another suit, if the mortgagee holds such property as trustee for the mortgagor—Sale of properties of which a receiver has been appointed without leave of the Court, appointing him, if absolutely void or voidable—Leave, if necessary for attachment and sale of properties of which a receiver has been appointed but of which he has not taken possession. A and B, who had executed three mortgages in favour of C, sold their equity of redemption in the mortgaged properties to D, after the same had been purchased (benami) by C at a sale held in execution of a decree which C had obtained against A and B on a claim quite independent of the mortgage. The mortgagors' application to set aside the sale to C was dismissed by the Appellate Court and the sale confirmed. In the mortgage suit which C instituted against A and B was allowed to appear and it was contended on his behalf that C held the properties which he had purchased as a trustee for the mortgagors and that D, as purchaser of the equity of redemption, was entitled to redeem on accounts being taken as between a trustee and a beneficiary. Held—That the mortgagors' application to set aside the sale to C having been dismissed and the sale confirmed, the equity of redemption passed to C and no right was left in the mortgagors which they could transfer to D, and that in the circumstances, the latter could not contend that C held the property as a trustee for the mortgagors. Held, also—That Or. 34, r. 14 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 is confined to claims arising under the mortgage and does not apply to a case where the sale takes place in execution of a decree for money upon a claim not arising under the mortgage. Kamini Debi v Ram Lochan Sarkar, 5 B L R 450 (1870) and Khairajmal v Diam, 1 L R 32 I A 23 s.c. I L R 32 Cal 296, 9 C W N 201 (1904), considered. Where in a mortgage suit an order was made appointing a receiver, but before the receiver took possession, the properties were sold in execution of a decree in another suit, the leave of the Court which appointed the receiver not having been previously obtained. Held—That the rule that possession of a receiver may not be disturbed without leave, does not apply, so far as third parties are concerned, until a receiver has been actually appointed and is in actual possession. Held also—That a sale of properties of which a receiver has been appointed, without leave of the Court which appointed him, is not void, but only voidable, liable to be set aside by appropriate proceeding. Livania Ashton v Madhab Moni Das, 11 C L J 489, 494 (1910) and Kanai Lal Jafar v Manoo Bibi, 29 C L J 424 (1919), referred to. Held also—That in the present case, the mortgagors who had applied to set aside the sale on the ground, among others, that the sale was held without taking the permission of the Court which appointed the receiver, having subsequently abandoned that ground, D, their assignee, could not urge it again by way of defence to a suit. RAJA JAGADISH CHANDRA DEO v. sec 108 (c), lessee if entitled to suspend payment of rent on account of unauthorized and unlawful interruption by another lessee of the same lessor—"Without interruption," what it signifies—Lessee if protected against tortious acts of other lessees or strangers—"Person claiming under the lessor," significance of. P leased out two contiguous mines to D, and M. Subsequently M joined his mine to D's mine by galleries encroaching upon the latter's coal land, as a result of which a portion of D's mine was flooded and submerged. The said act of M was unauthorized by the terms of his lease. In a suit by P against D for royalty and other dues, D pleaded that his possession having been interrupted by a lessee of P the entire rent was suspended. Held—That M's act was, as between him and his landlord entirely unauthorized by the terms of his lease and must be regarded as unlawful. In the absence of a contract or local usage to the contrary, sec. 108 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act secures for the lessee the benefit of an unqualified covenant for quiet enjoyment, which protects the lessee against interruption by the lessor, his heirs and assigns or by any other person or persons whatsoever (including the superior landlord or other person claiming by title paramount, exercising a power of re-entry or otherwise dispossessing the lessee). But even such a covenant does not include a case of disturbance by persons having no lawful title or right of entry for against such tortious acts the lessee has his proper remedy against the wrong-doers and does not require a covenant nor can he on account of being evicted by such persons, be relieved of his liability to pay rent. Hayes v Bickerstaff , [1669] Vaughan 118 and Vithilinga v Vithilinga , 1 L. R. 15 Mad 111 121 (1891), discussed and followed. Under such a covenant, the lessee is protected against all disturbance by the lessor whether lawful or not, save under a right of re-entry but as against other persons it protects the lessee only against lawful disturbance. The position of a Dharmakartha is not that of a shebait of a religious institution or of the mohant or head of a mutt . These functionaries have a much higher right with larger power of disposal and administration and they have a personal interest of a beneficial character. But a Dharmakartha is literally and no more than the manager of a charity, and his rights apart it may be in certain circumstances from the question of personal support, are never in a higher legal category than that of a mere trustee. A trustee who set up unfounded assertions of personal title in endowed properties and strenuously supported them by even concocting accounts cannot be continued in the office in the interest of the trust and should be removed by the Court. 		UNSUCCESSFUL APPLICATION for sanction to prosecute, if can be the basis of an action for damages for malicious prosecution—Points to be considered in deciding preliminary issues of cause of action and maintainability of the Suit—'Prosecution,' what it means in such cases. In a certain title suit the Defendant impugned the genuineness of a copy of a Will filed by the Plaintiff and applied for sanction to prosecute the Plaintiff. After a good deal of litigation an order of sanction passed by the District Judge on appeal, was set aside by the High Court in revision. The Plaintiff thereafter sued the Defendant in damages for malicious prosecution, but the lower Courts dismissed the suit on preliminary issues of cause of action and maintainability of suit. Held —That the lower Courts were wrong in considering the question of reasonable or probable cause at that stage of the case. That issue cannot be decided until after the Plaintiff has adduced evidence in support of the allegations in his plaint. The only question to be decided was the purely legal question whether the application for sanction

- UNSUCCESSFUL APPLICATION concord to prosecute can prove the basis of an action for damages for malicious prosecution. The maintainability of a suit for malicious prosecution does not depend on there having been a prosecution in the sense in which the term is used in the Code of Criminal Procedure. The application for sanction was a preliminary or initial stage in a criminal prosecution and it is immaterial that this was done in a Civil and not a Criminal Court. The Plaintiff therefore had a cause of action and should be given an opportunity to prove his case. Crowdy v. Reilly, 17 C W N 554 (1912). *De Rozario v. the widow of J from getting any share in such distribution." The testator's wife predeceased him and J, who survived him, died childless and leaving a widow D. Held—That the words "excluding the widow of J from getting a share in such distribution" would apply to funds coming to D as representative of J in the event of J being included in the class of heirs to the testator. That the testator did not intend to include J as one of his "heirs" as the term was used in the above clause of the Will. That according to the natural meaning of the terms "excluding the widow of J from getting any share in such distribution," such exclusion was not limited to the event of J dying in the life-time of the testator leaving his widow surviving him the clause in question appearing to contemplate conditions which would arise after the death of the testator. In a Will written in English the word "heirs" would naturally include heirs at the date of the testator's death, subject always to a contrary intention being declared in a particular Will. Hood v. Murray, 1 L R 11 A C 124 (1889), referred to. But in determining whether in this case the natural meaning of the term had been displaced by the context, the rule of construction which have been applied in English cases would be of no assistance. *Bhagebati Bramanya v. - proof of—Standard of proof, as to formalities and as to signature—Inference of genuineness of signature from general resemblance, when witnesses to signature kept back—Importance of evidence of when and how Will found: A Will is one of the most solemn documents known to the law by it a dead man entrusts to the living the carrying out of his wishes, and as it is impossible that he can be called either to deny his signature or to explain the circumstances in which it was attached, it is essential that trustworthy and effective evidence should be given to establish its genuineness in the necessary forms of law. Where under the law no formalities are essential and proof of the testator's signature is all that is needed justice requires, in case of doubt or dispute, that the best evidence procurable of that signature should be furnished, and an attempt to support the signature by anything that falls short of this standard is a matter which, though it may not be vital is a serious defect. When witnesses are available to prove that a man actually made a signature any evidence of a general nature to the effect that the signature appears to be genuine is of little worth in the absence of the material witnesses. The history of a Will e.g., when it was found, where and by whom, and

COMPOUNDING OF OFFENCES—hurt caused to one person, and wrongful confinement of the same and another—Complaint by one of them—Charges framed under sec. 323, I. P. C., in respect of hurt to the complainant, and under s. 342, for wrongful confinement of both—Compromise by complainant only on appeal—Legality of acquittal of offence committed against the other—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s 345.] When several persons are hurt or wrongfully confined, each of them can compound only the offences committed against himself, and not those committed against the others. Where a complaint was lodged by one of the persons confined, and charges were framed, under sec 323, I. P. C., of hurt caused to him, and also under sec 342, of wrongful confinement of himself and the Petitioner, a witness in the case, and the accused were convicted and appealed, and on the appeal the complainant alone compounded the offences charged. Held—That the Petitioner, not having been a party to the compromise, the acquittal, so far as it related to an offence committed against him, was illegal, and that the appeal must be re-heard on the merits in respect of such offence only. in which the Magistrate had materials before him sufficient, under sec. 90, Criminal Procedure Code, to justify the issue of a warrant and to which he applied his judicial discretion and in which the warrant was good and valid on the face of it and stated the reason upon which the Magistrate relied, the warrant was not invalid merely by reason of the fact that the Magistrate omitted to record in writing otherwise than in the warrant the reasons which actuated him in issuing the warrant. Per Sanderson, C. J. (Buckland and Panton, JJ., concurring).—The words, in sec 90 of the Criminal Procedure Code requiring a Magistrate to record his reasons for issuing a warrant in the place of a summons for the appearance of a witness are not imperative but directory. Per Sanderson, C. J. (Panton J., concurring).—Sec 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code deals with the form of the warrant itself and nothing more and does not absolve the Magistrate from complying with the provisions of sec 90. It is the duty of the Magistrates to record their reasons specifically as required by sec 90 before issuing a warrant and they should not be satisfied with merely signing their names to warrants in the form given in the schedule. Per Chatterjee, J.—The mere signing by the Magistrate of a warrant in form No 7 of Sch V of the Criminal Procedure Code which states that the Court has reason to believe that the witness will not attend unless compelled to do so is not sufficient compliance with the requirement of sec 90 of the Code. The mere statement that the Court "has good and sufficient reason to believe" is not stating what these reasons are, and the words in sec 90 "after recording its reasons in writing" show that it must be done before issuing the warrant. The recording of his reasons by the Magistrate is a preliminary condition to the issuing of a warrant under sec 90 of the Code, and a warrant issued under the section without recording these reasons in writing has no legal force and effect, the requirement that the reasons should be recorded being mandatory and not directory only. Per Chatterjee and Buckland, JJ.—Sec. 537 of the Code had no application to the case. Per Richardson, J.—Where a warrant is issued in the statutory form, the omission of the Magistrate to record his reasons (apart from the statement in the warrant) does not go to the Magistrate's jurisdiction to the extent of making the warrant null and void in the hands of the police officer or deprive him of the authority to execute it. Per

Richardson and Buckland, JJ. If a warrant is an invalid warrant issued without jurisdiction, the act of the police officer in attempting to make the arrest would be a wholly unauthorised act, and the question whether the act was or was 'not strictly justifiable' within the meaning of sec. 99 of the Penal Code would not arise. Tests for determining whether a provision of a statute is mandatory or directory discussed. Sukheswar Phukhan v. Emperor, 1 L. R. 38 Cal 789 S. C. 15 C. W. s. 137, order of Magistrate under, if can be declared illegal by his successor in office—S. 140 (2), Magistrate's discretion—Power to order clearing of tank or filling it up; An order for removing certain nuisance from a tank was made absolute under sec. 137, Cr. P. C., by a Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The order was not obeyed and the Petitioner applied to his superior office to enforce that order. That application was refused on the ground that the order passed under sec. 137, Cr. P. C. was an illegal order. Held—That the Magistrate was not justified in going behind the order of his predecessor and coming to a decision as to its illegality. That the direction of the Magistrate under sec. 110 (2) must be a judicial discretion and no Magistrate has judicial discretion to sit as a Court of appeal and decide whether an order passed by a Magistrate of concurrent jurisdiction was a proper order or not. The previous Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass the order under sec. 134 and make it absolute under sec. 137, Cr. P. C., for the removal of certain nuisance from a tank either by re-excavating or clearing it or by filling it up. Bistoo Chunder Chuckerbutty, Re. 10 W. R. sec. 145, order in favour of one party in proceedings under, it can be interfered with by subsequent proceedings, before the order is set aside by a Civil Court—Magistrate's jurisdiction to attach the subject-matter of the previous order on the ground of a bona fide dispute as to its possession—Government of India Act, sec. 107—High Court's jurisdiction to revise the attachment order in the second proceeding—Temporary change of character of the subject-matter of the previous order, if can nullify the effect of the said order! In a certain proceeding under sec. 145 Cr. P. C., the Magistrate passed an order in favour of the first party. A subsequent assignee of the interest of the second party, however began to disturb the possession of the first party with respect to a portion of the lands and in a subsequent proceeding instituted at his instance the Magistrate held that there was evidence of a bona fide dispute as to actual possession at that time. He therefore attached the lands under sec. 145 (4) and drew up proceedings under sec. 110 to maintain peace. Held—That it was clearly the duty of the Magistrate to see that the possession of the first party adjudged under the previous order was not disturbed. That order was binding on the parties and the unsuccessful party could not be allowed to disregard it. It was not proper for the Magistrate to initiate fresh proceedings under sec. 115 for maintaining the peace. Another effect of the fresh proceedings would be to give the unsuccessful party a fresh start or limitation in order to bring a suit for recovery of possession. The result of allowing such fresh proceedings would be that the binding effect of an order under sec. 115 would be disregarded and any number of proceedings may be initiated by any disappointed party. A temporary change in the character of the land cannot nullify the effect of the previous order passed with regard to it. When legal proceedings are taken under the Criminal Procedure Code which amounts to an abuse of process of the Court the High Court has ample jurisdiction to interfere and ought to interfere under sec. 107 of the Government of India Act. ARAN SARDAR v. HARA SUNDAR MAJUMDAR 171

sec. 145, Magistrate in declaring possession, can question validity of a Civil Court decree—Symbolical possession, value of, in such proceeding; B obtained a decree against A in a Civil Court and got symbolical possession of certain land in execution of the decree. In a subsequent proceeding between the parties under sec. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate declared possession with A thinking that the Civil Court decree could be ignored as the said Civil Court had no jurisdiction over the land and because the delivery of possession was symbolical. Held—That in a proceeding under sec. 145 Cr. P. C. the Magistrate could not go behind the decision of the Civil Court in the matter and could not ignore the decree though the Court passing the decree had no jurisdiction over the land. Also when the decree was inter partes, it was immaterial that the delivery of possession was symbolical only. ABHOY MANDAL v. BASU ROY 267

sec. 193 (2)—Sec. 110, case under—Reference under sec. 123, by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to the Sessions Judge—Transfer of the Reference to the Additional Sessions Judge—Power of Sessions Judge to transfer; Where on failure of the accused to furnish security to be of good behaviour the Sub-Divisional Magistrate referred the case to the Sessions Judge under the provisions of sec. 123, Cr. P. C. and the latter by an order transferred the Reference to the 1st Additional Sessions Judge for disposal Held—That the Sessions Judge had jurisdiction to transfer such case to the Additional Sessions Judge for disposal Bengal Government Notification, dated the 19th June 1916, referred to BENODE BEHARY NATH v. THE KING-EMPEROR 996 sec. 202—Notice upon an accused person to show cause why process should not issue against him, propriety and legality of—Locus standi of accused to appear or be represented by a lawyer before the issue of process against him. Where the Magistrate caused notice to be served upon a person named as an accused in a petition of complaint and directed him to show cause why process should not issue against him, and on such cause being shown by a pleader on his behalf, dismissed the complaint against him Held That the procedure adopted was improper and was not in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure as laid down in secs 202 and 203. An accused person has no locus standi to appear or to be represented by a lawyer before the issue of process against him Balaial v. Pasupati, 21 C W N 127 (1916) referred to and followed CHANDI CHARAN MITRA v. MANINDRA CHANDRA ROY CHOUDHURY 996

sec. 203, dismissal of complaint after giving accused opportunity of being heard—Sec. 437, Sessions Judge's order for further enquiry without giving accused opportunity of being heard, propriety of. A complaint was dismissed under sec 203, Cr P C, after giving the accused an opportunity of being heard. The Sessions Judge set aside the order of dismissal and directed a further enquiry without giving the accused an opportunity of being heard Held—That in the circumstances of the case, the accused should have been given an opportunity of being heard before the learned Sessions Judge at the hearing of the application under sec 437 Cr P C, he having been allowed to be present from the very commencement of the proceedings at the instance of the complainant Haridas Sanyal v. Saritullah, 1 L R 15 Cal 608 (F B) (1888) distinguished JOGESHI CHANDRA SEN v. NIKUNJA BEHARI CHOUDHURY 552 secs. 204 and 369—Magistrate ordering issue of process under sec 204, and then on a counter complaint rescinding that order and ordering enquiry under sec. 202, legality of—Order under sec 204, if a judgment. On a complaint being made, the Magistrate ordered issue of process under sec 204. Subsequently on that date a cross complaint being laid, the Magistrate rescinded the order and sent both the cases to a Subordinate Magistrate for local enquiry and report Held—That the order passed by the Magistrate under sec 204 was not a judgment to which the provisions of sec 369, Cr P C, would be applicable. There is nothing in the Code which forbids a Magistrate to reconsider an order of this kind on sufficient grounds. The order passed by the Magistrate was a right and proper order and it was not made without jurisdiction LALIT MOHON BHATTACHARJEE v. NONI LAL SARKAR 651

sec. 235, joint trial for charges under secs 218 and 477A, Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), for framing incorrect records and falsification of accounts, legality of—Question put to the Judge by the jury not in open Court but in chamber, how far an illegality and vitiates trial—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec 303, duty of Judge to question jury to ascertain verdict on each charge. A prostitute, who by a registered deed of gift, had given most of her properties to a certain person, died and a Sub-Inspector of Police took charge of the properties. The Sub-Inspector misappropriated some ornaments and changed the entries he had made in the Police General Diary regarding the said properties and inserted fresh pages showing that the property was never taken to the Thana. He was accordingly tried for criminal misappropriation, for criminal breach of trust under sec 409, for framing incorrect records under sec 218, and for falsification of accounts under sec 477A I P C, and he was convicted of offences punishable under secs 218 and 477A Held—That all the charges being in relation to acts which were so connected together as to form one transaction, they could be legally joined and tried at one trial. The facts constituting the falsification of records fell under two separate definitions of the law and the accused could be jointly charged and tried at one trial for these offences under sec 235, Cr P C. Where the jury after retiring to consider their verdict saw the Judge in his chamber for direction on certain points of law and asked him one question on a point of law, and the Judge with the jury went into the Court room, where, in the presence of the pleaders, certain questions were put by the jury and the answers given by the Judge were recorded Held—That the fact that one question was put to the Judge not in open Court was no more than an irregularity and did not vitiate the trial. Where the verdict was "not guilty" under secs 109 and 403, but "guilty" under secs 218 and 477A Held—That that was a sufficiently clear verdict. The jury were rightly taken by the Judge to mean that they acquitted the accused on all charges under sec 109 and the charge under sec 403 I P C, and there was no necessity for any question to ascertain what their verdict was BIJAS CHANDRA BANERJEE v. 262, 263--Trial of a warrant case as a summons case, effect of--Plea of accused--Warrant case--Summary trial--Procedure--Framing of charge.] Where a Magistrate in trying a warrant case in a summary way did not adopt the course prescribed by sec 252 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but convicted the accused on his own admission without taking evidence and without framing a formal charge, and passed an appealable sentence. Held--That the conviction was illegal, and the case was directed to be retried according to law. See 263 of the Criminal Procedure Code applies to cases in which no appeal lies and exempts the Magistrate from framing a formal charge in such cases. But there is no exemption in a case tried summarily in which, as in the present case, the sentence passed is appealable. One of the distinguishing points between a summons and a warrant case is that in a warrant case sufficient evidence to support the charge must be recorded before a charge can be framed and the accused called on to plead. NATABAR KHAN v THE KING-EMPEROR. 923 sec 342, mandatory--Stage at which the Magistrate should examine accused.] Where the accused was questioned by the Magistrate before all the witnesses for the prosecution had been examined, cross-examined and re-examined, the conviction was set aside and the case remanded to the lower Court for a fresh trial. KASHI PRAMANIK v. DAMU PRAMANIK. 28

sec. 342 (1)--Examination of the accused after the close of the prosecution case, it imperative--Failure to comply with this provision, it vitiates trial--"After the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined," meaning of--Practice of taking depositions in one case and having them copied and used in a connected case, propriety of--Examination of several witnesses by one Magistrate and completion of the trial by another Magistrate, propriety of.] In certain connected criminal cases the prosecution witnesses were examined and some of them cross-examined before the District Magistrate, and the accused was examined once before all the prosecution witnesses had been examined and again after all the prosecution witnesses had been examined but before all of them had been cross-examined. The cases were then made over to another Magistrate before whom the remaining prosecution witnesses were cross-examined and who convicted the accused. The depositions were taken in one of the cases and they were copied and used in the other cases. Held--That sec. 342 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code requires that the Magistrate shall question the accused generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined, cross-examined, and re-examined, if necessary. The provision is mandatory, and not having been complied with, the conviction was illegal. That it was improper to take depositions in one case and have them copied out and used in another case, and such a course should not be adopted in trials of criminal cases. Held, further--That a Magistrate who undertakes the trial of a criminal case and who also hears the witnesses give their evidence should, if possible, finish the examination of some witnesses by one Magistrate and completion of the trial by another Magistrate is an undesirable proceeding. MAZAHUR ALI v KING-EMPEROR. 99

sec 342--Examination of the accused at the close of the prosecution case, if mandatory--Non-compliance with the section if vitiates the trial--Intention of the Legislature in making this provision about the examination of the accused.] In a case under sec 500, I. P. C., the accused were called upon to plead on the 14th March 1922 and at that time they stated that they pleaded not guilty and also that they would both file written statements. The examination, cross-examination and re-examination of the prosecution witnesses were completed on the 12th April 1922 on which date the case was adjourned until the 25th for the purpose of the accused entering on their defence. On the 12th or the 25th no further examination of the accused took place. Held--That there was no compliance with the provisions of sec. 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The duty of the Magistrate under sec 342 arises when the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined, cross-examined and re-examined. The promise to file written statements made at the time of the plea in no way exonerated or exempted the Court from examining the accused at a later stage as required by sec 342. In this country it often happens that a prisoner is tried in a language which for one reason or another he understands but indifferently well and for that reason as well as for other equally grave reasons the intention of the statute is that at a certain stage in the case the Court itself shall put aside all counsel, all pleaders, all witnesses, all representatives, and shall call upon an individual accused with the authority of the Court's own voice to take advantage of the opportunity which then arises to state in his own way anything which he may be desirous of stating. It is important also to have regard to the time at which this examination should take place. To ask an accused for his defence before he has the whole of the prosecution evidence in front of him, is not a compliance with the section. And to ask the accused not at the beginning of his defence but later on when his statements may be subject to heavy discount owing to the evidence given in his hearing by his own witnesses in the meantime, is not to be assumed to be a substantial compliance with the requirements of the section. In this country an accused is not allowed to give evidence on his own behalf and in view of this sec 312 is of cardinal importance. There is all the difference in the world between a written statement, presumably prepared, almost certainly revised, by the lawyers appearing for the defence and a statement made by the accused himself so that the Magistrate can observe his demeanour and his manner while he makes it and come to his conclusions as to the value of his evidence. The trial became illegal from the moment when, without compliance with sec 312, the Magistrate called upon the accused to enter on their defence. PRO-MOTHO NATH MUKHOPADHYA v. KING-EMPEROR

s 342—Accused if may be examined after examination-in-chief of prosecution witness but before cross-examination—"Examination," meaning of—"Called on for his defence," meaning of; Held per Curiam (Cunning, J., contra)—That the provisions of sec 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code are not sufficiently complied with by examining the accused person after the prosecution witnesses have been examined-in-chief but before they have been cross-examined. In all cases, whether additional witnesses are called after a charge has been framed or not the obligatory examination of the accused under sec 342 of the Code should take place after all the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and cross-examined and before he is called on for his defence. Per Rankin J—The phrase "called on for his defence" in sec. 342, means the same thing as the phrase "called on to enter on his defence" or similar expressions in secs 256 and 289 of the Code. DEBA KANTA CHATTERJI v. s 403, conviction for possession of some stolen property, if legal, when the accused had previously been tried in respect of some other articles found in his possession on the same date and acquitted. Several articles of stolen property having been found in the possession of the Petitioner, he was charged in respect of some of them under sec 411 and acquitted. He was subsequently tried and convicted in respect of the other properties found in his possession on the same date. Held—That in the absence of evidence that the different articles which were the subject of the charges in the two trials were received at different times, the second trial was illegal under the provisions of sec 403, Cr P C. Ishan Muchi v. gross sum misappropriated within a period covering the date of the subject of the subsequent charge. A certain person was tried for criminal breach of trust under sec 409, Cr P C, in respect of a gross sum misappropriated within a specified period. The charge was withdrawn with the leave of the Court as no evidence was offered. He was subsequently prosecuted for criminal breach of trust under sec 408, Cr P C, in respect of a particular sum misappropriated on a date within the period covered by the previous charge under sec 409. Held—That the essence of the offence is the misappropriation and not the time within which it took place and that if the subject of the subsequent charge was not included in the gross sum, the offence subsequently charged is not the same as that in respect of which he was previously acquitted. Therefore the previous acquittal is no bar to the subsequent trial. Emperor v. Where the trial Court convicted the accused under sec 143, I P C, but acquitted them of the offence under sec 379, I P C, and the Appellate Court, while upholding the conviction under sec 143, I P C and the sentence, set aside the acquittal under sec 379. Held—That the Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to set aside the acquittal of the Petitioner when he upheld the conviction under sec 143, I P C. It was not a case of altering the conviction which was within his powers under sec 423 Cr P C. PRASANNA CHANDRA MAJUMDAR v. UPENDRA NATH SHAW ss. 454 and 451 (2), European British subject's right in a warrant case to claim trial by jury any time before he is called on to enter upon his defence—Previous waiver of the right, if irrevocable. In a warrant case the accused, a European British subject, said at an early stage that he did not want to be tried by a jury. After the framing of the charge, the accused claimed to be tried by a jury. Held—That sec 454 read with sec 451 (2) Cr P C, gives an accused European British subject the right to claim trial by jury any time before he is called on to enter upon his defence, and he is not clearly worded, was capable of the meaning placed upon it by the prosecution, viz., as alleging one general conspiracy to commit an offence or offences under sec. 420 of the Penal Code, the three transactions mentioned constituting overt acts, from which the conspiracy might be inferred, and as it appeared that the accused also understood the charge in the same sense, the objection was not fatal. That the fact that the three transactions were independent and occurred on different dates and that between those dates intervened many other transactions between the accused and the Government of India which were not proved to be fraudulent or dishonest was not inconsistent with the existence of one general conspiracy. A second charge against the accused was that they had between the 26th August 1918 and 10th December 1918 cheated the Government of India by dishonestly inducing them to deliver a cheque for Rs. 59,265, the property of the Government of India, in payment of five fraudulent bills for linseed oil and thereby committed an offence punishable under sec. 420 of the Penal Code. Held—That the charge should have contained an allegation of the person or persons deceived, and induced to issue the cheque, but the omission was not a fatal defect in the charge when it did not mislead the accused and there was no failure of justice by reason of it. That the fact that the five bills were presented at different dates did not make them matters for five separate offences, inasmuch as an offence under sec. 420 of the Penal Code in relation to any of them would not be complete until the cheque was issued, and one cheque having been obtained through the inducement of the said five fraudulent bills there was one offence only and not five offences of cheating. Held further—That though the prosecution had failed to prove inter alia that any official of the Government of India was deceived by reason of the fraudulent representations contained in the bills, and therefore an offence under sec. 420 of the Penal Code was not established, the evidence produced in support of the charge was sufficient to support a charge of an attempt or attempts on the part of the accused to commit the said offence. The offence of attempt to cheat was complete as soon as each of the bills was presented, and, under sec. 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the accused could be convicted of the attempt though not charged therewith. Held further—That the evidence in respect of the charge was, in any event, material on the question of conspiracy alleged in the first charge. The presentation of the said fraudulent bills was not the less dishonest because the accused expected them to be checked by the Government before being passed and the fact that they were checked and passed would not make the representation innocent. The interruption in the trial due to the Magistrate having been deputed during the course of the hearing to other work and delays for which the accused were not wholly responsible, commented upon. The strain, anxiety and mental suffering to which the accused must in consequence have been subjected during an unusually protracted trial were matters to be legitimately taken into consideration in passing sentence. Held—That the presumption under sec. 114 (e) of the Evidence Act applied to the case and the Petitioners were rightly convicted. Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Mr Sarwar Jan, 6 C. W. , sec. 363, kidnapping—Minor Mahomedan girl, lawful guardian of—Husband, if such guardian, when mother dead but mother's mother living.] The maternal uncle of a minor Mahomedan girl of 8 or 9 carried her away from her husband's house by force and was convicted under sec. 363, I. P. C., for kidnapping from lawful guardianship. Held—That the husband of a Mahomedan girl who has not attained puberty is not the lawful guardian of her person under the Mahomedan law, nor was the husband in the present case proved to have been lawfully entrusted with the care or custody of the minor so as to make the explanation to sec. 361, I. P. C., applicable. The lawful guardian of such a girl is ordinarily her mother and, when the mother is dead, the mother's mother. The maternal uncle therefore could not be convicted under sec. 363, I. P. C. DERAJUDDIN AKANDA v. THE EMPEROR .. 591

, sec. 415—Paying cheques knowing that they would be dishonoured and thereby inducing a race book-maker to allow bets on credit, if constitutes cheating—Allowing racing bets on credit, whether is an act which causes loss or damage to the book-maker.] A licensed book-maker of the Royal Calcutta Turf Club, on the assurance of the Opposite Party that he would pay up his losses, if any, punctually on the settling day, allowed the latter to take bets on credit. The Opposite Party failed to pay his debts and on different dates paid cheques to the Petitioner and induced him to accept further bets on credit. Held—That although it is clear that the Petitioner was deceived and thereby induced to take bets on credit from the Opposite Party, it cannot be said that the act which the Petitioner was induced to do

by reason of such deception had caused or was likely to cause damage or harm to him in body, mind, reputation or property. It did not follow that if the Petitioner had refused to take bets on credit, the Opposite Party would of a certainty have had to offer bets by paying cash. The Opposite Party might not have offered any bets at all. Therefore the offence of cheating cannot be said to have been committed. H. K. BHEDWAR v RAO SAHAT C S R RAO sec 503, service of notice on a person by a self-constituted Arbitration Court that an ex parte decree would be passed against him, if he did not attend the Court and answer the claim, whether amounts to criminal intimidation—Incompetency to execute the threat, material—Sec 44, "injury," meaning of. A certain President of a self-constituted Arbitration Court caused a notice to be issued over his signature to a certain person requesting the latter to be present on a given date and arrange for amicable settlement of a certain claim. The notice concluded with the statement that if the Defendant did not give an answer (or file written statement) on that date, the suit would be decreed ex parte. Held, per Buckland, J.—That a threat of a decree is a threat of harm to an individual in his person, reputation or property. That the tribunal is incompetent to execute its decree is immaterial. Sec 503, I P C, says nothing about the capacity of the person making the threat to carry it into execution. Nor does the section say anything about the effect upon the person threatened, and whether or not the complainant knew that the notice was innocuous is equally immaterial. Under sec 44, I P C, injury denotes harm illegally caused. By no legal process or means could this tribunal make or give effect to such a decree as it was the intention of the notice to cause the complainant to believe would be made if he failed to comply with it. Therefore in that the notice threatened the complainant with such a decree it threatened the complainant with harm to be caused illegally. The Petitioner therefore committed the offence of criminal intimidation. PRIYANATH GUPTA v. JAL JHI CHOWKIDAR

Additional District Magistrate, it may refer to High Court misconduct of pleader in Deputy Magistrate's Court—High Court, if may adopt report fairly made by Court not competent. Mr G., who was appointed Additional District Magistrate at Dacca with all the powers of a District Magistrate under the Criminal Procedure Code and was in charge of the criminal work of the District, hearing criminal appeals and reporting the progress of criminal work to the High Court, called for a report of an incident which took place during the trial of a criminal case in the Court of a Deputy Magistrate at Dacca and upon receiving such report framed charges under sec 13 (b) and (c) of the Legal Practitioners Act against three pleaders and a mukhtar. The latter having showed cause, Mr G. reported against them under sec 14 of the Act through the Sessions Judge who having heard counsel on their behalf upon the matter of the report forwarded it with his own opinion thereon to the High Court. They were both of opinion that one of them, Mr M., on retiring from the case in which he was appearing for the accused, had made gratuitous imputations against the fairness and impartiality of the trying Deputy Magistrate. Held—That the Additional District Magistrate was a Court subordinate to the High Court within the meaning of sec 14 of the Act and was competent to draw up the charge and report the matter to the High Court. That he followed the correct procedure as laid down in sec. 14 (c) in forwarding his report through the Sessions Judge. That even if he was incompetent the High Court would adopt the enquiry and report when it appeared that the charge was framed with particularity and precision and there was a full inquiry in which the legal practitioners in question showed cause and appeared by counsel or pleaders. The High Court is competent and ought in a proper case, to take action even without the intervention of a subordinate Court. Rasik Lal Nag, I L R 44 Cal 639 at p 647 s c. 20 C W N. 1284 (1916). referred to. A pleader making gratuitous and unfounded imputations in open Court against the fairness and impartiality of the tribunal in the trial of the case in which the pleader is appearing is guilty of grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty within the meaning of sec. 13 (b) of the Legal Practitioners Act and also of such misconduct as would come under sec 13 (f) of that Act. Pleaders have a duty not only towards their clients but also towards the Court of which they are pleaders, and it is part of their duty to co-operate with the Court in the orderly and pure administration of justice. The independence of the Bar can and ought to be maintained without making gratuitous and unfounded imputations upon the fairness and impartiality of the tribunal. Per Richardson.—The in-

Held —That it not having been suggested that the witnesses withheld were discarded by the Public Prosecutor on the ground that if examined they would not tell the truth, the accused was entitled to have them put in the box for cross-examination. Further, the Judge erred in holding that the accused could not set up an alternative defence which was inconsistent with the first defence set up by him. Although by setting up an inconsistent defence, the defence case becomes considerably weaker, there is nothing illegal in setting up an alternative and inconsistent defence, and the accused's pleader should have been allowed to argue the alternative defence before the jury. These illegal orders were sufficient to vitiate the trial since they were likely to prejudice the accused. NAGENDRA CHANDRA DHAR v. THE KING-EMPEROR ...	820

VISCOUNT CAVE.

RADHAKRISHNA
Ayyar and anr., Appellants,

v.

SUNDARASWAMIER, substituted for Swaminutha Ayyar,
Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), secs. 109, 110—Appealable value—Determination as to value by Court granting or refusing leave, if conclusive—Amount sued for, not sole criterion—Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908, Mad), sec. 77, suit under—Decree for one year, if res judicata in suits for subsequent years—Proper use of such decree—Secs. 27, 28—Past practice, reference to, for what purposes justified—Past practice, if derogates from statutory rights and obligations—Penal provision, construction of—Strict construction, if justifies departure from true construction

Since the repeal of the Order of Council of 10th April 1838 by a subsequent Order in Council, dated 9th February 1920, the value of the subject-matter of an appeal to His Majesty in Council is not concluded by the certificate of the Court admitting the appeal. Nevertheless, the Judicial Committee will always naturally and very greatly defer, on a subject of this nature, to the certificate given by the High Court.

The sum of money actually at stake may not represent the true value. The proceeding may, in many cases such as a suit for an instalment of rent or under a contract, raise the entire question of the contract relations between the parties and that question may, settled one way or the other, affect a much greater value, and its determination may govern rights and liabilities of a value beyond the limit.

BANARSI PARSHAD v. KASHI KRISHNA NARAIN (2) referred to.

In a suit for rent under Madras Act I of 1908, sec. 77, the Defendants being admittedly occupancy raiyats having permanency of tenure and other rights attaching to that position:

Held—That although past practice may have its weight as one of the elements which are considered in fixing under the Act what are the fair and equitable conditions of a particular puttah, it cannot derogate from the status, privileges, rights and obligations of the parties under the statute, and the raiyats cannot validly maintain that payments made during the course of 20 years should form the lines and limits of their obligations for all time.

PARTHASARATHY APPA ROW v. CHEVENDRA VENKATA NARASAYYA (3) referred to.

As muchukas decreed for any revenue year remain in force until the beginning of the year for which fresh ones are exchanged or decreed, the decision in respect of one Fasli year cannot operate as res judicata in regard to a dispute as to the rent payable in a subsequent Fasli year. But it stands to reason and is in accordance with secs. 27 and 28 of the Act that the old rent decreed shall continue until reduced or enhanced by special applications under the statute.

(3) L. R. 37 I. A. 110; s. c. 14 C. W. N. 938 (1910).

RADHAKRISHNA AYYAR v. SUNDARASWAMIER.

Even in regard to penal provisions, with a strict construction, it is a sound general principle that no construction is open to a Court of Law which is in violation of what that Court considers to be the true meaning of the provisions.

This was an appeal against a decree of the High Court of Madras dated the 14th November 1916, which varied a decree of the District Judge of Tanjore, dated the 18th January 1915, on appeal from a decree of the Revenue Divisional Officer of Kumbakonam, dated the 28th June 1913.

The suit was originally brought under sec. 77 of the Madras Estates Land Act I of 1908 by the Receiver of certain family property for rent alleged to be due from the Defendants who were occupancy raiyats.

The questions for determination arose on the construction of a puttah the material portions of which are set out in the judgment of the Board.

The Defendants (Appellants) contended that the puttah was not a proper one to be forced on the tenants under Madras Act I of 1908. The lower Courts decided that this question was "res judicata" by reason of decisions on the puttah under Madras Act VIII of 1865. The suit came before the Board on 3rd December 1920, [Radhakrishna v. Sarinatha (4)], when an objection was taken by the Respondent to the form of the certificate issued by the High Court. A further order and certificate, issued by the High Court but inadvertently, excluded from the record, was now produced, and the appeal came before the Board for decision.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Respondent took a preliminary objection that no appeal to the Board lay in this suit as the subject-matter was under Rs. 10,000.

He referred to:—Radha Kunwar v. Reoti Singh (5) and Ramchand Manjimal v. Goverdhandas Vishindas Ratanchand (6). The Court below have certified the value of the subject-matter and the question is whether the Board can go behind that certificate.

Banarsi Parshad v. Kashi Krishna Narain (2) and Radha Krishna Das v. Rai Kishen Chand (7).

Sir G. R. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Appellants on the preliminary point argued that in cases such as this you can capitalize the rent for purposes of valuation, and the real difference between the parties was considerably more than Rs. 10,000. He referred to an Order in Council of 10th April 1838, Bentwich's Privy Council Practice, p. 146 and Safford and Wheeler's Privy Council Practice, p. 491.

[VISCOUNT CAVE intimated that the Board would reserve this point and would hear the arguments of Counsel on the appeal generally.]

Sir G. R. Lowndes, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellants.—The suit is for arrears of rent under Act I of 1908.

I have refused to accept the puttah tendered to me by the inamdar and it is not binding on me. The inamdar contends that I am bound to accept it because it was decreed against me under Act VIII of 1865.

The latter has been replaced by Act I of 1908.

Para. 8 of the puttah though good under the old Act would be at variance with sec. 74 (3) of the new Act, and the word "decreed" under sec. 52 (3) of the new Act does not mean decreed under the old Act.

Decreed now means decreed as a proper puttah according to the provisions of the new Act.

The Act of 1865 made rent depend on contract, the Act of 1908 imports other considerations, i.e., is it "fair and equitable."

Even if the terms of the puttah are binding on me a custom had arisen, recognized by both landlord and tenant, as to the amount payable on taking away the crop, and the terms of cl. 8 were not referred to by either side.

Parthasarathi Appa Row v. Chevendra Venkata Narasayya (3).

If the construction is as contended by the mamdar, then his suit is not for rent but for a penalty—and such a suit does not lie in the Revenue Court.

DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Respondent.—The acceptance of the puttah does not amount to a contract but it is evidence of the terms of a pre-existing tenancy.

Shanmuga Mudaly v. Palnati Kuppu Chetty (8).

This puttah has been in existence since 1881 and every year there has been a dispute with some of the tenants as to its terms and the Courts have decided in the landlord's favour.

On two occasions decrees have been made against these very tenants and no application has ever been made for reduction or enhancement.

The crop has been carried away by the tenants and cl. 8 of the contract comes into operation.

This provides that a rent of 170 Kalams per veli is payable, an amount which has been calculated as a reasonable assessment of the landlord's probable share, and not as a penalty.

Sir G. R. Lowndes, K. C. in reply

Urged that the very real difficulty experienced in construing the puttah was ample proof that it was not a "proper" puttah to force on a raiyat

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal against a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Madras dated the 14th November 1916. It varied a decree of the District Judge of Tanjore dated the 18th January 1915. The suit between the parties was brought in the Revenue Court of Kumbakonam under the Madras Estates Land Act, No. 1 of 1908, sec. 77. The claim of the Plaintiff was for rent said to have accrued and to be due by the Defendants in respect of their holdings in accordance with the terms of a puttah which will be afterwards noted. No further reference is required to the various stages of the litigation.

A preliminary question, however, is raised as to whether the appeal is competent. It is pointed out by the Respondent, who makes the objection, that the rent sued for amounted to Rs. 4,560, being rent for three years in arrear. The Respondent accordingly contends that it sufficiently appears that the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit is not Rs. 10,000, as required by secs. 109 and 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908; and upon the case reaching this Board their Lordships, on the 3rd December 1920, held that the certificate quoad value was at least ambiguous, and that such certificates "ought to be given in such a form that it is impossible to mistake their meaning on their face."

RADHAKRISHNA AIYAR & SUNDARASWAMI ER.

The only order then before the Board was in these terms :—

"It is hereby certified that as regards the value of the subject-matter and the nature of the question involved the case fulfils the requirements of secs 109 and 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council," and upon that the previous judgment of the Board proceeded. It now appears, however, that the above was not the only order, and that the parties had failed to bring up the order embracing the actual certificate and granted on the same day.

It is admitted by both parties that there did exist in the proceedings an order of the 21st September 1917, in the following terms :—

"We hold that the subject-matter is of a value greater than Rs 10,000, with reference to Gooipersad Khoond v Juggut Chunder (1) and that a substantial question of law is involved. We therefore certify that the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council with reference to secs 109 and 110 of the Civil Procedure Code"

In their Lordships' opinion, this certificate is sufficiently clear, and is not open to the objections under which the former certificate under argument before the Board stood condemned.

The point, however, which still remains is whether that certificate must be accepted by the Board as conclusive, the actual sum in figures which is sued for being what it is, and so much smaller than Rs. 10,000.

The ruling provision as to certificates of value was No. 2 of the schedule to the Order in Council of the 10th April 1888. It is to the following effect :—

(1) 8 M. L. A. 166 (1860).

"That in all cases in which any of such courts shall admit an appeal to Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, in Council, it shall specially certify on the proceedings that the value of the matter in dispute in such appeal amounts to the sum of 10,000 company's rupees or upwards, which certificate shall be deemed conclusive of the fact, and not be liable to be questioned on such appeal by any party to the suit appealed"

It is admitted that at the date of the appeal this Order was in operation, and it accordingly governs the case, and, so far as the Board is concerned, it concludes the question of competency quoad value. In some of the cases which have occurred, it would rather appear as if the provisions of this Order had been left out of view.

On a date subsequent to the filing of this appeal, namely, the 9th February 1920, the Order was repealed by an Order in Council, passed by His Majesty on the date mentioned. While, however, in cases subsequent to that date, the value of the subject-matter of the appeal is not concluded by the certificate of the Court below, then Lordships desire to make these two observations :—In the first place, the sum of money actually at stake may not represent the true value. The proceeding may, in many cases, such as a suit for an instalment of rent or under a contract, raise the entire question of the contract relations between the parties and that question may, settled one way or the other, affect a much greater value, and its determination may govern rights and liabilities of a value beyond the limit [Banarsi Parshad v. Kashi Krishna Narain (2)]. The Courts below may accordingly with propriety, as was done in this case, make the necessary certificate. In the second place, whether they did so or not, while their Lordships would, of course, be free, if greater value in the sense mentioned were established, to proceed with the appeal, yet they will always naturally and very greatly defer, on a subject of this nature, to the certificate given by the High Court.

The objection to the competency of the appeal is accordingly repelled.

Their Lordships proceed to the merits of the appeal.

The original Plaintiff in the suit was a Receiver appointed by the Court and the Plaintiff-Respondent is his successor and represents the proprietors of an inam village called Kadugamangalam. It is a matter of admission that the Appellants are occupancy ryots of certain of the village lands, having the permanency of tenure and the other rights attaching to that position under the law of Madras. Their Lordships desire to make it clear that nothing that has passed between these litigants during the long course of years, in which the law has been so frequently invoked, constitutes a derogation from the status, privileges, rights and obligations of parties under the Madras Land Acts. The provisions, for instance, of Chap. V of the Act as to the payment of arrears of rent, and the appraisement and division of produce, as also those of Chap. IV, dealing with puttahs and muchilkas, can be appealed to and are plainly applicable.*

In particular, it should be noted that Chap. IV of the Act as is specially provided for by sec. 50, applies to all ryots with a permanent right of occupancy, and by sec. 52 accordingly puttahs and muchilkas may be exchanged for periods of one or more revenue years; but no landholder shall be bound to tender, and no ryot to accept, a puttah for a period of more than one revenue year. It appeared to be maintained for the Appellants that payments made during the course of 20 years should form the lines and limits of the ryots' obligations for all time. Setting aside the manifest contradiction by this of the actual relations of these parties, the Board has, in view of the argument, thought it right to express its opinion that the statutory rights and obligations of parties have not been thus impinged upon. Past practice may, of course, have its weight as one of the elements which are considered in fixing under the Act what are the fair and equitable conditions of a particular puttah [Sri Raja Parthasarathi Appa Row Savaiaswa Row Bahadur Zemindar Garu v. Chevendra Venkata Narasayya (3)].

Under the Madras Estates Act I of 1908, the inamdar, on the 28th October 1908, tendered a puttah for Faslî 1318 to the tenants and demanded from them a muchilka, but the tenants refused to accept the puttah, or to execute a muchilka. Puttahs, in identical terms having been also offered and refused, and no muchilkas having been executed for the two following years, Faslî 1319 and 1320, the suit was instituted on the 15th December 1911. It resulted in a decree for Rs. 4,367-7-3.

It may be stated that it was admitted that there had been numerous suits and numerous decrees in which the rights of the inamdar had been determined in accordance with puttahs substantially, if not entirely, in the same terms as those tendered in the present suit. The plaint correctly states: "Puttahs were tendered for the under-mentioned occupancy right lands in the enjoyment of the Defendants for Faslîs 1318, 1319, and 1320, duly according to custom and in conformity with the previous judgments, by the first Defendant in O. S. No. 61 of 1904, who was managing during the said Faslîs."

In 1902, the inamdar had sued and on the 19th April 1904, the Divisional Officer pronounced judgment in the Plaintiff's favour, and he expressed himself thus :—

"I consider that the dispute between the parties relating to the suit Fasli is identical with those decided in the previous Fasls in the judgments referred to above, and that no special pleas or circumstances are urged with reference to the suit Fasli for any fresh adjudication."

Their Lordships pause to say that they may repeat in terms this dæctum which was pronounced 18 years ago. It is a truly deplorable circumstance that judicial time should have been occupied and the substance of parties wasted by litigation over a further period of 18 years, for settling practically the same point. The careful provisions made by legislation for the steady protection from year to year of the rights of occupancy ryots on the one hand, and inamdars and other landlords on the other, have been put on one side and fruitless and repeated litigations have been indulged in.

But in the judgment referred to, the Divisional Officer proceeds —

"I therefore find that the previous judgments are res judicata in these suits as they have gone fully into the question of custom relating to the different stipulations in the puttah."

However natural it may have been to treat the position thus, their Lordships cannot sustain on legal grounds the plea of res judicata here suggested. In the language of the High Court :—

"The answer is that the general doctrine of res judicata is not in question, but the application of the special rule stated in sec 52 (3), Estates Land Act, under which muchilkas decreed for any revenue year remain in force until the beginning of the year, for which fresh ones are exchanged or decreed, and that there is no reason for restricting the scope of the general reference to muchilkas decreed to those decreed by any particular description of Court."

With this view the Board is in full agreement

The inamdar having again tendered puttahs in terms of sec 54 and the other relative sections, and the tenants having notwithstanding previous decrees again refused to accept the terms or to grant muchilkas, and the terms of the puttahs having been entirely approved by the Collector, the present suit had to be brought. The puttahs tendered are in terms of previous puttahs upon which judgment and decree was passed. It stands to reason, and it is in accordance with secs. 27 and 28 that the old rent thus decreed shall continue, until reduced or enhanced by special applications under the statute. No such applications have been made. All that remains in the case is the correct interpretation of the puttahs.

The argument presented to the Board involved the construction of the two cls. 1 and 8. These clauses are as follows :—

"1 Out of the 32 pankus in the aforesaid village, the lands comprised in the 5/8 panku which is in your enjoyment, viz, Ayan nanja of the extent of 2 Velis 3 Mahs 4 Kulis and 13 cents and Padugue panja nanja of the extent of 5 Mahs 38 Kulis and 59 cents, in all, nanja of the extent of 2 Velis 8 Mahs 43 Kulis and 8 cents, you shall cultivate at the proper seasons fertilizing them in all ways; harvest the crops that are grown, after the same have been estimated by our agents in the presence of (our) agents and others and under their orders and supervision, leaving the stubbles as is the practice with the Government Amani lands; stock in heaps on the threshing-floor the residue of the total yield of paddy that is left after paying the reapers' wages at the rate of 1 marakal per kalam and the Thalaiyan, Narandhiran paddy payable at the threshing-floor at the rate of 1 marakal per 15 kalams; and after the harvesting has been completed, you shall apportion in heaps our Melvaram due at the rate of 60 kalams for 100 kalams of paddy in the case of Ayan nanja and at the rate of 57 kalams for 100 kalams in the case of Podugoi punja nanja under the Sudder Court decree in Suit No. 68 of 1847 and in acknowledgment of our having received the Melvaram paddy, obtain a receipt from our agents"

"8. Even if the aforesaid nanja lands be not cultivated at the proper seasons, even if they be cultivated negligently, if they be allowed to lie fallow without being cultivated, even if damage of crops be caused by failure to harvest the crops at the right time, even if the yield be carried away, either without acting in accordance with the conditions specified in paragraph 1 herein, or without division of Varam, and even if nanja land be filled up (and raised in level) and punja cultivation made thereon, you shall pay at the rate specified in para 1 herein our Melvaram paddy in respect of the total yield of paddy calculated at an average of 170 kalams and 4 marakals per veli of nanja, the kadappu and kar produce being payable within the 15th of December, and the samba and pisanam produce by the 15th March"

What had happened in the present case was that during the Fasli years in question, the tenants in contravention of the terms of these puttahs had carried away the yield, without any of the proceedings with regard to the apportionment, in heaps, of the melvaram due to the landlord having taken place.

The obligations under cl. 1 having thus not been complied with, cl. 8 came into operation, which applied to various contingencies, including the following: "If the yield be carried away . . . without acting in accordance with the conditions specified in paragraph 1." In that contingency "you shall pay at the rate specified in paragraph 1 herein our melvaram paddy in respect of the total yield of paddy calculated at an average of 170 kalams and 4 marakals per veli of nanja, the kadappu and kar produce being payable within the 15th of December, and the samba and pisanam produce by the 15th of March."

The question is: In this stipulation, what is the meaning of the expression "the total yield of paddy," and in particular what is the application of the stipulation to the case of an oodu crop, that is, a crop sown together, one part of which takes only three months to ripen and be reaped, and another part of which takes eight months to ripen and be reaped? Is the return as to "the total yield of paddy" satisfied by payment of 170 kalams for the total yield of one of the portions? The Appellants maintain that it is.

It is well to have clearly in view what is the practice with regard to such a paddy crop. It is thus described in Mr Hemmingway's work on Tanjore in the Madras District Gazetteer, p 93.

"It has become usual in a good many places to mix a kuruvai and a samba crop on what is called the udu or ottadai system of cultivation. The species of samba used is the ottadai paddy, an eight months' crop from which the name of the system is derived. The amount of kuruvai used in this combination exceeds the samba largely, sometimes by as much as five to one. Ottadai is generally sown in the first-crop season. The more quickly matured variety is harvested first, and the ryot thereby secures a return for his labour both at the kuruvai and the samba harvests. The two kinds of grain are mixed in the seed-beds and the seedlings are planted indiscriminately."

The Appellants' counsel forcibly maintain that the payment of 170 kalams was a penal provision, and that, therefore, that provision ought to be most strictly construed.

It must not be forgotten that even in regard to penal provisions with a strict construction, no construction is open to a Court of Law which is in violation of what that Court considers to be the true meaning of the provision. That is a sound general principle.

But the Board, having considered the argument upon the clause, are of opinion that the rent of 170 kalamas was not a penal rent, but was a substituted rent. The true rent, had the tenants complied with their obligations, would have been a percentage of the yield: but were the harvest to be bodily carried away, it was necessary to provide for such a case, and this was done by cl 8 which imposed no penalty as such, but simply set forth a figure which, upon the whole, might be reckoned a reasonable fractional substitute for the actual percentage, which, owing to the tenants' conduct, had been rendered unascertainable.

Is, however, the stipulation applicable to the whole harvest of a mixed crop reaped at separate times, or is it applicable only to the first harvesting? "You shall pay," says cl 8, "at the rate specified in para. 1 in respect of the total yield of paddy calculated at an average of 170 kalamas": but then it is added that the early rice (kadappu kur) produce is payable in December and the samba, which is the late harvest produce, is payable in March. Putting that alongside of the subsequent obligation which was, under cl. 1, "to stock in heaps on the threshing-floor the residue of the total yield of paddy" (the same phrase as is used in cl 8), then Lordships have no doubt that the substituted rent applied to the yield of each portion of the crop, exactly as the setting aside on the threshing-floor was applicable to each portion. They are of opinion that the High Court has come to a correct conclusion upon this topic.

Their Lordships desire to add that a question of straw, insignificant in amount, was not argued, the very proper arrangement of both parties at the Bar being that that would stand or fall with the judgment of the Court below.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be refused with costs

v.

JAMNA PRASAD, since deceased, and ors.,
Respondents.

Secondary evidence of deed, admissibility—Evidence of loss given by person, in whose custody it should be, when to be disbelieved—Deed of sale, if may be nullified by simple surrender—Right of purchaser of one mortgaged property to redeem all properties mortgaged—Deedings with equity of redemption by mortgagor after sale thereof, if admissible in evidence against purchaser in favour of vendor's representatives, and if evidence of adverse possession, when mortgaged property in possession of mortgagor.

If a witness in whose custody a deed should be depose to its loss, unless there is some motive suggested for his being untruthful, his evidence should ordinarily be accepted as sufficient to let in secondary evidence of the deed.

When a deed of sale has once been executed and registered, it can only be avoided by a subsequent registered transfer.

the liability for it between the properties. He can redeem the one property on payment of the charge upon the whole and is entitled to do so.

Where a mortgagor of a usufructuary mortgage after having sold the equity of redemption went on dealing with it as if it still subsisted:

Held—That these subsequent dealings, if regarded as declarations in his own favour, could not be received in evidence on behalf of persons claiming under him. Nor could such dealings be regarded as acts of ownership so as to prove adverse possession, the possession remaining in the mortgagee.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 3rd May 1915, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which reversed a judgment and decree, dated the 23rd October 1912, and the 29th March 1913, of the Additional Judge of Hardoi.

The main question for determination on the present appeal was whether the Plaintiff-Appellant, who claimed to be the purchaser of the equity of redemption, had established his title to redeem the mortgages in suit. The Court of first instance found for the Plaintiff, and allowed his claim, but the Appellate Court has held the contrary and dismissed the Plaintiff's suit.

The facts of the case may be shortly stated as follows:—

One Ehsan Ali was the owner of a market called Bazar Ehsanganj, including shops, etc., in Qasba Asiwan in the District of Unao in Oudh, and as such he was entitled to collect market dues from the shop-keepers and others who carried on business in the said market. In 1873 the annual collection amounted to Rs. 404. Ehsan Ali from time to time borrowed money from Sheo Prasad, father of Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and the grandfather of Defendants Nos. 3 and 4, and executed deeds of usufructuary mortgages in favour of the lender. The first, dated the 9th November 1873, was for Rs. 1,000, and the second, dated the 19th September 1875, was for Rs. 500. There were three other bonds, which the Defendants contend were deeds of further charge, dated the 4th May 1876, 16th September 1876, and 11th January 1878.

By the first deed the said mortgagor (Ehsan Ali) mortgaged "Bazar Ehsanganj inclusive of the Hakiat in all the shops situated in the said Bazar" and delivered over possession to the said mortgagee for a term of six years, and authorized the mortgagee to collect market dues to the extent of Rs. 244 per annum. The mortgagee on his part agreed to appropriate the sum of Rs. 180 per annum in lieu of interest on the principal amount, and Rs. 24 per annum for the wages of the Chaukidar, and to pay the balance of Rs. 40 to the mortgagor. The deed provided for an adjustment of accounts at the time of redemption.

By the second deed the mortgagee was empowered to collect the rest of the annual dues amounting to Rs. 160, and agreed to appropriate Rs. 90 per annum in lieu of interest on the principal, and to apply the remaining sum of Rs. 70 per annum in reduction of the principal.

It is unnecessary to specify the terms of the remaining three bonds.

The Plaintiffs alleged that on the 13th December 1882, the said mortgagor, Ehsan Ali, sold his equity of redemption in the mortgaged property mentioned above to Sakhawat Ali (Plaintiff No. 1) and Ewaz Ali (since deceased) and that the sons of the vendee last named subsequently sold their interest to the present Appellant Ehtisham Ali (Plaintiff No. 2)

M. EHTISHAM ALI v. JAMNA PRASAD.

The deed of sale dated the 13th December 1882, purported to be signed by Ehsan Ali, and appeared to be attested by three witnesses and was duly registered. The price was Rs. 3,000, out of which Rs. 200 was stated to have been paid in cash, and with reference to the remainder the deed provided as follows:—

“Out of this sum, I have left Rs. 2,800 with the vendee for the purpose of making payment to the said mortgagee and defraying Court expenses. The said vendee having paid the money to the said mortgagee and having taken its receipt and the mortgage-deeds, may enter into possession (of the mortgaged property). . . .

“As exchange of considerations has taken place between the contracting parties now no claim or dispute regarding the property sold and its consideration money is left to me or my heirs and representatives against the vendees and their representatives. If, per chance, at present or in future I or my heirs and representatives put forward any claim or dispute against the vendees or their representatives then it be untenable and not heard.”

On the 16th October 1911, the said Sakhawat Ali and Ehtisham Ali instituted the present suit to redeem the said mortgages, dated the 9th November 1872, and 19th September 1875. They further claimed to redeem the bonds, dated the 1th May 1876, 16th September 1876, and 11th January 1878, if the Court held that those bonds amounted to deeds of further charge. The Plaintiffs stated that the Defendants-mortgagees were in possession of the mortgaged property; and that the entire sum due to the mortgagees under all the bonds held by them had been discharged from rents and profits of the mortgaged property. The Plaintiffs therefore claimed to recover from the Defendants possession of the mortgaged property, and such moneys as were found due from them after the rendition of account by the mortgagee.

The Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 filed a written statement denying the claim of the Plaintiffs. They pleaded, among other things, that the Plaintiffs did not derive any title to the equity of redemption on the following grounds:—

“The sale-deed, mentioned in para. 10 of the plaint, set up by the Plaintiffs, is not genuine and for consideration, nor did any right accrue to the transferees in accordance with the same.

“The vendees, mentioned in the sale-deed, did not pay any consideration money to Ehsan Ali Khan: and because the mortgage-money due to the mortgagees had much exceeded the valuation of the property, the said vendees refused to incur any expenses. Accordingly the said Ehsan Ali Khan, having cancelled the aforesaid deed, rejected it. The sale-deed was not, in any way, acted upon, and the proprietary possession of Ehsan Ali Khan remained intact. The Plaintiffs' statement that the said sale-deed has been lost is absolutely wrong.

“That the Plaintiffs and their predecessors never held possession over the property in dispute. As a matter of fact, in contravention of the terms of the sale-deed set up by the Plaintiffs, the mortgagor, Mohammad Ehsan Ali Khan, was himself in adverse possession of the property and exercised proprietary rights and used to deny the Plaintiffs' rights. Therefore, even if any right accrued to the Plaintiffs, it was extinguished in consequence of the adverse possession of Mohammad Ehsan Ali Khan.”

The suit was tried by the Additional Judge of Hardoi, who framed a number of issues. As the Appellate Court confining its decision to the question of the Plaintiffs' title alone, it is necessary to refer here to the 1st and 6th issues only. They were the following :—

(1) Whether Plaintiffs are purchasers of the rights of the mortgagee Ehsan Ali Khan by deeds dated the 13th December 1882, 10th January 1909, and 16th February 1911?

(6) (a) Are the Plaintiffs' deeds of sale invalid for being without consideration and because they have not been acted upon?

(b) Can Defendants raise this plea?

In support of their claim the Plaintiffs relied upon the deed of sale dated the 13th December 1882. In spite of their endeavours the Plaintiffs stated that they had failed to obtain the original of the said deed of sale from their vendors, who represented that they had lost the original document. The Plaintiffs examined their vendor Hashmat Ali, the son of the said Ewaz Ali, and he deposed that his deceased father had the original of the sale-deed, and that he had searched for it but could not find it. The Plaintiffs also examined one Wahid-ul-Hasan, whom the Additional Judge described as "a very respectable man," to prove the loss of the original sale-deed.

The learned Additional Judge who heard the witnesses recorded his estimate of their evidence in the following words :—

"The evidence of these men is unimpeachable. This is the best evidence I can think of, under the circumstances, to prove the loss. There is not an atom of evidence to rebut it. I am convinced that the sale-deed was lost by the sons of Ewaz Ali. It is in evidence of Hashmat Ali, that he had seen the sale-deed amongst the papers of his father, but at the time he was assigning his and his two brothers' share, he searched for it and found it was not there. The loss having been proved the Plaintiffs are entitled to prove the sale-deed by producing secondary evidence."

The Plaintiffs therefore proceeded to prove the terms of the said deed of sale by filing a certified copy thereof, and examined two witnesses, Fazal Karim and Ghadir-ul-huda, who deposed that the said deed of sale was executed in their presence and that Rs 200 were paid in cash to the mortgagor, Ehsan Ali. The learned Additional Judge believed the evidence of those witnesses and said as follows :—

"The evidence of Plaintiffs' witness No. 1 and Plaintiffs' witness No. 2, who were present at the place where the sale-deed was executed, in my opinion, satisfactorily proves the deed and the passing of the consideration, viz., that Rs. 200 were paid and that the rest, Rs. 2,800, were left with the vendees to pay off the prior mortgages. I hold therefore that the sale-deed in favour of Sakhawat Ali, Plaintiff No. 1, and Ewaz Ali Khan—now represented by Plaintiff No. 2—executed by Ehsan Ali Khan on the 13th December 1882, is proved to have been executed for consideration."

The said Additional Judge delivered judgment on the 23rd October 1912. He found that the Plaintiffs were the purchasers of the equity of redemption, and that they were entitled as such to redeem all the five mortgages. He said as follows :—

"It is contended by the Defendants that the sale-deed (Ex 5) was never acted upon, as Ehsan Ali after executing it had continually disposed of the same property to the Defendant's father, c.g., they cite the following nine instances in which the property was disposed of.

"The plea raised in this connection that Ehsan Ali Khan remained in adverse possession of the equity of redemption, after the sale effected in Sakhawat and Ewaz Ali Khan's favour, is untenable.. A man who has never been in possession of the property before or after the sale made in Sakhawat and Ewaz Ali's favour, can by no stretch of arguments be said to be in adverse possession.

"There remains the question, whether Defendants can raise the plea of want of consideration. My answer is, that they cannot. (Vide 8 O. C., p 159).

"Even the vendor would not have been entitled to evade the sale-deed, on the ground that no consideration passed.

"The title to the property having passed by the registration of the sale-deed under sec. 54, Act IV of 1882, the vendor's remedy was to sue for the sale consideration."

The learned Additional Judge further held that the mortgagées had realized more money than what they were entitled to under the five bonds above-mentioned. He therefore made a decree in terms following, on the 29th March 1913 :—

"The Plaintiffs' claim be and is hereby decreed for possession by redemption of the property mortgaged under deeds dated 9th November 1873, and 19th September 1875, without payment of any sum to the Defendants. I hereby further direct that a decree for recovery of Rs. 9,012-12-8 be also passed in terms of the account prepared [Ex Z (3)] in favour of the Plaintiffs.

"Plaintiffs will get their full costs in this suit."

The Defendants appealed from the said decree of the Additional Judge to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, and filed their petition of appeal on the 30th July 1913, that is, some days after the expiry of the period prescribed for filing. The learned Judicial Commissioners delivered judgment on the 3rd May 1915. They held that the Defendants' appeal was filed within time, and that if it were not there were circumstances which justified them in admitting the appeal under sec. 5 of the Indian Limitation Act. On the merits they held that they "are not satisfied that the Plaintiffs have succeeded in satisfactorily establishing the loss of the original sale-deed or in proving that they have a subsisting right to the equity of redemption." The learned Judicial Commissioners were unable to believe the witnesses on whose evidence the said Additional Judge found in favour of the Plaintiffs. They held that the acts and conduct of the mortgagor Ehsan Ali after the date—13th December 1882—of the sale to the Plaintiffs, were admissible for the purpose of ascertaining the validity and genuineness of the said sale. The result therefore was that the learned Judicial Commissioners allowed the appeal of the Defendants, set aside the decree of the Additional Judge, and made a decree dismissing the claim of the Plaintiffs with costs in both Courts.

From the said decree of the Judicial Commissioners the Plaintiffs appealed to His Majesty in Council, and all the rights and interest possessed by the Plaintiff Sakhawat Ali (since deceased) having been transferred to the Appellant Ehtisham Ali, the latter alone prosecuted this appeal.

Mr. B. Dubé in reply referred to Bombay Cotton Manufacturing Co., Ltd. v. Motilal Shiolal (4).

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD PHILLIMORE.—Ehsan Ali Khan, being in possession of a bazaar called Ehsaganj, mortgaged it to Sheo Prasad

by a mortgage dated the 9th November 1873, and further encumbered it with charges in favour of the mortgagee, the total amounting to Rs. 2,073. The mortgage was a usufructuary one, and the mortgagee was put in possession of the bazaar. Along with the bazaar certain other properties were also mortgaged. On the 13th December 1882, Ehsan Ali Khan is said by the Plaintiff, who is the present Appellant, to have sold the property, subject to the mortgage and charges, to the Appellant's predecessor in title for Rs. 3,000, it being calculated that Rs. 2,800 would be the amount of the encumbrances with interest and costs and Rs. 200 the value of the equity of redemption. Therefore only Rs. 200, as the Plaintiff alleges, was paid to Ehsan Ali Khan. The devolution of the property thus sold, if it was in fact sold, from the original vendees to the Appellant is not in dispute.

On the 16th October 1911, the Plaintiff (the present Appellant), with another co-Plaintiff whose interest he has since acquired, instituted this suit, claiming under the alleged deed of sale and the subsequent devolution to be representatives of the original mortgagor, against the Respondents, who are the representatives of Sheo Prasad, the original mortgagee, asserting their title to redeem and alleging that upon the true taking of the accounts the mortgage charges had been fully paid off, that certain terms as to interest and compound interest were penal or illegal, and that, in truth, money was due to them from the representatives of the mortgagee. They prayed for possession, for a decree for the surplus amounts and for other relief.

The Defendants traversed the statements in the plaint and pleaded that the alleged deed was not genuine or for consideration; that no right accrued from it to the vendees; that they did not pay any consideration money to Ehsan Ali Khan and refused to complete; that, accordingly, Ehsan Ali Khan cancelled the deed and retained his interest, that he in fact dealt with it subsequently by further charges in favour of the mortgagee and by professing to sell it over again to Wasi-uz-zaman, who also in his turn repudiated the sale because the property was not worth it; and they relied upon the supposed adverse possession of Ehsan Ali Khan. They further said that on some occasion without date, but subsequent to the transactions already mentioned, Ehsan Ali Khan finally sold to them his equity of redemption for Rs. 10, and, somewhat inconsistently, they said that the heirs of Ehsan Ali Khan, who by this time was dead, were necessary parties to the suit. However, they offered no evidence in support of the Rs. 10 story. Upon these pleadings the Subordinate Judge framed twelve issues, of which the first, sixth and tenth are material for the purpose of the present appeal. They are as follows. -

"1. Whether Plaintiffs are purchasers of the rights of the mortgagor, Ehsan Ali Khan, by deeds dated the 13th December 1882, the 10th January 1909 and the 16th February 1911

"6. (a) Are the Plaintiffs' deeds of sale invalid for being without consideration and because they have not been acted upon?

"(b) Can Defendants raise this plea?

"10. Are the sons of Ewaz Ali Khan and the heirs of Ehsan Ali Khan necessary parties to the suit?"

During the trial the Plaintiffs stated that the original sale deed was lost, but that it had been registered; and they offered as secondary evidence a copy certified by the Registrar; and the first matter to be determined is whether the copy could be admitted as secondary evidence. The Plaintiffs, for the purpose of proving the loss, called the son of Ewaz Ali Khan, who deposed that he, on behalf of himself and his brother, sold their share of the property to the second Plaintiff, the present Appellant, that he was asked to hand the sale deed over; that he had seen it among his father's papers; that he searched for it and could not find it. They also called another witness who had acted as agent in the matter, who said that he had asked the son for the deed; that he understood that he searched for it, but he said he could not find it. Neither of these witnesses was cross-examined. But the case made by the Defendants in their written statement was insisted upon, namely, that the deed had not been kept by the vendees, but had been handed back to Ehsan Ali Khan because the transaction had become abortive. No evidence, however, was given to prove this contention as a substantive fact except evidence to show that, as pleaded, Ehsan Ali Khan had subsequently to the alleged transaction dealt with the property as if he had not sold it and in the manner pleaded in the Defendants' written statement.

In these circumstances the Subordinate Judge accepted the evidence that the deed was lost, and allowed the copy from the register to be admitted as evidence. The Plaintiffs then put it in, and, further, produced two witnesses who swore that they had seen the deed signed and Rs. 200 paid over. These witnesses were the servants of one Imtiaz Ali, a gentleman of position, and an uncle of the Plaintiff, Sakhawat Ali. And it appeared in evidence that Imtiaz Ali had negotiated the sale probably with a view to the benefit of his nephew. His servants therefore might very naturally have had knowledge of the transaction. There were three witnesses to the deed, but it was proved that they were all dead. It was not disputed that the copy produced at the trial was a correct copy from the register, and that the deed had apparently been registered with all due formalities, though there was no indication upon the register that the Rs. 200 had been paid over in the presence of the Registrar. The Subordinate Judge therefore held that the sale of the property had been effected, and he considered it immaterial whether or not the Rs. 200 had been paid, though apparently he thought that they had. As regards the defence resting upon the alleged subsequent dealings by the original mortgagor with the property, he considered that they were immaterial, as he said 'Ehsan Ali had sold his property and had no interest left in it. He was no longer concerned with that equity of redemption. Being a statement in his own favour, Ehsan Ali himself could not use it in his own favour, much less could the Defendants use it.' He accordingly declared that the Plaintiffs had a right to redeem, and proceeded to take the accounts. He found that the mortgage had been fully discharged, so he gave the Plaintiffs possession without payment of any sum to the Defendants, and further gave them a decree for recovery of Rs. 9,012 and their costs.

From this decree the Defendants appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. The learned Judges of this Court dealt only with the preliminary question. They said: "We are not satisfied that the Plaintiffs have succeeded in satisfactorily establishing the loss of the original sale deed, or in proving that they have a subsisting right to the equity of redemption. The decision of other matters is unnecessary." They accordingly dismissed the suit with costs. From this decision the present appeal to His Majesty in Council has been brought.

of the two old servants could not be trusted; that there were no account-books produced to show the payment of the Rs. 200; that no explanation was made of the delay in redemption; that the subsequent dealings by the mortgagor were inconsistent with his having made any previous real sale; that he settled accounts from time to time with the mortgagee as if he were still liable to him, that they could not accept the statement of the son of Ewaz Ali Khan as to his having seen the deed at one time and searched for it later; that the heirs of Ehsan Ali had not been examined, and the Court was not in a position to say that the non-production of the original sale deed had been sufficiently accounted for. They went so far as to determine that the Rs. 200 had not been paid to the mortgagor; and they seem to have thought that the mortgagor could be considered in adverse possession, and that therefore the Defendants could rely on the statutes of limitations after twelve years, and that the heirs of Ehsan Ali Khan ought to have been made parties to the suit. They further said that a surrender of rights by the return of a sale deed was not uncommon in that country, and that a sale might become inoperative by surrender or the failure of the parties to enforce it.

It will be seen from this that the two matters of the admissibility of secondary evidence of the deed, and what ought to be deemed to be the truth of the original transaction, run into one another.*

It is, no doubt, not very likely that such a deed would be lost, but in ordinary cases, if the witness in whose custody the deed should be deposed to its loss, unless there is some motive suggested for his being untruthful, his evidence would be accepted as sufficient to let in secondary evidence of the deed. And if in addition he was not cross-examined,* this result would follow all the more. There is no doubt that the deed was executed, for it was registered, and registered in a regular way, and it is the duty of the registrar, before registering, to examine the grantor, or some one whom he is satisfied is the proper representative of the grantor, before he allows the deed to be registered. There can be no doubt, therefore, that Ehsan Ali Khan executed the deed and was party to its registration, and in the deed there is an admission that he has received the Rs. 200, which would be the full consideration as the vendee had to take upon himself the liability for the mortgage money. He says in the deed that he has received the consideration money in full, and that out of it he has left Rs. 2,800 with the vendees for the purpose of making payment to the mortgagee and defraying Court expenses, and that he has no further claim to the property sold or the consideration money. That he should have taken part in having such a deed registered if he did not receive the consideration money is highly improbable. At any rate, the burden is on him and on people claiming under him to prove that what apparently happened did not happen. And when the Judges in the Court of Appeal say that the heirs of Ehsan Ali Khan have not been examined, they apparently forget that if the Defendant's case were true and the deed had been returned to Ehsan Ali Khan as valueless, it ought to be in the possession of his heirs or assigns; and some evidence ought to have been offered on the part of the Defendants to show that this was so or had been the case. When it is further remembered that a part of the defence was that the Defendants had finally bought the equity of redemption, it would appear that they themselves ought to have got the deed and produced it from their custody as part of their case.

While making these comments, their Lordships reserve their opinion as to the value of a defence founded upon such a transaction as the Defendants set up. Certainly in law no title would pass under it, for immovable property of this value can only be transferred by a registered deed, and when a deed of sale has been once executed and registered it can only be avoided by a subsequent registered transfer. Whether in some form of suit (not this one) between some parties any equitable relief could be got out of such a transaction it is unnecessary to pronounce, for in their Lordships' opinion it was not proved.

As to the alleged subsequent dealings by Ehsan Ali Khan with the property, they could not, if regarded as declarations in his own favour, be received in evidence on behalf of those claiming under him, any more than they could be received if he were himself the Defendant. They could not be regarded as acts of ownership so as to prove adverse possession, because he never was in possession, the possession remaining in the mortgagee.

As regards the duty to make Ehsan Ali Khan's heirs parties, subject to one contention raised at the Bar on behalf of the Respondents, their Lordships have no hesitation in saying there was no such duty. The Plaintiffs sought to redeem; they had to make out their title to redeem, and they gave prima facie evidence. It was for the Defendants to rebut it, and call in answer evidence, if there was any, in rebuttal. Moreover, the Defendants had dispensed the Plaintiffs from any necessity, if there ever had been any, to make Ehsan Ali Khan's heirs parties, because they themselves pleaded that all their rights had been transferred for Rs. 10.

M. EHTISHAM ALI v. JAMNA PRASAD.

The one circumstance to be considered was that suggested at the Bar, that the original mortgage was not only of the bazaar but of other properties, and that the Plaintiffs only claimed title to redeem the bazaar. This, however, in no way injuriously affects the title or interest of anyone to whom the equity of redemption in the other properties has passed. The Plaintiffs could not divide the liability for the mortgage between the properties. They could only redeem the one property on payment of the charge upon the whole. This they were entitled to do. The owners of the equity of redemption in the other properties have to this extent the benefit of the Plaintiff's redemption.

It might be doubted—their Lordships do not propose to decide it—whether any of the evidence given on behalf of the Defendants to the effect of the subsequent dealings by Ehsan Ali Khan with the property was admissible; but if it is to be looked at at all, it contains some material which is actually helpful to the Plaintiff. It has been said that the mortgagee subsequently endeavoured to sell the property to one Wasi-uz-zaman. This man says that he knew that Ehsan Ali Khan had sold the property, as he expresses it, in Imtiaz Ali's family, and that when the sale deed was talked of to him he said he would have nothing to do with it, because the property had been already sold, which means that though a sale deed to him was executed, he gave up acting upon it when he found that the property had been previously sold. It is remarkable that in the copy of the sale deed to him, which purports to recite all the previous facts, the date of the sale deed on which the Appellant relies, is misstated, which is not consistent with its being, as alleged, back in the possession of Ehsan Ali Khan.

The one remaining circumstance in favour of the Defendants is that this suit is brought after so long a delay; but it is well within the period of limitation for the redemption of mortgages; and, at any rate for a time, the margin of value after the encumbrances were discharged was small. The Defendants were in possession and would have to account for all that they received, and it might have been thought best to wait till the Defendants had accumulated a sufficient balance to make it worth while to redeem and to have the accounts taken.

Upon the whole, their Lordships can see no reason for disagreeing with the Subordinate Judge who saw the witnesses. There being no positive evidence to contradict them, the Defendants' case rests upon suggestion only; therefore their Lordships think the Plaintiff made good his title to redeem.

With regard to the terms on which he should redeem—that is, how the accounts should be taken, whether there should be allowance made for penal or illegal interest and so forth—as these matters were not gone into in the Court of Appeal, their Lordships cannot make, and have not been asked to make any pronouncement upon them. The matter must be remitted to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. Their Lordships will therefore humbly recommend His Majesty to allow this appeal, and to remit the case to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner to decide the other points raised on appeal from the Court of the Subordinate Judge; and that the Plaintiff do have his costs in the Court of Appeal and of the appeal to His Majesty, and that the other costs be left to be disposed of by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner.

This was an appeal preferred on the 19th of May 1920, against the decree of Babu Jagadis Chandra Sen, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Jessore, dated the 20th of February 1920, modifying the decree of Babu Tara Prasanna Chatterjee, Munsif, 1st Court at Jessore, dated the 31st of January 1919

The facts of the case are as follows :—

This appeal arose out of a suit by the Plaintiff against the Defendants for recovery of the price of certain goods consigned in the boat of the Defendants and misappropriated by them. The claim was laid for Rs. 690 for the price of goods including a sum of Rs. 16 paid for hire of the boat and Rs. 71 and odd as damages. Plaintiff's case was that Defendant No. 1 and the manjhis (boatmen) of his boat, namely Defendants Nos. 2 to 4, made, on the 2nd Magh 1323 B. S., a contract with the Plaintiff's agent Kunja Behari Kapuria at Mokam Basundia that they would carry the Plaintiff's goods from Chhatiantola hat and Basundia in the District of Jessore to Bepin Behari Poddar in the Arat of Brindaban Roy at Mokam Jhalakati in the District of Barisal within the 20th of Magh, by taking Rs. 21 as the boat hire and took Rs. 2 as earnest money through the Defendant No. 2. That in accordance with this contract 207 earthen pots of gur were loaded at Chhatiantola on a subsequent date; that the boat then came to Basundia Ghat and 236 tins of chita gur were loaded there, and that on the 8th Magh, Rs. 14 and the chalan were made over to Defendant No. 1 and Defendant No. 2, that the consignment did not reach the place of destination, and that the goods were sold and the proceeds appropriated by the Defendants. Plaintiff prosecuted the Defendants on a charge of criminal breach of trust, and Defendants Nos. 2 to

DINA BANDHU SAHA v. ABDUL LATIF MOLLA.

4 were convicted. Thereupon Plaintiff instituted the present suit.

The boatmen, Defendants Nos 2 to 4 did not appear. Defendant No. 1 alone contested the suit, and his defence was that he had some boats which were let out on hire, he never went on the boats nor took the goods of any mahajan, that the boatmen settled the hire of the boat and they after taking the hire gave it to him who paid them some money out of the same, that while his boat was in the ghat Defendant No. 2 took out the said boat, that he (Defendant No. 1) never undertook to carry Plaintiff's goods as alleged, that there was no contract with the Defendant No 1, that he never let out his boat to the Plaintiff's firm and that he had no concern with what his manjhis did with the goods, and he was not liable for their action, that he came to learn that the boat sank with the goods in the river down Khulna

The Court of first instance held that Defendant No. 1 let out his boat to Plaintiff's firm and undertook to carry the goods to Jhalakati, that he himself did not take delivery of the goods, that the goods were misappropriated and the story of loss of the goods by the sinking of the boat in the river was not true.

The Munsif decreed the suit against all the Defendants, and directed that the Plaintiff would first try to satisfy his decree from the other Defendants and then execute the decree for the balance, if any, against Defendant No. 1.

The following portion of the Munsif's judgment will be found material.

"We have got from the written statement of the suit that the manjhis (boatmen) bring the freight secured in carrying goods to him (Defendant No. 1) and he pays out a portion of the money to the manjhis (Defendants Nos. 2 to 4) as labour.

This arrangement would make him (Defendant No. 1) directly liable for all damages in transit to person who knew whose boat they were dealing with, under the arrangement as disclosed in the written statement the Defendant No. 1 would be an undisclosed principal or partner if the Plaintiff's firm did not know to whom the boat belonged, and as the profits all go to the Defendant No 1, he is directly liable whether he was disclosed or not before engagement. The promptness with which Plaintiff's men went to the Defendant No 1 soon after foul play was suspected also shews that they knew whose boat they engaged."

On appeal by the Defendant No 1, the Subordinate Judge of Jessore held that Defendant No. 1 was not liable for the price of the goods.

The decree of the Munsif was modified; only a decree for Rs 16 being the boat hire advanced was passed against Defendant No. 1, and as against Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 a decree was passed for the balance of the Plaintiff's claim Against the decision of the Subordinate Judge the Plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

The material findings of the Subordinate Judge will appear from the judgment of the High Court.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him Babus Gopal Chandra Das and Hemendra Chandra Sen) for the Appellant.—The findings of the lower Appellate Court amount to this: Defendants Nos. 2 to 4, the boatmen, as agents of Defendant No. 1, the owner of the boat, entered into the contract with the Plaintiff to carry the goods. Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 misappropriated the goods while carrying them in the boat to the place of destination. The question is whether the principal, Defendant No 1, is liable to the Plaintiff for the misappropriation committed by his agents, Defendants Nos. 2 to 4. The misappropriation by Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 was while acting as agents in the course of their business for their principal, Defendant No. 1, and within the scope of the duties with which they were entrusted. To render the principal liable for the fraud of his agent it is not necessary to establish that the principal must authorise his agent to commit the fraudulent act. The principal must be answerable for the manner in which his agent conducts himself in doing the business which he was engaged in by his master. The principal, I submit, is liable for all acts of wrong committed by his agent in the course of the business in which he is employed by the principal. The learned Subordinate Judge has taken a wrong view of the law in holding that in order to make the Defendant No. 1 liable it must be proved that the misappropriation by the other Defendants was for the benefit of Defendant No. 1. Whether the fraud is for the benefit of the principal or for the benefit of the agent, the principal is always liable for the fraud of his agents if committed in the course of their employment.

Sec. 238 of the Indian Contract Act does not say that the fraud must be committed for the benefit of the principal.

The liability of the principal for the wrongs of his agent is a joint and several liability with the agent. The injured party may sue either or both of them. The principal is the person who has selected his agent and must therefore be taken to be liable for his agent's acts. If the Defendant No. 1 and the other Defendants are deemed to be partners, the relation of partners inter se is that of principal and agent and therefore each partner is liable for the acts of the other.

The Subordinate Judge is wrong in giving a decree only against the agents, Defendants Nos. 2 to 4. The suit ought to be decreed also as against the principal, the Defendant No. 1.

Referred to decided cases.

Babu Kshettra Mohan Ghose for the Respondent.—Defendant No. 1 did not enter into any contract with the Plaintiff for carrying of the goods. He did not accompany the other Defendants in the boat while the goods were carried. The misappropriation took place in the way, and it was done by Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 for their own private benefit. Upon the findings I submit that Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 did not carry the Plaintiff's goods as agents of Defendant No. 1 and as such Defendant No. 1 cannot be made liable for the action of Defendants Nos. 2 to 4. Even if Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 carried the goods as agents of Defendant No. 1, the Defendant No. 1 is not liable unless it is proved that Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 misappropriated the goods for the benefit of Defendant No. 1. Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 misappropriated the goods for their own private benefit. That being so, the Defendant No. 1 cannot be made liable for the act of Defendants Nos. 2 to 4. In order to render the principal liable for the wrongful actions of his agents it must be proved that the same were done for the benefit of the principal.

The loss of the goods was occasioned by a criminal act on the part of the Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 which was beyond the scope of their authority. A principal does not authorise his agent to act wrongfully and consequently frauds are beyond the scope of the agent's authority. Misappropriation in this case was not within the scope of the duties entrusted to Defendants Nos. 2 to 4.

I submit that sec. 238 of the Contract Act is not applicable inasmuch as the elements to fix the liability on the principal are wanting.

I rely upon the cases in Gopal Chandra Bhattacharya v. Secretary of State for India in Council (2) and Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank (1).

My submission is that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct and that Defendant No. 1 is not liable to the Plaintiff.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen in reply.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of price of certain goods delivered to the Defendants for being carried from Basundia in the District of Jessore to Jhalakati in the Barisal District and which were misappropriated on the way by Defendants Nos. 2 to 4.

The Defendant No. 1 is the owner of the boat and the Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 were the boatmen or manjhis.

The suit was decreed against all the Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 by the Court of first instance; but on appeal by the Defendant No. 1, it was held that the Defendant No. 1 was not liable for the price of the goods and only a decree for Rs. 16 being the boat hire advanced was passed against him.

The Plaintiff has appealed to this Court and the question for consideration is whether the Defendant No. 1 is liable for the loss of the goods.

The Court of appeal below found that the Defendant did not enter into any contract with the Plaintiff for carrying the Plaintiff's goods. What he meant, however, was that there was no contract with the Defendant No. 1 personally as it would appear from the other findings arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge. He finds that "the Defendant No. 1 admits that his boat is let out on hire, that the boatmen settle the terms of hire, that the hire is paid to him and the Defendant No. 1 pays the wages of the boatmen from the hire. There cannot be any doubt that the Defendant No. 1 derives profits by letting out his boat on hire." . . . "In para. 5 of the written statement it is alleged by the Defendant that he never goes in the boat to settle hire, that the persons who remain in the boat settle hire, that when the hire is paid to the Defendant, he gives a portion to the boatmen." Then again he says :—

"It is admitted that Defendant No. 1 derives benefit by letting out his boat on hire. He lets out his boat through his boatmen. Defendant No. 1 is the principal and Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 are his agents."

There is no doubt, therefore, that the Court of appeal below found that the Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 as agents of Defendant No. 1 entered into a contract with the Plaintiff to carry his goods.

The learned Subordinate Judge says :—

"In this case it may be presumed that Defendant's agents are responsible for safely carrying Plaintiff's goods to Jhalakati. If they are guilty of negligence or for any act within the scope of the agents' apparent authority, the principal, Defendant No. 1, would have been made liable." . . .

"The Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 committed a criminal offence with respect to the goods during the carrying of goods on the way. The goods must have been misappropriated on the way. Under no circumstances, it can be held that any criminal act with respect to the goods was within the scope of the authority of the agents, Defendants Nos. 2 to 4." Further on he observes :

"There cannot be any doubt that the acts

(2) 12 O. W. N. 619 (1900).

done by the agents in the present case are beyond the authority of the agents. There is no evidence to show that Defendant No. 1 induced the Plaintiff to believe that his manjhis had authority to misappropriate the goods on the way. Defendant No. 1 cannot be made liable for the loss accrued to Plaintiff for the price of goods entrusted to Defendants Nos. 2 to 4."

We are of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge has not taken a correct view of the matter.

Sec. 238 of the Contract Act lays down that misrepresentations made, or frauds committed, by agents acting in the course of their business for their principals, have the same effect on agreements made by such agents as if such misrepresentations or frauds had been made or committed by the principals, but misrepresentations made, or frauds committed by agents, in matters which do not fall within their authority, do not affect their principals.

The learned Subordinate Judge seems to be of opinion that the fraud committed by the agents must be for their principal; in other words for the benefit of their principal and that is the argument which is advanced on behalf of the Respondent before us. But in the first place, the section does not say that the fraud must be committed for the benefit of the principal. A distinction is drawn in the section between frauds "committed by agents acting in the course of their business for their principals" and frauds "committed by agents in matters which do not fall within their authority;" the question, therefore, in each case being whether fraud was committed by the agents while acting in the course of their business for their principals.

It is also contended that the section does not apply because the loss of the goods was occasioned by a criminal act on the part of the Defendants Nos. 2 to 4.

In the case of Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank (1), Willes, J., observed as follows:—

"With respect to the question whether a principal is answerable for the act of his agent in the course of his master's business, and for his master's benefit, no sensible distinction can be drawn between the case of fraud and the case of any other wrong. The general rule is that the master is answerable for every such wrong of the servant or agent as is committed in the course of the service and for the master's benefit though no express command or privity of the master be proved. That principle is acted upon every day.

It is true, he has not authorised the particular act, but he has put the agent in his place to do that class of acts, and he must be answerable for the manner in which the agent has conducted himself in doing the business which it was the act of his master to place him in."

The learned Pleader for the Respondent relied upon the words "and for the master's benefit" in the passage from the judgment of Willes, J., quoted above, as showing that the principal is not liable unless the fraud is committed by the agent for the master's benefit as well as in the course of business for the principal. In this contention, he is supported by the decision of this Court in the case of Gopal Chandra Bhattacharya v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (2). In that case the learned Judges held that "the true rule of law with regard to the liability of the master for the misconduct of the servant is that the master is liable for the fraud of his servant in the course of his service and for the master's benefit and that a master is not liable for the misconduct of the servant committed for the servant's own private benefit, and that it is not necessary that the benefit should accrue to the master." The learned Judges in enunciating that proposition relied upon the cases of Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank (1), Houldsworth v. City of Glasgow Bank (3) and certain other decisions.

Barwick's case (1), however, has been misunderstood, as pointed out by the House of Lords in Lloyd v. Grace, Smith and Co (4). In that case, a widow who owned two cottages and a sum of money secured on a mortgage, being dissatisfied with the income derived therefrom, consulted a firm of solicitors and saw their managing clerk, who conducted the conveyancing business of the firm without supervision. Acting as the representative of the firm, he induced her to give him instructions to sell the cottages and to call in the mortgage money and for that purpose to give him her deeds and by means of certain documents in the course of his business defrauded the widow and dishonestly disposed of the property of the widow for his own benefit. It was held by the House of Lords that a principal is liable for the fraud of his agent acting within the scope of his authority, whether the fraud is committed for the benefit of the principal or for the benefit of the agent. Referring to Barwick's case (1), Lord Macnaghten (at p. 732) observed as follows: "It was, I think, in reference to the facts of the particular case under review, where the fraud, if committed, must have been committed for the benefit of the principal, that Willes, J., expressed himself in the language which has been misunderstood. What Willes, J., said was this: "The general rule is, that the master is answerable for every such wrong of the servant or agent as is committed in the course of the service and for the master's benefit, though no express command or privity of the master be proved." "To that statement of the law, no objection of any sort can be taken. But it is a very different proposition to say that the master is not answerable for the wrong of the servant or agent, committed in the course of the service, if it be not committed for the master's benefit. Willes, J., does not, I think, say anything of the kind. In a sentence immediately preceding the sentence I have quoted, he observes that the question whether the principal is answerable for the act of an agent was settled as early as Lord Holt's time—a general observation not confined to the case where the principal is a gamer by the fraud. The question as to the meaning and effect of the ruling of Willes, J., may, I think, be best ascertained by reference to a few cases in which some of the learned Judges who took part in the decision in Barwick's case (1) delivered opinions."

Lord Macnaghten then discussed the cases on the point and explained Barwick's case (1) as also the case of Houldsworth v. City of Glasgow Bank (3) in which the proposition of law enunciated by Willes, J., in Barwick's case (1) was quoted with approval. His Lordship pointed out at p. 738: "It is a hardship to be liable for the fraud of your partner. But that is the law under the Partnership Act. It is less a hardship for a principal to be held liable for the fraud of his agent or confidential servant. You can hardly ask your partner for a guarantee of his honesty; but there were such things as fidelity policies. You can insure the honesty of the person you employ in a confidential situation or you can make your confidential agent obtain a fidelity policy." His Lordship (Earl Loreburn) observed at p. 725: "Willes, J. cannot have meant that the principal is absolved whenever his agent intended to appropriate for himself the proceeds of his fraud. Nearly every rogue intends to do that."

The case of Gopal Chandra Bhattacharya v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (2) was decided upon a principle erroneously supposed to have been laid down in Barwick's case (1). Having regard to the statement of the law by the House of Lords in the case of Lloyd v. Grace, Smith & Co. (4), we think that the Defendant No. 1 is liable for the loss occasioned to the Plaintiff's goods by reason of the goods having been misappropriated by his agents, the Defendants Nos 2 to 4, as there is no question that the goods were entrusted to them and were being carried by them in the course of their business when the misappropriation took place. The principle of law enunciated by the House of Lords in the case of Lloyd v. Grace, Smith & Co. (4) is in accordance with the law as enacted in sec 238 of the Indian Contract Act. As stated above there is nothing in that section to show that in order to render the principal liable the fraud must be committed for the benefit of the principal.

For these reasons, we are of opinion that the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, r. 95—Action-purchaser, entitled to actual possession, given symbolical possession only of immovable property. Effect—Limitation, fresh start to—Person claiming under certified purchaser, right of.

Where under Or. 21, r. 95 of the Civil Procedure Code actual possession should have been given, delivery of symbolical possession operates nevertheless as a complete transfer of possession as against the judgment-debtor so as to give a fresh start of limitation to the person to whom such possession is given.

This principle can be availed of by a person claiming under the certified purchaser.

reversing the decree of Babu Sasheejivan Sen, Munsif, 2nd Court at Ulluberia, dated the 21st of February 1918.

The facts of the case are fully set out in their Lordships' judgment.

Babu Sarat Ch. Mukherjee for the Appellant.

Asiranjana Chatterjee for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The property in dispute in this case is alleged by the Plaintiff to have belonged to one Khoda Buksh and held by the Defendant No. 1 as tenant under him. Certain heirs of Khoda Buksh obtained a decree for rent against the Defendant No. 1 and in execution of the decree put up the property to sale. The Defendant No. 6 purchased it on the 13th June 1904. Formal possession was taken by the purchaser on the 29th April 1905 and in September 1910, he conveyed the lands to the Plaintiff.

The suit was for establishment of the Plaintiff's title and for recovery of possession.

The defence inter alia was that the property did not belong to Khoda Buksh nor did the Defendant No. 1 hold it under him as tenant. A question was also raised whether one Ohijuddin Ahmed had a one-third share in the property.

With regard to the last question, the learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that there was some nishkar property in which Ohijuddin had one-third share.

So far as the disputed property was concerned, the learned Judge on a consideration of the evidence came to the conclusion that the property belonged to Khoda Buksh alone.

The next and the main defence was that the Defendant No. 1 had been in possession of more than 12 years inspite of the auction-purchase by Defendant No. 6 and that therefore the Plaintiff's suit was barred by limitation. It appears, as stated above, that the auction-purchaser obtained only formal possession through Court. That was within 12 years of the suit.

It is contended before us by the learned pleader for the Defendant-Appellant that where the property sold is not in the possession of tenants or other persons entitled to occupy the same, the purchaser must obtain actual possession, and symbolical possession delivered in such a case cannot give the purchaser a 'fresh start' for limitation.

The question whether symbolical possession operates, as between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor, as actual possession was considered in two Full Bench decisions of this Court. In the case of Jugobundhu Mookerjee v. Ram Ch. Bysakh (1), it was laid down that delivery of possession by going through the process prescribed by sec. 224 of Act VIII of 1859 is the only way in which the decree of the Court awarding possession to the Plaintiff can be enforced; and as, in contemplation of law, both parties must be considered as being present at the time when the delivery is made, such delivery must, as against the Defendant, be deemed equivalent to actual possession. To the same effect is the decision in the case of Jogobundhu Mitter v. Purnanunda Gosami (2). In these two cases however, the only possession which could be delivered was symbolical possession because the land was in the occupancy of tenants.

It has accordingly been contended on behalf of the Appellant that, that priniple cannot apply to a case where the decree-holder or purchaser could obtain actual possession and we have been referred to the cases of Shotenath Mookherjee v. Obhoyrind Roy (3) and Mohadev Sakharain Parkar v Janu Nampi Hatle (4).

In those cases, it was held that the delivery of merely formal possession of immoveable property (in the cases where the property is not in the possession of a tenant or other person entitled to occupy the same), to a purchaser at a Court sale cannot prevent limitation running in favour of the judgment-debtor where the latter remains in actual possession.*

These authorities are no doubt in favour of the Appellant, and the view taken in these cases at one time was taken in some other cases in this Court. See the case of Pearce Mohun Poddar v. Jugobundhoo Sen (5), though in some other cases, a different view was taken [see Ashudoolu v. Shaikh Akbar Ali (6) and Mahomed Wali v Noor Buksh (7)]. Some of the cases on the point were considered by Birch and Mitter, JJ, in Umbicka Churn Goopta v. Madhab Ghoshal (8) and the learned Judges held that formal possession given to a decree-holder by an officer of the Court in execution of his decree is sufficient to give him a fresh cause of action and notwithstanding that he may never have obtained actual possession he or his assigns may sue to recover possession at any time within 12 years from the time when such formal possession was given. The learned Judges dissented from the view taken by Markby, J., in Pearce Mohun Poddar v. Jugobundhoo Sen (5), as being opposed to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Gunga Govind Mandal v Bhoopal Chandra Biswas (9), where their Lordships observed that the decree and execution put an end altogether to limitation, and that it was immaterial whether the decree-holder obtained actual possession or not. It may be pointed out however, that in the case before the Judicial Committee, the property was in the possession of tenants.

In a later decision, the same view was adopted. In the case of Lokeshwar Koer v Purgan Roy (10), Garth, C. J., was of opinion that the Plaintiff having been put in possession under the decree by an officer of the Court, the form in which execution was given was quite immaterial. He said "All that was necessary was for the officer of the Court to go upon a portion of the land, and give the Plaintiff possession of that portion in respect of the whole, and any formal mistake which may have been made by the officer in the mode of giving possession could not prejudice the Plaintiff." It was accordingly held following the decision in Jugobundhu Mookerjee v Ram Ch Bysakh (1), that as between the parties to the suit, formal possession operates, in point of law and in fact, as a complete transfer, of actual possession from the one party to the other.

This principle was followed in the case of Shyama Charan Chatterji v. Madhab Ch. Mukherji (11), where the learned Judges held that the delivery of formal possession in execution of a decree for possession gives a cause of action against a Defendant who remains in occupation of the premises, which may be enforced in a regular suit.

BHULU BEG v. JATINDRA NATH SEN.

Then in the case of Harimohon Shaha v. Baburali (12), where the auction-purchaser who had obtained symbolical possession brought a suit for possession of land within 12 years of the date on which he obtained symbolical possession, it was held that the suit was not barred. Maclean, (C. J.), observed as follows:—"Be that as it may, we have the fact which cannot be got over, that possession, call it symbolical possession if you will, was given by a Civil Court in this case to the Plaintiff, and in the case of Lokeshwar Koer v. Pungan Roy, (10) it was laid down that the formal possession given by a Civil Court under an execution operates, in point of law and of fact, as between the parties, as a complete transfer of possession from one party to the other."

... It may be that it was wrongly given by reason of the fact that actual possession ought to have been given under sec. 318 of the Code, but still possession was given to the Plaintiff by a Civil Court; and under the circumstances, it seems to me that the period of limitation must begin to run from the date of that possession being given." See also Mir W'azi-uddin v. Lala Deoki Nandan (13), where the learned Judges considered the question whether the auction-purchaser at a sale for arrears of revenue has 12 years from the date on which formal possession is delivered to him by the Collector.

So far as our Court is concerned, all the later decisions are in favour of the view taken by the lower Court.

In the Madras High Court, the view taken by this Court has been adopted. See Gorind v. Venkata Sastrulu (14), where it was held that the delivery of symbolical possession, even though erroneously made, i.e., even though made under circumstances which do not make sec. 319 applicable operates to give the person so put in possession a fresh cause of action and to place the judgment-debtor in the position of a trespasser.

The Allahabad High Court has also taken the same view; see Jagannath v. Mulap Chand (15).

The Bombay High Court as stated above has taken a different view in the case of Mahadeo v. Janu (4), but the weight of authority is in favour of the view that symbolical possession as against the judgment-debtor operates as actual possession and gives a fresh start of limitation even in a case coming under sec. 318 corresponding in Or. 21, r 95 of the present Code. We must accordingly hold that the suit is not barred by limitation.

It has been contended by the learned pleader for the Appellant that even if the principle can be availed of by the auction-purchaser, the Plaintiff being a benamdar cannot take the benefit of the principle.

But the Defendant No. 6 was the certificated purchaser and the Plaintiff claims under him. In these circumstances, we think that the principle applies to the Plaintiff also.

The learned Pleader attacked the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on the question of title of Khoda Bux. There is evidence in support of the finding and the finding was arrived at upon a consideration of the whole evidence.

We think, in these circumstances, that the appeal must fail and is dismissed with costs.

MAHARAJA SIE

v.

BHAGAT and ors,

Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 22, r. 10 and sec. 41—Lessee under Defendant in a successful suit for possession, if may be added as a party after mesne profits finally assessed—Case, if one of devolution of interest—(Question if may be raised in execution proceedings.

Plaintiff's suit to recover possession of certain villages with mesne profits against R was dismissed by the trial Court but decreed preliminarily on appeal. Between the dates of the two decrees R granted a lease of a term of years of the right of mining for mica and otherwise exploiting the jungle to M who subsequently to the Appellate decree surrendered his lease. In pursuance of that decree, to which M was no party, mesne profits were assessed and finally decreed against R, and no appeal was preferred against that decree. Meanwhile Plaintiff had applied under Or. XXII, r. 10 of the Civil Procedure Code to make M a party in the proceedings so as to have the mesne profits ascertained in his presence and thereby avoid future objections by M. M inter alia disputed the Plaintiff's title to the minerals which he averred belonged to the superior landlord, the zemindar. The application was refused by the Trial Court but granted on appeal by the High Court long after the decree passed against R:

Held, reversing the High Court—That the liability, if any, of M to pay damages for removal of the mica was not a liability which devolved to him from R, they both being liable, if liable at all, as trespassers.

That there being no assignment, creation or devolution of any interest within the meaning of Or. XXII, r. 10, C. P. C., that rule did not apply.

That the questions which arose between Plaintiff and M could not be raised in execution proceedings under sec. 47 of the Code.

What should in reality form the basis of an independent suit against a separate party for some act done by himself cannot be introduced as a question to be tried in execution proceedings in another suit.

PROSENNO COOMAR SANYAL v. KALI DAS SANYAL (1) referred to.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court, Patna, dated the 16th November 1916, which reversed a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Hazaribagh, dated the 13th November 1914.

The facts are as follows. In 1907 a suit was instituted by the present Respondents against Raja Makund Sahi for possession of six villages in the Hazaribagh District. On 21st September 1908, that suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge. In 1909 while an appeal was pending Makund Sahi leased the villages to the present Appellant, the Maharajah of Cossimbazar, enabling him to open up and work mica mines and cut timber thereon.

The appeal was heard in 1913, the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was reversed, and an account was ordered to be taken of the mesne profits. The account was taken by the Amin who duly issued a report which was confirmed by the Subordinate Judge. Prior to its confirmation the present Respondents applied to have the present Appellant, the Maharajah of Cossimbazar (amongst other lessees), made a party Defendant so as to have the matter decided in their presence. Objections were filed by the Appellant who inter alia stated that he had surrendered his lease on learning of the Plaintiff's claim, and who disputed their title to the minerals. He also objected to the form of procedure.

The application was rejected by the Subordinate Judge who held that there was no power under the provisions of Or. XXII, r. 10 of the Civil Procedure Code to add the objectors as parties to the suit.

Against the said order the Respondents appealed to the High Court at Patna which reversed the order appealed from and ordered the Subordinate Judge to make the objectors parties to the suit and ascertain the mesne profits in their presence.

From this decree the Appellant appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs DeGruyther, K. C and Ramsey (Ex parte) for the Appellant

There is no power under Or. XXII, r. 10 of the Civil Procedure Code to make me a party to the execution proceedings.

The mesne profits payable to the Respondents are the rents payable by us to Makund Sahi and not the value of the mica extracted.

It was only after the decree of the High Court that the application was made to join the Appellant as a party. If there is any action against the Appellant it should be the subject-matter of a separate suit.

Prosunno Coomar Sunyal v. Kali Das al. (1) is not in point—that case merely that the auction-purchaser is the representative of the judgment-debtor.

Reference was also made to Ganapathy Mudaliar v. Krishnamaachariar (2).

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by LORD PHILLIMORE.—The present Respondents brought as Plaintiffs, on the 15th April 1907, a suit against Raja Makund Sahi to recover possession of six villages and jungle which they claimed. The Raja defended the action, which in due course came on for trial, and on the 21st September 1908, the Court of first instance decided against the Plaintiffs, and dismissed the suit. Just one year afterwards, on the 21st September 1909, the Raja gave a lease of a term of years of the right of mining for mica, and otherwise exploiting the jungle, to the present Appellant, whose case is that he had not notice of the pending litigation.

The unsuccessful Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court, which on the 15th May 1913, reversed the decision of the first Court and made a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs ordering the Raja to put them into possession of the six villages and jungle, and it was further ordered:—

"That the case be sent back to the lower Court [inter alia] to take an account of the mesne profits to which the Plaintiffs-Appellants are entitled for the three years prior to the institution of the suit, and also for the period thereafter till the delivery of possession or the expiration of three years from this date, whichever event happens earlier."

When the case was accordingly remitted to the Court of first instance, a Commissioner or Amin was appointed to make the necessary enquiry, and on the 22nd August 1914, he made his report.

On the 2nd January 1915, the Subordinate Judge recorded that the parties did not object to the report of the Amin and that it might therefore be accepted, and he ordered "that the suit be decreed finally; that the Amin's report be considered to be a part of the decree; and that the Plaintiffs do recover possession with mesne profits, as determined by the Amin, and the costs of this suit from the Defendant with interest at 6 per cent. per annum." In this way the suit came to its natural termination.

It happened, however, that the Amin took a somewhat unusual course in conducting the enquiry which led to his report. When enquiring into the mesne profits he first of all ascertained the rents which the Raja had received from the present Appellant and other tenants totalling Rs. 42,075, with a further profit of Rs. 500 from the jungle. Not content with this, he proceeded further to enquire what were the profits which the various lessees might be taken to have made from the mica which they had extracted during the terms of their leases pending the somewhat protracted litigation. What exactly was his object in doing this, or who set him in motion to do it, is not quite clear. The law as to mesne profits is thus expressed in sec. 2, sub-sec. 12 of the Code of Civil Procedure:—

" 'Mesne profits' of property means those profits which the person in wrongful possession of such property actually received or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom, together with interest on such profits, but shall not include profits due to improvements made by the person in wrongful possession."

It might be said that in ascertaining such profits the successful Plaintiffs would not be limited to the actual rents which the trespassing Defendant had received. And apart from the question of mesne profits, a claim might have been preferred for damages for the mica actually removed. Again, it would be conceivable that in a suit properly framed the lessees from the Raja, who had, though ignorant of the Plaintiffs' title, carried away what was the Plaintiffs' mica, could be rendered liable for damages in respect of what they had so taken away. But these lessees were not included in the suit. The Amin with some naïveté stated twice in the course of his report that he had had little assistance from the Plaintiffs or their agents, who had, in fact, taken very little interest in the execution of the enquiry, and that he obtained his information largely by the help of the Defendant Raja and his servants. However, he reported under both heads, bringing what he described as the net profit obtained from the mines up to a sum considerably exceeding a lakh of rupees.

The report was in narrative form and finished without any definite recommendation. Whether the conclusion from it was intended to be that the Defendant Raja was to pay as mesne profits the rents which he had received or whether he was to pay as mesne profits the net profits of the mines—it could not be both—does not clearly appear; though from what subsequently happened it can almost certainly be inferred that it was only the smaller figure, that is, the sum of the rents. This report having been made and filed, but before it was confirmed, the Plaintiffs—the present Respondents—relying upon the statements with regard to the profits obtained from the mines, made an application by a petition dated the 4th September 1914. This petition stated that the several lessees had in collusion with the Raja obtained a settlement of the disputed property in an illegal manner, and had misappropriated a large quantity of mica, worth between one and two lakhs of rupees, and prayed that they should be ordered to appear at the time of the ascertainment of the mesne profits so as to have the matter determined and decided in their presence, and that to avoid future objections they should be made Defendants. It will be observed that unless it be inferentially, no relief was claimed against the Appellant and the other lessees.

The Appellant was summoned, and put in a counter petition in which he raised various objections or defences. He stated that the Plaintiffs had been aware all along of what he was doing under his lease, he claimed that the application was barred by limitation, he said that the application was made in collusion with the Defendant Raja: and that since he knew of the Plaintiffs' claim to the property he had surrendered his lease, namely, on the 1st August 1914, and he disputed the Plaintiffs' title to the minerals even on the footing that they were entitled to the land, averring that the minerals belonged to the superior lord, the zemindar. He also took objection to the form of procedure.

On these statements the matter came before the Subordinate Judge, who on the 13th September 1914, rejected the Plaintiffs' application, holding that under the construction of Or. XXII, r. 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure, there was no such assignment of interest by the Defendant Raja to the present Appellant and the other lessees as to warrant their being brought into the suit.

From this order the Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court. There is no date upon their memorandum of appeal and nothing to show whether it was lodged before or after the order of the 2nd January 1915. It rather looks as if it was later, but it is not material. Their appeal came on before the High Court, which, on the 16th November 1916, allowed the appeal and ordered the Subordinate Judge to make the six tenants including the present Appellant, parties to the suit, and to ascertain the mesne profits in their presence.

It is from this decree that the present appeal is brought.

From a perusal of the order in its bare form it is not easy to see what could be its object. What advantage could it be to the Plaintiffs or the Defendant Raja that the mesne profits which the Defendant Raja was to pay should be assessed in the presence of the lessees? Moreover, they had been already assessed, and that, finally, the report of the Amn had been accepted, and the mesne profits, whatever they were found by it, had been decreed, and the decree had not been appealed from.

But light is thrown by the language of the learned Chief Justice. He says: "In my opinion the Appellants are entitled to have the persons in question added as parties to the proceedings, and compel them to account for any profits which they may have received from the land."

This opinion appears to be founded on the language of Or. XXII, r. 10, and it is desirable to examine the Code of Civil Procedure with a view to seeing whether it lends support to this opinion. By sec. 47

"(1) All questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit.

"(2) The Court may, subject to any objection as to limitation or jurisdiction, treat a proceeding under this section as a suit or a suit as a proceeding"

Or. XXII, r. 10, states—

"(1) In other cases of an assignment, creation or devolution of any interest during the pendency of a suit, the suit may, by leave of the Court, be continued by or against the person to or upon whom such interest has come or devolved."

The High Court appear to consider that in an action to recover possession of land where the Defendant while he is in possession has granted leases, proceedings in execution may involve removal of the tenants, and that for such a purpose a lease may be considered an assignment within the meaning of r. 10.

It is unnecessary for their Lordships to express any opinion as to whether this view is right or not, because the Appellant is not setting up his lease or claiming to remain in occupation as tenant—on the contrary, he states that he has surrendered his lease—and because the application was not to remove him. The order contemplates cases of devolution of interest from some original party to the suit, whether Plaintiff or Defendant, upon someone else. The more ordinary cases are death, marriage, insolvency, and then come the general provisions of r. 10 for all other cases. But they are all cases of devolution. There is, it should be noted in this rule, a significant change of language from that used in the earlier Code, where it is stated in sec. 372 as follows --

"In other cases of assignment, creation or devolution of any interest pending the suit, the suit may, with the leave of the Court, given either with the consent of all parties or after service of notice in writing upon them, and hearing their objections, if any, be continued by or against the person to whom such interest has come either in addition to or in substitution for the person from whom it has passed, as the case may require."

The words "in addition to" in the earlier Code have disappeared. But the matter does not rest upon this change. The liability, if any, of the Appellant to pay damages for removal of the mica is not a liability which has devolved to him from the Defendant Raja. They were both liable, if liable at all, as trespassers, and a case, if any, against the Appellant must rest upon his action and the direct relation established thereby between him and the Plaintiffs.

Serious injustice would be done if any other view was taken. A party added by devolution during the pendency must take the suit as he finds it. Judgment already rendered would be binding upon him. He would not, in the present case, be able to question the title of the Plaintiffs to the mica, though he has a serious contention that the title to the minerals rests with the zemindar. Again it is all very well to say that the mesne profits, by which is meant the value of the lost mica, are to be ascertained in his presence. There has been at least a preliminary assessment by the Amm which he would have considerable difficulty in setting altogether aside, and this assessment has been made in his absence. He would come before the Subordinate Judge with a preliminary finding against him for over a lakh of rupees. Or XXII, r. 10, does not apply. There has been no assignment, creation or devolution of any interest within the meaning of that rule.

Their Lordships have been reminded of the decision of this Board in the case of Prosunno Poomar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (1) and of the general principle therein expressed, that a wide construction should be put upon the provisions of the Act with regard to introducing parties by devolution and of the desirability of ascertaining all possible points in execution proceedings without a fresh suit.

But giving all force to these considerations, they cannot see how that which should in reality form the basis of an independent suit against a separate party, for some act done by himself, can be introduced as a question to be tried in execution proceedings in another suit. Sec 47 of the Act does not apply. If the added persons did commit trespasses, these were distinct ones, and not committed by them as representatives of the original Defendant. To hold otherwise, would be to confuse the rights.

Considerations both of form and of substance are opposed to the order from which this appeal is brought.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly recommend His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, and the decree of the High Court discharged and the decree of the Subordinate Judge restored, and that the Appellant should have his costs before this Board and in the two Courts below.

Indian Income Tax Act (VII of 1918), sec. 9 (2)

(iii)—Company managing Railway on behalf of Secretary of State—Surplus profits of Company only liable to tax—Guaranteed interest and interest paid on borrowed capital, if to be included in computing the taxable income.

The Bengal Nagpur Railway Co. was assessed to income-tax on an income made up of (1) the Company's surplus profits and (2) the guaranteed interest, the item No. (2) being made up of (a) the interest debtable to the undertaking of the Secretary of State's open line capital, (b) the payment to the Secretary of State of the amount of the guaranteed interest payable by him to the Company in England on the share capital of the Company which the Company by agreement had made over absolutely to the Secretary of State and (c) the amount payable on account of interest on debenture stock and debentures:

Held—That the matter could not be treated as a case of a Company owning in the ordinary way a Railway, as a private venture. The liability to tax must be determined with reference to the special agreement between the two parties and the nature of their relation to one another. From this point of view the Secretary of State is the owner of the Bengal Nagpur Railway which has been constructed and is managed for him by the Company. This is their business on the income of which tax is leviable. The principle applicable is that the Company should pay tax on what they get. In that view the Company are liable to income-tax in respect only of item No. (1) representing their share of surplus profits which they get in return for their service in the management of the Railway. The Company are not liable in respect of sum (2) (a). Though this capital has been the means whereby profits have been earned in which the Company share, this is not the Company's property. All receipts earned by the use of these sums are paid to the Government account and the interest is deducted before the profits in which the Company are entitled to share, can be ascertained. Nor are the Company liable in respect of sum (2) (b). This in effect represents monies which the Secretary of State pays in London to the Company and which he recoups himself in this country out of the earnings of the Railway and which has to be deducted before the surplus profits can be ascertained. As regards sum (c) it was conceded that it was not liable to tax as it represented interest on borrowed capital.

This was a Reference to the High Court under sec. 51 (1) of the Indian Income Tax Act, VIII of 1918, by the Chief Revenue Authority, on the 25th July 1921.

The facts are as follows :—

On the 12th January 1921, the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company was served by the Collector of Income Tax, Calcutta, with a notice of assessment and demand for payment of income-tax and super-tax for 1920-21 on the income derived from the Company's business in India. The Company objected to the assessment and made an application on the 30th May 1921 to the Board of Revenue for drawing up a case and referring the same to the High Court under sec. 51 (1) of the Income Tax Act. The Board of Revenue thereupon drew up a statement of the case and made the following reference to the High Court. :—

Statement of case.

An application has been made by the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company, Limited, to the Board of Revenue as Chief Revenue Authority under sec. 51 (1) of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918, for a case to be stated on the question whether the Company is liable to income-tax on a sum of Rs. 1,57,98,766.

The Company was assessed by the Collector of Income Tax, Calcutta, to income-tax for the year 1920-21 on an income of Rs. 1,72,60,595 calculated as follows :—

	Rs.
Surplus profits . . .	14,63,387
Guaranteed interest . .	1,57,98,766
	1,72,62,153
Less outstandings .	1,558
	<hr/> 1,72,60,595

v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

The sum of Rs. 1,57,98,766 is made up as follows :—

(a) Rs. 1,07,59,381 interest debitable to the undertaking of the Secretary of State's open line capital.

(b) Rs. 13,07,440 payment to the Secretary of State in rupee currency of the amount of guaranteed interest payable by him on the share capital of the Company.

(c) Rs. 37,31,945 payable on account of interest on debenture stock and debentures.

It is contended on behalf of the Company that in computing the taxable income of the Company, the sum of Rs. 1,57,98,766 should be deducted from the net earnings of the Company under sec. 9 (2) (iii) of the Income Tax Act as this sum represents the interest paid on borrowed capital.

In order to explain the nature of the transactions in respect of the sums mentioned in para. 2 it is necessary to refer to the contracts between the Secretary of State and the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company, Limited, which are contained in the annexure—contracts relating to the Bengal Nagpur Railway system. The relevant portions of these contracts are secs. 36 to 39 and sec. 49 of the main contract, dated the 9th March 1887 and secs. 2, 3, 5, 7 and 9 of the supplementary contract, dated the 5th November 1912. The effect of these sections is briefly as follows

The Company raised £3,000,000 in shares and paid this sum to the Secretary of State (sec. 36). This money became the absolute property of the Secretary of State (sec. 39) who agreed to pay interest thereon to the Company (sec. 37). The application of the receipts of the Company is dealt with in sec. 49. By sec. 2 of the supplementary contract of 1912 it was provided that the Secretary of State's open line capital as on the 31st December 1910 should be taken to be the sum of £15,500,000 and the Company's open line capital at the same date should be taken to be the sum £3,000,000. Sec 5 provided for the raising of money required for capital expenditure by means of advances by the Secretary of State, or by the issue of debentures or debenture stock of the Company. Sec 9 provided for the arrangements with regard to the interest payable to the Company and to the Secretary of State respectively and the division between them of the surplus profits of the undertaking.

It is admitted on behalf of Government that the sum of Rs. 37,31,945 payable on account of interest on debenture stock and debentures should be deducted from the Company's taxable income under sec. 9 (2) (iii) of the Income Tax Act as representing interest on borrowed capital. As regards the two other sums (a) and (b) in para. 2 it is contended on behalf of Government that these sums represent income which accrued in British India and is therefore taxable income unless it can be brought under one of the exceptions allowed by the Income Tax Act and that these sums do not represent interest on borrowed capital and cannot be deducted under sec. 9 (2) (iii) as claimed by the Company. In the opinion of the Board the two sums (a) Rs. 1,07,59,381 interest paid to the Secretary of State on the amount of his open line capital, and (b) Rs. 13,07,440 payment to the Secretary of State of the amount of guaranteed interest payable by him on the share capital of the Company are not interest on borrowed capital and cannot be deducted under sec. 9 (2) (iii) of the Income Tax Act from the Company's income and have been properly included by the Collector of Income

The Advocate-General and Mr. B. L. Mitter for the Secretary of State.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was delivered by

WOODROFFE, J.—This is a Reference under sec 51 (1) of the Indian Income Tax Act, VII of 1918. The Bengal Nagpur Railway Company have been called upon to pay tax on Rs. 1,72,60,585 income. This represents earnings of the Railway allocated for payment of the Company's share of surplus profits under the terms of agreement with the Secretary of State, namely, Rs. 14,63,387 and Rs. 1,57,98,766 allocated in payment of—(a) A sum of Rs. 1,07,59,381 being the interest debitable to the undertaking of the Secretary of State's open line capital. This sum is the interest due to the Secretary of State on 15½ million pounds capital found by him. (b) A sum of Rs. 13,07,440 being the payment to the Secretary of State in rupee currency of the amount of the guaranteed interest payable by him on the share of the capital of the Company. This interest is paid on 3 million pounds share capital found by the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company and made over to the Secretary of State to be held by the latter absolutely as his property and re-payable only in the event mentioned in sec. 94 of the agreement between the Secretary of State and the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company.

(c) A sum of Rs. 37,31,945 payable on account of interest on borrowed capital raised by issue of debenture stock and debentures. No claim to tax is made by the Government in respect of this sum which item therefore need not be further considered.

The Board has held that tax is payable on sums (a) and (b). Apparently it has treated this matter as if it were the case of a Company owning in the ordinary way a Railway, as a private venture and has therefore held it to be liable to tax on all earnings save such sums as may be deducted under sec. 9 (2) (iii) of the Income Tax Act. In this view only sum (c) could be deducted as representing interest on borrowed capital but not sums (a) and (b) which represent capital contributed by the Secretary of State and the Company respectively and not interest on borrowed capital. But I think the matter cannot be so dealt with, but the liability to tax must be determined with reference to the special agreement between the two parties and the nature of their relation to one another. From this point of view it is conceded that the Secretary of State is the owner of the Bengal Nagpur Railway which has been constructed and is now managed for him by the Company. This is their business on the income of which tax is leviable. In my opinion the principle applicable is that the Company should pay tax on what they got. The question then is—what is that sum? It is conceded by Government that sum (c) is to be excluded. It is conceded by the Company that they are taxable in respect of the sum of Rs. 14,63,387 representing their share of surplus profits which they get in return for their service in the management of the Railway. The question then is, are they liable in respect of any further sum, which means, do they get anything else? In my opinion they are not liable in respect of sum (a), this is interest due to the Secretary of State

v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR

on 15½ million capital found by him. It is true that this capital has been the means whereby profits have been earned in which the Company share. But this is not the Company's property. It is also three million pounds supplied by the Company, are the property of the Secretary of State, and all receipts earned by the use of these two sums are paid to Government account. Thereout the Government supply what sums are necessary to defray expenditure under the contract. Out of such receipts the Government repays itself the interest on the capital sum supplied by it. And this interest is deducted before the profits in which the Company are entitled to share can be ascertained. It is this share of surplus profits which is income earned by the Company and so liable to tax. Sum (b) represents interest which the Company get for their three million capital money and which has to be deducted before surplus profits can be ascertained. This is deducted in order that the Secretary of State may meet his obligations to the Company in respect of the three million pounds they have made over to him. It is stated that that money was borrowed in England and the liability is to pay interest in England. It is stated in the case of the Company that the sum of Rs. 13,07,440 is payment to the Secretary of State in rupee currency of the amount of the guaranteed interest payable by him on the share capital of the Company. The guaranteed interest on the Company's share capital is payable and paid in London as in the case of a debenture obligation by the Secretary of State and is independent of the earnings of the Railway. The payment, it is contended, of the sum of Rs. 13,07,440 constitutes the payment of a debt due from the Company to the Secretary of State. In effect the transaction is one in which the Secretary of State pays in London certain monies to the Company which he recoups himself in this country out of the earnings of the Railway. In that view of the case I am of opinion that the Company is not liable for tax in respect of this sum.

I answer then the Reference by saying that in my opinion the Company is liable only to tax on the sum stated in the Reference as being their share of surplus profits. A copy of this judgment is directed to be given to the Revenue Authority.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 99—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or 34, r. 14—Sale in contravention of these provisions, if a nullity—Purchase by mortgagee of mortgagor's equity of redemption at an execution sale in another suit, if the mortgagee holds such property as trustee for the mortgagor—Sale of properties of which a receiver has been appointed without leave of the Court appointing him, if absolutely void or voidable—Leave, if necessary for attachment and sale of properties of which a receiver has been appointed but of which he has not taken possession.

A and B, who had executed three mortgages in favour of C, sold their equity of redemption in the mortgaged properties to D, after the same had been purchased (benami) by C at a sale held in execution of a decree which C had obtained against A and B on a claim quite independent of the mortgage. The mortgagors' application to set aside the sale to C was dismissed by the Appellate Court and the sale confirmed. In the mortgage suit which C instituted against A and B, D was allowed to appear and it was contended on his behalf that C held the properties which he had purchased as a trustee for the mortgagors and that D, as purchaser of the equity of redemption, was entitled to redeem on accounts being taken as between a trustee and a beneficiary.

Held—That the mortgagors' application to set aside the sale to C having been dismissed and the sale confirmed, the equity of redemption passed to C and no right was left in the mortgagors which they could transfer to D; and that, in the circumstances, the latter could not contend that C held the property as a trustee for the mortgagors.

Held, also—That Or. 34, r. 14 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 is confined to claims arising under the mortgage and does not apply to a case where the sale takes place in execution of a decree for money upon a claim not arising under the mortgage.

This appeal arises out of a suit upon three mortgages executed by the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in favour of the Plaintiff. The mortgages were dated the

The suit was originally instituted on the 15th January 1913 against the mortgagors (the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2) and the transferees (the Defendants Nos. 3 and 4), and was laid at Rs. 11,114-10 as The Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 entered appearance and filed written statement on the 9th March 1913. The preliminary judgment was passed on the 4th November 1913 and the preliminary decree on the 22nd December 1913.

Two days after the suit was instituted, i.e., on the 17th January 1913, an application was made for the appointment of a receiver, and on the 5th May 1913 an order was made for the appointment of a receiver. On the 20th June 1913 one Jagabandhu Bose was appointed receiver. On the 16th July 1913 the Plaintiff made an application to the Court stating that Jagabandhu Bose was unable to work as receiver and that some one else should be appointed in his place. On the 24th July 1913 one Khettra Nath Pal was appointed receiver, and on the 26th August 1913 possession of the properties was delivered to the receiver. On the 25th July 1914 Khettra Nath was discharged from receivership.

Before the institution of the suit on the mortgages, the Plaintiff instituted four suits against the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, in the year 1912, three out of which were for rent in respect of the mortgaged properties. The fourth suit was for money due to Plaintiff and was brought in the Small Cause Court Side of the Subordinate Judge's Court. That suit was decreed against the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The decree was transferred to the Munsif's Court for execution, and in execution of the decree, a nine annas share of durmokarani interest of the 10 mouzahs which were mortgaged was sold on the 12th July 1913 for Rs. 1,002 the ostensible purchaser being one Tinkari Bose. On the 17th March 1914, the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 applied for setting aside the sale and it was set aside by the Munsif who held that Tinkari Bose was benamdar for the Plaintiff, and the price fetched at the sale was inadequate. On appeal, however, the District Judge set aside the Munsif's judgment and confirmed the sale. On application to the High Court a rule was issued, to set aside the order, but it was discharged on the 23rd November 1914. On the 8th August 1914 possession was delivered to Tinkari Bose. On the 7th September 1914 Tinkari Bose applied to be made a party to the mortgage suit and he was made a party on the 14th November 1914. On the 13th October 1915 Tinkari executed a conveyance of the properties purchased by him in favour of the Plaintiff.

On the 22nd August 1915 the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 sold their equity of redemption to the Appellant. The Appellant on the 14th February 1916 applied to be added as a party to the mortgage suit. The application, however, was rejected on account of some formal defect on the 18th February 1916. On the 23rd February 1916 the application for being added as a party was renewed, and it was again rejected on the 31st July 1916. The Appellant then moved the High Court against the order with the result that the Court ordered that he be made a party and the objections of both parties may be heard. The main objection of the Plaintiff was that the Appellant did not purchase any interest in the properties so as to entitle him to redemption of the same. The Appellant's principal contentions were first that the purchase ostensibly made in the name of Tinkari Bose was really made by the Plaintiff, Tinkari being merely his benamdar, secondly, that under the circumstances the Plaintiff was really a trustee for the mortgagors, and the Appellant was entitled to redeem on accounts being taken between a trustee and a beneficiary; and thirdly, that the equity of redemption having been sold at a time when the receiver had already been appointed, and without the permission of the Court which appointed the receiver, the sale was altogether void in law, and that even, if voidable, it can be avoided in the present litigation.

In execution of one of the rent-decrees obtained by the Plaintiff against the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, their mourasi interest in two of the mortgaged properties were put up to sale on the 25th May 1915 and was purchased ostensibly by Tinkari Bose.

In execution of another rent-decree obtained by the Plaintiff, the jote mandali interest of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the 11th mouzah mortgaged was put up to sale and was also purchased by Tinkari Bose on the 22nd January 1915.

In execution of the third rent-decree the cutchery bari of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the mortgaged properties was put up to sale, and was purchased by the Plaintiff himself, on the 6th November 1913, who obtained possession of it on the 17th July 1914.

The Court below overruled all these contentions of the Appellant. The first question for consideration is whether the purchase by Tinkari was benami for the Plaintiff. The onus of proving benami is certainly upon the Appellant.

The Appellant relies (among other things) upon the observations in the judgment of the Munsif, dated the 17th March 1914 setting aside the sale, and in the order of the High Court, dated the 23rd November discharging the rule. The Munsif held that Tinkari was "decree-holder's man and the property was purchased in his benami," and further that "Tinkari Bose is a mere benamdar which fact is not challenged by the decree-holder or auction-purchaser." He also found that there were irregularities in the publication of the sale and the properties were sold at an inadequate price. The order of the Munsif, however, as stated above, was set aside on appeal by the District Judge on the 29th May 1914. The learned Judge did not consider the question of benami, but held that the properties were not sold at an inadequate price and the judgment-debtors had not sustained substantial loss and accordingly decreed the appeal and confirmed the sale. The High Court in discharging the rule (granted for setting aside the order of the District Judge) observed that while the mortgage suit was pending the decree-holder "executed his money-decree and in execution purchased some of the mortgaged properties himself." As contended on behalf of the Respondent, the order of the Munsif having been set aside by the District Judge on appeal, the Appellant cannot rely upon the observations of the Munsif on the question of benami, nor can he rely upon the observation of the High Court as it was merely a statement of facts and not a decision upon the question, no question of benami having been raised or considered by it. It appears that separate appeals were preferred by the Plaintiffs and Tin-kari against the order of the Munsif to the District Judge, but as stated above, the judgment of the District Judge proceeded only upon the question whether substantial loss had resulted to the mortgagor by the sale. There is no reference to the question of benami in the judgment, and it does not appear that the question of benami was raised before the Appellate Court. All that can be said is that the fact expressly stated in the judgment of the Munsif, viz., that Tinkari was benamdar was not challenged by him or the decree-holder (the Plaintiff), before the Munsif, nor before the High Court as the statement of facts quoted above indicates.

The Plaintiff has not examined himself. He has, however, examined Tinkari, and the latter says that he purchased the properties with his own money and was in possession until he conveyed the properties to the Plaintiff. There is no evidence that the purchase money belonged to the Plaintiff, but the Appellant relies upon various matters as showing the improbability of Tinkari being the real purchaser.

Tinkari, it appears, is a pleader's clerk, his earnings, according to his own account, are about Rs. 60 per month. He says he has some 10 bighas of lakheraj land and 32 bighas of jamai lands, but the lands are recorded in the record-of-rights in the names of his brothers. He never saw the disputed mouzali and did not make any enquiry about the condition and income of the mouzalis before the purchase. He says he had about 1,525 rupees at the house of Atul Babu, pleader, whom he served as clerk. This Atul Babu has not been examined. The incumbrances on the properties amounted to Rs. 14,400. There were some costs in taking delivery of possession and a criminal case cost about Rs. 200. It is improbable that a person like Tinkari would purchase the properties at Rs. 1,002 with such heavy liabilities when admittedly he made no enquiries about them. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, says that he was in the habit of purchasing properties at auction-sales for selling them at a profit. But Tinkari speaks of only one such purchase—a bastu, and that he subsequently sold it. It does not appear what the value of the property was.

The properties purchased by Tinkari at the sale held in execution of the Small Cause Court decree, as well as at the sales held in execution of the rent-decrees, were all sold by him to the Plaintiff for Rs. 1,101 by a kobala, dated the 13th October 1915. There is an endorsement of payment of the consideration on the kobala by the Sub-Registrar. It is to be observed that in the conveyance, it is stated "you shall be entitled to take from my Tehsildar Parbatu Charan Bose the balance of the tehibil in his hands." The amount of cash money in the hands of the Tehsildar is not stated. Such a provision is extraordinary and is only consistent with the document being a release by a benamdar in favour of the real owner. Tinkari admits that there was no account of arrears due from the mahal before the sale to the Plaintiff and the price was settled by making a rough account of income and expenditure and he does not remember if he saw that account. One Kunjo Patnaik who took delivery of possession is said to have been in the service of Tinkari. Kunjo is admittedly now a clerk of Tarak Babu, pleader, son of the Plaintiff. Tinkari says that Kunjo was in his service for about a month after delivery of possession of the properties. The delivery of possession took place on the 8th August 1914. The Appellant has produced two post cards which go to show that Kunjo was acting after September 1914 and up to the time when Tinkari executed the conveyance to the Plaintiff. The first post card (Ex. B) is dated the 15th November 1914 written by Kunjo to Boloram Mahto, admittedly a servant of the Plaintiff and in charge of the cutchery bari after Plaintiff's purchase of the cutchery. In that post card Kunjo wrote as follows.—"Do not be anxious for your salary and fooding charges. Defray those expenses from your pocket now. I shall go there as soon as I can and on my arrival there I shall pay your salary and other dues." The second post card (Ex. B1) is dated 6th December 1914 and is also written by Kunjo to Boloram. It advises the remittance of Rs. 2 by money order for fooding charges of Boloram and then states: "You should guard the fuel and timber and make enquiries if any one commits theft. Tell Tarak Babu (the Defendant No. 1) not to cut paddy from the niyote lands of Jadra, and if he cuts forcibly, make two or three persons witnesses, a criminal case shall have to be instituted against him. Tarak Babu is defeated in the High Court so he has no title to the village."

There is another post card, dated the 25th October purporting to be written by Jhareswar Sen to Kunjo, in which it was stated that master had gone to Calcutta, and requested Kunjo to keep the house and the timber and fuel in the charge of Balai (Boloram) Mahto, gave directions if anything "untoward" happened, and also directions about some block of stones for constructing a granary. The Court below says that the genuineness of the post cards has not been satisfactorily proved and even if genuine they do not go to prove much for the Defendant. Jhareswar denies that the post card (Ex. B2) was written by him, but the Defendant Tarak says that it is in the handwriting of Jhareswar, and Exs. B and B1 are in the handwriting of Kunjo. There is nothing suspicious about the appearance of these post cards, and the contents are such as are likely to be written to the persons addressed. Kunjo who is in the service of Plaintiff's son has not been examined. If, as Tinkari says, Kunjo was in his service only for about a month after the 8th August 1914, it is difficult to see why he was writing letters to Boloram about his salary and about the mahal in November or December 1914, nor again why Kunjo should write letters about the payment of salary of Boloram or ask him to look after the affairs of the mahal bearing in mind the fact that Boloram was the Plaintiff's servant and in charge of only the cutchery bari which alone had been purchased by the Plaintiff at that time.

These post cards indicate that at the time when they were written, the Plaintiff was the owner of the properties (which was long before the conveyance by Tinkari to the Plaintiff), and that Kunjo, Boloram and Jhareswar were all agents for and acting for the Plaintiff.

The Defendant No. 1 Tarak says that he came to the Plaintiff at Midnapur for compromise when the appeal in the case for setting aside the sale was pending before the District Judge, and that the Plaintiff at that time had agreed to give up the properties if the mortgage debt and also the decretal debt (under the Small Cause Court decree) were paid to him. It is said that Tarak came with one Anukul Babu to see the Plaintiff in that connection. This Anukul Babu has not been examined. But the Plaintiff has not come forward to deny the facts stated by Tarak.

Then again the Defendant examined some witnesses to show that there was some dispute as to the rents payable (about kists and interests) and also about rent-receipts being granted in the name of Tinkari, that they came to the Plaintiff for settlement and that Plaintiff gave certain orders in that connection. This is said to have taken place before the Plaintiff's purchase from Tinkari. The Court below has disbelieved the evidence of these witnesses. The witnesses are tenants of the mahal, and the Appellant has got a seven annas share in the mouzahs. The same thing, however, may be said of the witnesses for the Plaintiff who denied that there was any such dispute, as the Plaintiff is the owner of a nine annas share of the mouzahs. However that may be, the witnesses for the Defendant were examined from the 4th to the 9th December when all those statements were made. The Plaintiff's witnesses were examined on the 10th and 11th December and yet the Plaintiff did not come forward to deny them. An explanation is attempted in this Court, viz., that the Plaintiff's daughter was seriously ill at Calcutta and he had to come away. But assuming that was true, there was no application for adjournment of the case, nor any application for examination by Commissioner. There is no doubt that the onus of proving benami was upon the Defendant, but after the definite statements made by the Defendant's witnesses as to the Plaintiff's dealings with the property indicating that he was the owner of the property, the Plaintiff, we think ought to have examined himself and denied those statements on oath. There is also no explanation why Kunjo who as stated above is the clerk of the Plaintiff's son was not examined by the Plaintiff. We do not think the Court below was right in rejecting the evidence of the Plaintiff in the manner it has done.

As to the alleged admission made by the Plaintiff that Tinkari was his benamidar, and that the tenants should accept dakhilas in his name, it looks at first sight as improbable, because the real owner, if he wants to retain the benami character is not likely to give out that he is the real owner. But if, what the Defendant No. 1 Tarak and the witnesses state, viz., that they came to the Plaintiff for settlement be true, the very fact that they came to the Plaintiff for that purpose before he purchased the property from Tinkari would indicate that the persons concerned knew that Tinkari was the benamdar and Plaintiff was the real owner. It is also suggested on behalf of the Appellant that the interviews spoken to by Tarak and other witnesses took place after the proceeding for setting aside the sale had been disposed of by the Munsif, and in which the fact that Tinkari was the benamdar for the Plaintiff was not challenged by Tinkari or by the Plaintiff. There is some force in this suggestion.

It is true that the dakhilas were granted to tenants in the name of Tinkari, and Tinkari was sued for rent by the landlords to some of which the Appellant (as a co-owner of the mahal) was a party. But if the purchase by Tinkari was benami for the Plaintiff, the papers would stand in the name of the benamdar in order to keep up the benami character of the transaction as is usual in such cases. The landlords sued the person who was the ostensible purchaser and there is nothing to show that they were aware that Tinkari was not the real owner. Besides they had no interest in raising a dispute as to who was the real purchaser, as they would get decree for rent whether it was brought against the benamdar or the real purchaser. The claim for rent prior to the date of purchase appears to have been contested by Tinkari and the decree directed that he would not be liable for the period prior to his purchase. But any defence necessary to be set up on behalf of the purchaser would be set up in the name of Tinkari, the ostensible purchaser. It appears that one Ramkalpo Ganguli bid at the sale up to Rs. 1,000, and Tinkari bid up to Rs. 1,002. This Ramkalpo appears to have been the am-mukhtear of the Appellant's estate at the time of the sale, though he was dismissed subsequently. The Appellant again expressed his willingness to purchase the properties a little before proceedings were taken for setting aside the sale. All these facts, however, are consistent with Tinkari being a benamdar and they only go to show that the Appellant was desirous of purchasing the properties, as he has a seven annas share in the properties and he did, as a matter of fact, purchase the equity of redemption from the mortgagors on the 22nd August 1915.

The opinion of the trial Court upon the question of credibility of witnesses is certainly entitled to great weight, and the question of benami is not to be decided upon suspicion. But the learned Subordinate Judge has not, we think, given due weight to the circumstantial evidence and the probabilities of the case pointed out above in considering the evidence of the witnesses, and the inference arising from the absence of the Plaintiff and Kunjo from the witness-box. On the whole we are of opinion that it was the Plaintiff and not Tinkari who was the real purchaser.

The next question is whether the Plaintiff having purchased the property in execution of a money decree was a trustee for the mortgagors.

Sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act provided that where a mortgagee in execution of a decree for the satisfaction of any claim whether arising under the mortgage or not attaches the mortgaged property, he shall not be entitled to bring such property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit under sec. 67. The Full Bench in the case of Asutosh Sikdar v. Behari Lal Kirtania (1) held that a sale held in contravention of the provisions of sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act is not a nullity, but an irregular sale liable to be avoided merely on the proof that the terms of the section had been contravened. Under Or. 34, r. 14, however, the rule is confined only to claims arising under the mortgage. Here the sale took place on the 12th July 1913, (after Or. 34, r. 14 was enacted) in execution of a decree for money upon a claim not arising under the mortgage. But the learned pleader for the Appellant relies upon the principle of equity enunciated by Macpherson, J., in Kamini Debi v. Ram Lochan Sarkar (2), and recognised by the Judicial Committee in the case of Khizarjmal v. Dham (3). In the former case, Macpherson, J., held that the mortgagee cannot properly, in execution of a simple decree for money, the repayment of which is secured by a mortgage, attach and sell the mortgagor's equity of redemption in the property mortgaged, but if he does so, and purchases it himself, he becomes a trustee for the mortgagor, against whom he cannot acquire an irredeemable title. This case came up for consideration before the Judicial Committee in Mahabir Prasad v. Macnaghten (4), where their Lordships observed that it was probable that in the case of Kamini Debi v. Ram Lochan (2), the mortgagee had not obtained leave from the Court to purchase, and that leave to bid puts an end to the disability of the mortgagee, and puts him in the same position as any independent purchaser. See also Mahomed Mira Ravathar v. Sakvasi Vijaya Raghunadha (5). The learned pleader sought to distinguish Mahabir Prasad's case (4) on the ground that there the mortgaged property itself was sold, and not merely the equity of redemption. This distinction was also sought to be drawn by the High Court in that case. But their Lordships after referring to the argument of Mr. Doyne based upon the decision of Macpherson, J., in Kamini Debi's case (2) that "the Respondents must be held to have purchased as trustees for the Appellants" observed "the same argument which is not raised in the pleadings seems to have been addressed to the High Court, who in their judgment distinguish between that case and the present, on the ground that in the former, the mortgagee did not purchase the mortgaged property, but the mortgagor's equity of redemption. Their Lordships cannot regard that explanation as satisfactory. It appears to them to be probable that, in the case referred to, the mortgagee had not obtained leave from the Court to purchase. The report does not state that he had: and the reasoning of the learned Judge, and the mass of authorities by which he supports it, have a direct bearing upon the case of a mortgagee purchasing without leave, and in that view of the facts his reasoning is intelligible and logical. Leave to bid puts an end to the disability of the mortgagee, and puts him in the same position as any independent purchaser. If the decision of Macpherson, J., proceeded on the footing that the mortgagee had obtained leave, their Lordships are not prepared to assent to it. On that footing it appears to them that purchase of the equity of redemption by the mortgagee at a judicial sale would have the same effect against the mortgagor as the purchaser of the mortgaged property." Much reliance is placed on the case of Khiarajmal v. Diam (3), where Lord Davey observed:—"Their Lordships throw no doubt on the principle which has been acted on in many cases in India that a mortgagee cannot by obtaining a money decree for the mortgage debt, and taking the equity of redemption in execution relieve himself of his obligations as mortgagee or deprive the mortgagor of his right to redeem on accounts taken, and with the safeguards usual in a suit on the mortgage." It is to be noted that these observations of their Lordships had reference to the case of a purchase by the mortgagee in execution of a money decree for the mortgage debt. Referring to the fact that the lower Court had made a decree for redemption of the whole estate on the ground that "the mortgagee could not acquire the equity of redemption directly or indirectly by purchase at a Court sale except by a suit brought on the mortgage on accounts taken and time specially allowed for redemption," it was observed:—"Their Lordships cannot concur in this view which they think is based on a misapplication of a sound principle of equity," and then after stating that their Lordships throw no doubt on the principle which had been acted on in many cases in India (quoted above) observed:—"But In suit No. 160 of 1878, the debt sued for was not the mortgage debt. The creditors were different and the debtors were different, and the debt does not appear from the plaint to have been secured by a mortgage." It appears therefore that the principle which had been acted upon in many cases in India in their Lordships' opinion was not applicable to cases where the debt was not the mortgage debt.

In Martand v. Dhondo (6), where the mortgagee in execution of a money decree attached the mortgaged property, and without notifying or disclosing his mortgage lien caused the properties to be sold, and without obtaining leave from Court to bid at the sale, purchased some of the properties benami at an under value, it was held that the sale was rendered nugatory not by the provisions of sec. 294 (though permission to bid granted under that section might have validated the purchase) but by the impossibility of a mortgagee by such sales and purchases freeing himself from the liability to be redeemed. The learned Judges referred among other cases to Bhugobatty Dassi v. Shama Charan Bose (7) and Kamini v. Ram Lochan (2), but did not refer to Mohabir Prosad v. Macnaghten (4), nor does it appear to have been cited in argument.

In the case of Mayan Pathati v. Pakuian (8), the question for decision was whether a sale in contravention of sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act was void or merely voidable and it was held that it was the latter. There is an observation, however, that "notwithstanding the confirmation it may be that the sale in question cannot affect the right of the Appellants owing to the impossibility of the Respondent as mortgagee freeing himself by such a sale and purchase from the liability to be redeemed. Martand v. Dhondo (6).'' In that case the sale was in contravention of the provisions of sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act.

In a later case Dharanikota Venkayya v. Budharazu Surayya (9), the Madras High Court declined to follow the decisions in Kamini Debi v. Ram Lochan (2) and Martand v. Dhondo (6). In the case of Abdul Rashid Khan v. Dilsukh Rai (10), where the equity of redemption was not sold in execution of a money-decree obtained for the mortgage debt, Stanley, C. J. and Burkitt, J., observed "independently of the provisions contained in sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, we are not prepared to hold that a mortgagee is precluded by law from purchasing the equity of redemption and freeing himself from his liability to be redeemed provided that the purchase is carried out in complete good faith and no advantage is taken by him of his position as mortgagee. We are not aware of any principle upon which such a sale can be impeached merely on the ground that the purchaser was a mortgagee of the purchased property." In a later case, Lal Bahadur Singh v. Abharan Singh (11), a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court were of opinion that if a mortgagee brings the mortgaged property to sale in contravention of the provisions of sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, such sale is not void, but merely voidable. Stanley, C. J., observed: "It seems to me that if the equity of redemption is sold in execution of a decree and purchased either by a third party, or by a mortgagee with the leave of the Court, the equity of redemption is transferred from those persons who previously held it to the purchaser and that the result is that if the sale is neither void nor set aside, there is no longer a right to redeem left in the previous owners of the equity of redemption." The question in these cases was whether a sale in contravention of sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act is a nullity—a question which was settled in our Court by the decision of the Full Bench in Asutosh Sikdar v. Behari Lal (1). But in Poncham Lal v. Kishun Prosad (12), Woodroffe and Caspersz, JJ., observed that it was a well-established principle that a purchase by the mortgagee of the equity of redemption constitutes him a trustee for the mortgagor, that he does not (unless there has been a release of the equity of redemption or other circumstance which in law would bar his right to redeem) acquire an irredeemable title, and that the mortgagor is under no necessity to have the sale set aside first, in order to be entitled to redeem the property. But in that case although the property was sold in execution of a money decree (on a roka) it was governed by the provisions of sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act which was then in force. On the other hand, Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ., in the case of Bharat Ramanuj Das v. Ishan Chandra (13) held that a mortgagee can purchase an equity of redemption at a sale held in execution of a money decree obtained by a stranger against the mortgagor and that he does not hold the equity of redemption as a trustee for the mortgagor and for his benefit. The learned Judges disseminated from the case of Erusappa Mudaliar v. Commercial and Land Mortgage Bank, Ltd. (11) and distinguished the case of Pancham Lal v. Kishun Prosad (12) on the ground that it was a case of a purchase by the mortgagee in contravention of the provisions of sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act. The case of Pancham Lal v. Kishun Prosad (12) came up for consideration before the Full Bench in Uttam Chandra Daw v. Raj Krishna Dalal (15). It is contended for the Appellant that the principle of equity was recognized in that case, but could not be given effect to having regard to the form in which the suit was laid. The equity of redemption in that case was sold in execution of a decree upon a claim not arising under the mortgage, but the principle of equity was considered on the assumption that the sale was held in execution of a decree arising under the mortgage. One of the learned Judges (Mookerjee, J.) expressed his opinion that there was no such equity. The other Judges did not express any definite opinion as the suit was not one framed for enforcing the trust, if any, nor brought within the period of limitation prescribed for such a suit. It cannot therefore be said that the Full Bench decided the point raised before us.

But the principle of equity enunciated by Macpherson, J., in Kamini Devi's case (2) was with reference to a simple decree for money, the repayment of which is secured by a mortgage. In the case of Khiurajmal v. Diam (3) also, Lord Davey referred to the principle of equity as applicable to cases where the equity of redemption is sought to be taken in execution of a money decree for the mortgage debt. In the other cases cited above there was either a contravention of the provisions of sec. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act (in cases decided before Or. 34, r. 14 was enacted) or no leave to bid was obtained by the mortgagee.

It is unnecessary to consider in the present case whether the principle of equity is applicable to such cases. In the present case the equity of redemption was sold in execution of a decree for money upon a claim quite independent of the mortgage. The leave of the Court was obtained by the mortgagee to bid at the sale. The judgment-debtors applied for setting aside the sale but the application was dismissed by the Appellate Court, and the sale was confirmed. The equity of redemption passed to the purchaser, and no right was left in the mortgagors which they could transfer to the Appellant. The Appellant in these circumstances cannot contend that the purchaser held the property as trustee for the mortgagors, assuming that the Appellant as a Defendant can set up the trust as an answer to the suit without bringing a suit to enforce the trust, if any.

• We are accordingly of opinion that the second contention must be overruled.

The third contention is that the sale having been held at a time when a receiver was appointed, without the permission of the Court which appointed the receiver, the sale is void, at any rate is voidable and can be declared invalid in the present suit.

As stated above, an application for appointment of a receiver was made on the 17th January 1913, and an order was made for the appointment on the 5th May 1913. On the 20th June 1913 an order was made for appointing Jagabandhu Bose as receiver and for removal of Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 from possession and delivery of possession to the receiver. The Plaintiff on the 16th July 1913 put in a petition to the Court stating that Jagabandhu was unable to work, and prayed that one Khetra might be appointed receiver. Khetra was appointed receiver on the 24th July 1913, and the Nazir was directed to deliver possession to Khetra by removal of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 from possession. But the sale had taken place on the 21st July 1913 before Khetra was appointed. It is contended, however, that the order for appointment of Jagabandhu as receiver was made before the sale (on the 5th May 1913) and Khetra was appointed in his place, that the legal effect of the appointment was to vest the estate in the receiver and the legal possession must be taken to have been with the receiver, though no actual possession was taken until Khetra was appointed on the 24th July 1913.

As there was no order for security being given by the receiver, the order for appointment had the effect of vesting the estate in the receiver as between the parties to the suit, i.e., as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. But in the first place, the Plaintiff, though he was the mortgagee, obtained the decree in the Small Cause Court not as a mortgagee, but as an ordinary creditor, and as such stood in the same position as a stranger to the suit. Now the rule that "the possession of a receiver may not be disturbed without leave, does not apply, so far at least as third persons are concerned, until a receiver has been actually appointed, and is in actual possession. It is not enough that an order has been made directing the appointment of a receiver. Until pointment has been perfected and receiver is actually in possession, a creditor is not debarred from proceeding to execution. The order appointing a receiver is for the benefit of the parties to the action. It does not affect third persons until the appointment is completed and perfected. An execution creditor may therefore seize chattels after an order has been made appointing a receiver on his giving security but before the security has been given or possession taken." [See Kerr on Receivers, 7th Edition, 195-196; Kunai Lal Jalan v. Manoo Bibi (16)]. In the next place, the sale held without the leave of the Court which appointed the receiver was not void, but was only voidable. Reference was made to High on Receivers, 4th Edition, page 167, where it is stated: "Even though an execution has been levied upon the property before the appointment of the receiver, it is held that there cannot be a lawful sale under such execution without leave of the Court appointing the receiver . . . And the sale under execution of the equity of redemption of premises which are in the possession of a receiver pending a foreclosure suit is void and no title thereunder passes to the purchaser." The property in the cases referred to in the above passage, however, was in the actual possession of the receiver. In our Court, moreover, sales of properties in the possession of the receiver without leave of the Court which appointed the receiver have not been treated as void, but as voidable. In the case of Livmia Ashton v. Madhab Mani Dasi (17), it was observed: "A purchaser of such property (in the hands of a receiver) at an execution sale buys at his peril and the sale may be cancelled upon an appropriate application to the execution Court," and in Kanai Lal Jalan v. Manoo Bibi (16), the learned Judges said:

(17) 11 C. L. J. 489, 494 (1910).

RAJA JAGADISH CHANDRA DEO DHABAL DEB v. BHUBANESWAR MITRA.

"It is further clear that the sale held at the instance of the Maharaja was at the worst only voidable . . . in other words when property is in the custody of a receiver appointed by a Court, a sale under an execution issued by another Court may be avoided by an appropriate process. In the case before us, no steps have ever been taken either by the receiver or by the beneficiaries for cancellation of the execution sale in which the Maharaja became the purchaser."

In the present case, it appears from the judgment of the High Court discharging the rule obtained by the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the proceedings for setting aside the sale, that the sale was sought to be set aside on two grounds, one of which was that the sale was held without taking the permission of the Court which appointed the receiver. But although the question was raised it was abandoned, and the mortgagors having abandoned the point, their assignee the Appellant cannot be allowed to raise it again by way of defence to a suit. We are accordingly of opinion that this contention also should be overruled.

Although we are of opinion that the Plaintiff purchased the property in the benami of Tinkari, the appeal must fail on our findings upon the other two points.

The result is that the appeal must be dismissed but we direct that each party his own costs in both Courts.

C. Appeal dismissed.

ASHUTOSH CHAT-

Calcutta Rent Act (III of 1920, B. C.), sec. 18, jurisdiction of President of the Tribunal to revise Rent Controller's order fixing the standard rent under sec. 2 (f) (i)—President's jurisdiction to revise, if limited to standard rents fixed under sec. 15 only—"Fix," meaning of.

In respect of certain premises let out "after the first day of November 1918," the Rent Controller, after a consideration of the evidence, determined the standard rent of the premises under sec. 2 (f) (ii) of the Rent Act. On an application to the President of the Tribunal under sec. 18 for revision of the order, he held that revision under sec. 18 could be made only in cases where the Controller fixed the standard rent under sec. 15 of the Act and that hence the present order was not open to revision by him:

Held—That the order of the Rent Controller is liable to revision by the President of the Tribunal under sec. 18 of the Act. The Act contemplates fixing of the standard rent by the Controller even in cases not coming under sec. 15, in other words, in cases coming under sec. 2 (f) (ii).

In the absence of any definition in the Act, the word "fix" means "to settle," "to specify" or "to determine," and there is no sufficient reason for limiting the word to the case of settlement of the rent by the Controller, when there is no clear indication in the Act that the word is used in that restricted sense.

This was a Rule granted on the 24th July 1922 against the order of Mr. S. C. Banerjee, President of the Tribunal (Calcutta Improvement Trust), dated the 10th July 1922, refusing to entertain an application for revision of an order of the Rent Controller (Mr. B. D. Banerjee), dated the 28th September 1921, fixing the standard rent.

The material facts of the case are as follows:—In certain proceedings under the Calcutta Rent Act, arising out of an application to the Rent Controller by the tenant, for certifying the standard rent of certain premises, the landlord stated that the premises were let out at a monthly rent of Rs. 70 and the tenant stated that it was Rs. 50 only.

The Rent Controller, after a consideration of the evidence, came to the conclusion that the rent should not be more than Rs. 50 per mensem and that the rent was fixed at this rate when the tenant came in, and he determined Rs. 50 as the standard rent of the premises under sec. 2 (f) (ii) of the Act. Both parties applied to the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal for revision under sec. 18 of the Act, and he held that an application for revision under sec. 18 could be made only in cases where the Rent Controller fixes the standard rent under the provisions of sec. 15 of the Act, that as the Controller's decision in the present case had been given expressly under sec. 2 (f) (ii), he did not "fix" any standard rent for the premises and that therefore the order was one which could not be revised by him under sec. 18. Against this decision the present Rule was obtained.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose for the Petitioner.

Babu Abinash Chandra Ghose for the Opposite Party.

This Rule arises out of proceedings under the Calcutta Rent Act, and the question involved is whether the President of the Tribunal is right in holding that an application for revision under sec. 18 of the Act could not be made in this case because there was no decision of the Controller fixing the standard rent.

The landlord stated that the premises were let out at a rent of Rs. 70; the tenant, on the other hand, stated that it was Rs. 50 only. The tenant applied to the Rent Controller for certifying the standard rent.

The Rent Controller after a consideration of the evidence came to the conclusion that the rent should not be more than Rs. 50 per month inclusive of taxes, and that the rent was fixed at this rate when the applicant came in, and he made the following order: "Rupees fifty inclusive of taxes is therefore the standard rent of this portion (eastern) of the premises occupied by the applicant under sec. 2 (f) (ii) of the Act."

Both parties applied to the President of the Tribunal under sec. 18 of the Act, and he was of opinion that an application for revision under sec. 18 could be made only in cases where the Rent Controller fixes the standard rent under the provisions of sec. 15 of the Act, that as the Controller's decision in the present case has been given expressly under sec. 2 (f) (ii) of the Act, he did not fix any standard rent for the premises and that therefore the order was one which could not be revised under sec. 18 of the Act.

Now sec. 18 provides for an application for revision to the President of the Tribunal, if the decision of the Controller fixing the standard rent for any premises is questioned. There is no doubt that there was a decision of the Controller in this case. The only question is whether there was a decision fixing the standard rent.

The standard rent is defined in sec. 2, cl. (f), and it means (i) the rent at which the premises were let on the first day of November 1918, or when they were not let on that date, the rent at which they were last let before that date and after the first day of November 1915, with the addition, in either case, of ten per cent. on such rent; (ii) in the case of any premises which were or shall be first let after the first day of November 1918, the rent at which the premises were or may be first let; (iii) in the cases specified in sec. 15, the rent fixed by the Controller.

The word "fix" has not been defined in the Act. It no doubt means "to settle" and that is the view which has been taken by the learned President. It also means "to specify" or "to determine" (see the Oxford Dictionary). In the absence of any definition of the word in the Act, we do not see any sufficient reason for limiting the word to the case of settlement of the rent by the Controller, unless there is a clear indication in the Act that the word is used in that restricted sense. We do not find any such indication. On the other hand, reference to some of the other sections would indicate that the expression "fixing" is applicable not only to the cases specified in sec. 15, but also cases coming under the 1st and 2nd clauses of sec. 2 (f). Thus sec. 8 provides that "Wherever an increase of the rent of any premises is allowable under the provisions of this Act, no such increase shall be recoverable until the expiry of one month after the landlord has served on the tenant a notice in writing of his intention to increase the rent accompanied by a certificate from the Controller fixing the standard rent." It appears from the terms of this section that no increase of the rent allowable under the Act can be recovered unless notice be served upon the tenant accompanied by a certificate from the Controller fixing the standard rent.

This will cover a case of the rent originally payable on the 1st November 1918 with the addition of the statutory 10 per cent. on such rent.

It is contended, however, by the learned pleader for the Opposite Party that that section contemplates a case where the rent exceeds the standard rent because the additional 10 per cent. is included in the standard rent under sec. 2 (f).

There is no doubt that the ten per cent. is included in the standard rent; but the 10 per cent. addition is an "increase of the rent" which is allowable under the provisions of this Act, because sec. 2 (f) is also a provision of the Act, and the section seems to lay down that no sum in excess of the rent originally payable can be recovered without a certificate from the Controller fixing the standard rent, where of course there is a dispute between the parties.

The learned pleader for the Opposite Party pointed out that sec. 8 of the Burma Rent Act (II of 1890), which has been followed by the Calcutta Rent Act, lays down that the certificate of the Controller fixing the standard rent must be served along with a notice upon the tenant only in cases mentioned in secs. 5 and 7, but that the cls. (a) and (b) of sec. 8 which thus limit the application of the section, have been omitted from the Calcutta Rent Act. The natural inference, however, from that omission would be that instead of confining the operation of sec. 8 to certain cases, i.e., secs. 5 and 7, the Calcutta Rent Act provides generally for a notice wherever an increase of the rent of any premises is allowed. The learned pleader also contended that the word "certifying" has been used in the Act as distinguished from "fixing." But the two expressions

Then in the case of Harimohon Shaha v. Baburali (12), where the auction-purchaser who had obtained symbolical possession brought a suit for possession of land within 12 years of the date on which he obtained symbolical possession, it was held that the suit was not barred. Maclean, C. J., observed as follows:—"Be that as it may, we have the fact which cannot be got over, that possession, call it symbolical possession if you will, was given by a Civil Court in this case to the Plaintiff, and in the case of Lokeshwar Koer v. Purgan Roy (10) it was laid down that the formal possession given by a Civil Court under an execution operates, in point of law and of fact, as between the parties, as a complete transfer of possession from one party to the other." . . .

"It may be that it was wrongly given by reason of the fact that actual possession ought to have been given under sec. 318 of the Code, but still possession was given to the Plaintiff by a Civil Court; and under the circumstances, it seems to me that the period of limitation must begin to run from the date of that possession being given." See also Mir Wazi-uddin v. Lala Deoki Nandan (13), where the learned Judges considered the question whether the auction-purchaser at a sale for arrears of revenue has 12 years from the date on which formal possession is delivered to him by the Collector.

So far as our Court is concerned, all the later decisions are in favour of the view taken by the lower Court.

In the Madras High Court, the view taken by this Court has been adopted. See Govind v. Venkata Sastrulu (14), where it was held that the delivery of symbolical possession, even though erroneously made, i.e., even though made under circumstances which do not make sec. 319 applicable operates to give the person so put in possession a fresh cause of action and to place the judgment-debtor in the position of a trespasser.

The Allahabad High Court has also taken the same view; see Jagannath v. Milap Chand (15).

The Bombay High Court as stated above has taken a different view in the case of Mahadeo v. Janu (4), but the weight of authority is in favour of the view that symbolical possession as against the judgment-debtor operates as actual possession and gives a fresh start of limitation even in a case coming under sec. 318 corresponding in Or. 21, r. 95 of the present Code. We must accordingly hold that the suit is not barred by limitation.

It has been contended by the learned pleader for the Appellant that even if this principle can be availed of by the auction-purchaser, the Plaintiff being a benamdar cannot take the benefit of the principle.

But the Defendant No. 6 was the certificated purchaser, and the Plaintiff claims under him. In these circumstances, we think that the principle applies to the Plaintiff also.

The learned Pleader attacked the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on the question of title of Khoda Buksh. There is evidence in support of the finding and the finding was arrived at upon a consideration of the whole evidence.

We think, in these circumstances, that the appeal must fail and is dismissed with costs.

PEARSON, J.,

KASHI PRAMANIK and

v.
DAMU PRAMANIK,

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 342, mandatory—Stage at which the Magistrate should examine accused.

Where the accused was questioned by the Magistrate before all the witnesses for the prosecution had been examined, cross-examined and re-examined, the conviction was set aside and the case remanded to the lower Court for a fresh trial.

This was a rule granted on the 29th of September 1921 against an order of the Deputy Magistrate of Rajshahye (M. H. M. Furrokh), dated the 27th of June 1921.

The facts of the case are not material to this report.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri (with Babu Probodh Ch. Chatterji) for the Petitioners.—The word "examination" in sec. 342, Cr. P. Code means examination, cross-examination and re-examination.

The following cases were cited:—Emperor v. Basapa Nungapa (3), Emperor v. Fernandez (1) and Raghu Bhujji v. King-Emperor (4), also a passage in Gangadhar Goala v. R. Reed (5).

Babu Jotindra Mohan Chaudhuri (Jr) for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was delivered by

WALMSLEY, J.—This rule was issued on two grounds. The first is that the trying Magistrate did not comply with the provisions of sec. 342 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. This

(5) 25 C. W. N. 009 (1921).

point is, I think, established, and following the ruling in Emperor v. Fernandez (1) and the case in the Patna High Court of Mitrajit Singh v. Emperor (2), the proper course for us to follow is to set aside the conviction and sentence of the Petitioners and remit the case to the trial Court in order that the provisions of sec. 342 of the Code may be followed and the matter disposed of in accordance with law.

The second ground is that the charges found against the accused are defective. This is not a matter on which I should be disposed to interfere, if there were no other defects in the case. But as the case must be remitted on the first ground, I think, we should also direct that the charges be amended. The first charge under sec. 143, I. P. C. omits to state the common object of the unlawful assembly. The common object should always be stated when a charge is framed under sec. 143, I. P. C. or the connected sections. The second charge is under sec. 379, I. P. C., and the property said to have been stolen is described simply as Damu's property. It is represented to us that the land on which the paddy said to have been cut by the accused was grown could have been described with much greater precision. That appears to be true and I think that as the first charge must be amended, the second charge should also be amended by a more accurate description being given of the land from which the complainant alleges the paddy was cut and removed by the accused. The amendment of the charges will involve the duty of giving the accused an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses for the prosecution again. The case is, therefore, remitted to the first Court to be disposed of as directed above.

Mr Neogy's Bill . . . xii

REPORTS (See Index.)

Mr. Neogy's Bill and Enrolment of Advocates.

We publish in another column Mr. Neogy's Bill for the amendment of sec. 4 of the Legal Practitioners Act of 1879 side by side with sec. 1 as it exists now. It will be seen that his object is that a Vakil may be entitled to practise in all matters on the Original Side of the High Court on the roll of which he is entered. The present law is that Advocates enrolled by the High Courts which exercise Original Jurisdiction are alone entitled to practise on the Original Side. The High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay are the only High Courts in India which exercise Original Jurisdiction in these Presidency Towns. In the High Courts of Madras and Bombay, Vakils of a particular standing may, under the powers conferred on the Hon'ble Judges under sec. 9 of the Letters Patent, be enrolled as Advocates. In Madras only such Vakils as have obtained the M. L. degree from the University of Madras may be so enrolled. In Bombay there is no such hard and fast rule but the Judges may, under their discretionary power, enrol a Vakil of sufficient practice, standing and experience as Advocate. In Calcutta alone, only Barristers-at-Law and Scotch and Irish Advocates may be enrolled as Advocates. As the High Courts of Madras and Bombay have for some time past been enrolling Advocates from amongst the Vakils, we see no reason why the Calcutta High Court should exclude them as a class from being admitted to a similar privilege. We think that the Madras rule is much too stringent. A University degree of a high order does not necessarily make one a successful practitioner of law. It would be more reasonable to enrol Advocates by reference to their forensic ability, standing and experience. We think that it is high time that the Hon'ble

Judges should frame rules for the admission of Advocates from amongst the Vakils

When the object that Mr. Neogy has in view may be met by the Calcutta High Court framing rules on similar lines as the other High Courts in India under the Letters Patent, we do not think that it will be wise or desirable on the part of the Indian Legislature to interfere in matters which the Legislatures both in this country and in England have always left to the jurisdiction of the High Court of Judicature. Quite apart from such question we shall take the liberty of pointing out how the course proposed to be adopted by Mr. Neogy will result in anomalies. We invite attention to what in fact is the main provision of the Bill, namely, that a Vakil on the roll of any High Court . . . shall be entitled to practise in all matters in the Original Jurisdiction. Assuming that the Bill is passed, the result will be that a Vakil will not only then be entitled to plead on the Original Side but will also be entitled to act, i.e., do Solicitor's or Attorney's work. Would not this be highly unfair to the Solicitors and Attorneys practising in the Calcutta High Court? It must be remembered that they have to pay a high premium of several thousand rupees for getting attached to a firm of solicitors. They have to serve a period of articleship for five years. With their articleship does not mean a mere nominal compliance but hard work and drudgery of various kinds such as drafting of legal documents and attending to all the details of original suits and the practice and procedure relating to them at all stages. After five years of grinding they have to pass a very stiff examination. Is it therefore fair that a Vakil without any training whatsoever in such work would be entitled on enrolment to do their work both in chambers and in Court and before the Registrar, Referees and Master? Mr. Neogy no doubt, suggested in his speech when introducing the Bill that the Solicitors might continue to instruct the Vakils on the Original Side. But the functions of the Solicitors are not merely to instruct but also to appear before the Judge in chambers and to act in various stages of the suit When the Solicitors cannot practise on the Appellate Side without qualifying themselves as Vakils, even after their prolonged preliminary training, would it be unfair if they maintained that Vakils should not be entitled to act on the Original Side before qualifying themselves as Solicitors? We have said before that we are not opposed to even the merger of the legal professions but should it come it can only come after due consideration of the various interests, both vested and prospective, that are likely to be affected by it. We venture to suggest therefore that the object that Mr. Neogy has in view will be achieved if the Hon'ble Judges would accept our suggestion.

According to the practice in the Madras High Court, Vakils are allowed to act, i.e., do Solicitor's work on the Original Side. Then again in Burma Advocates (Barristers) are allowed to do Solicitors' work. In Calcutta Advocates can only plead and cannot act. Solicitors can alone act on the Original Side. If the time-honoured practice in the Calcutta High Court has to be altered it can only be done after consultation and with the consensus of those whose interests and status will be affected by it. The allocation of different functions to different classes of lawyers or to attach them to different sides of the High Court, as is done in England, is nothing unfair. The Vakils here can plead and act on the Appellate Side. Advocates can only plead on the Original Side or the Appellate Side of the Calcutta High Court. It will not be to the interest of Vakils as a class if they are all admitted to the privilege of Advocates and are so debarred from acting. It is to the interest of junior Vakils that they should be allowed to act and plead on the Appellate Side. So the only practical and satisfactory solution of the question raised by Mr. Neogy would be to enrol only such Vakils as Advocates who would not suffer in practice by being debarred from acting. Junior Vakils will have their turn later on.

When the Advocates are in requisition on the Original Side, people of this country will no longer send their sons to England and waste a fortune for getting them called to the English Bar. Nor will the Vakils find it worth their while to throw away thousands of rupees for getting called to the English Bar and wait for briefs in consent cases and undefended suits before they can command a practice on the Original Side. It will be otherwise if Vakils of standing are enrolled as Advocates. This is no idle speculation on our part. Only twenty years ago the leaders of Calcutta Bar on the Original Side were all English Barristers. Now, they have been replaced by Indian Barristers. In the same way as soon as the Vakil-Advocates make a headway on the Original Side, they will before long attain the position of leaders there and the Vakil Bar will be a nursery of legal talent in the country.

REPORTS OF THE INDIAN ELECTION PETITIONS, 1920. By E. L. L. Hammond, C.B.E., I.C.S. Allahabad, The Pioneer Press, 1922.

Mr. Hammond has been studying the electioneering law since the Reforms were introduced into India. Just before the Election of 1920 he published his "Indian Electioneering," which came very handy to the candidates for the Provincial Councils and the Indian Legislature. In that book he presented the Indian Election rules and in doing so pointed out where they followed the English law and wherein they differed. His exposition of the law of corrupt practices furnished a useful guide for avoiding the pitfalls of an election. This compilation of the election cases that followed the last election may be regarded as a companion volume which illustrates by concrete examples where an election may be successfully impugned for infringement of the electioneering rules and for corrupt practices of the candidates or their agents. Reports of twenty-two cases are given in this volume. The Editor begins the report by giving a head-note to each case. The petition is given in full and the decision as well. Matters of practice, such as, in what particulars an election petition may be amended after filing, are also noted. The cases have been compiled for all over India. The last case given is that of Yatindra Nath Roy Chowdhury v. Surendra Nath Roy from Bengal. In this case the petition failed but no cost was awarded against petitioner as there were some material irregularities. The Hissar case is one of what is known in electioneering law as "treating." The case was that a 100 voters of a village were fed and given sweet-meats on the polling day by two persons intimately connected with the candidates. Although direct responsibility on the part of the candidate in this connection was not established, yet the election was set aside on inferences of agency. Cost was awarded against him. In the Durbhanga case amongst other grounds it was alleged by the petitioner that the Respondent had represented to the voters that he had Mr. Gandhi's support and that the Respondent's ballot-box had been sent by Mahatma Gandhi. The Commissioners disbelieved the allegation and the petition was dismissed with costs. Some of the election petitions have a lot of latent humour in them. For instance, in one case the allegation was that the Respondent was regarded in his constituency as in league with cattle thieves and that he had made use of threats of cattle lifting. In view of the election that will take place in 1923, every one who may be interested in it will find this volume of reports very useful and interesting reading.

Hindu Will—Will by mother—Sons given power to enjoy surplus profits but not to alienate—Estate devised, life-estate only

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Debendra Nath Pal, Subordinate Judge of Howrah, dated the 17th February 1917.

The question in this appeal was as to the validity of a mortgage of certain property, executed on 3rd May 1889 by one Nagendra Nath Mullik in favour of one Kedar Nath Kundu Chowdhury. Kedar Nath had sued on his mortgage and obtained a decree on the 19th September 1892 under which the properties were put up to sale. Defendants Nos. 1 to 7 claimed title to the properties in suit under purchases made at this sale. The Plaintiff sued to recover from these Defendants an eight annas share in these properties and his case briefly was that Nagendra Nath Mullik had no right to deal with the said share which belonged absolutely to one Jogendra Nath Mullik through whom he claimed. It appears that the properties were formerly held by Shama Sundari Dassi, mother of Nagendra and Jogendra, and that by a Will executed on the 16th March 1872, the lady had dealt with them as her own, and one of the questions which arose for consideration in the suit was as regards the construction of the said Will. When the suit was pending in the Original Court Plaintiff had amended the plaint and set up an alternative claim as the heir of Shama Sundari.

By her Will Shama Sundari appointed her sons Jogendra and Nagendra trustees of her properties and directed them to make proper arrangements for managing and preserving them, to pay out of the profits certain public charges, costs of repairs, the maintenance of certain persons and the expenses of certain religious observances and ceremonies. The balance of the profits, the Will provided, should be appropriated and enjoyed by Jogendra and Nagendra during their life-times. The Will further provided that on the death of Jogendra and Nagendra the son or sons-born of them sons who might be alive should be equally and fully entitled to the properties and should possess and enjoy the same. Jogendra and Nagendra were not to be entitled to transfer the properties which were also not to be sold for their debts, but if they desired to do any meritorious work they would be entitled to pay reasonable expenses for the same out of the profits and their heirs would be bound to finish any such work commenced but left incomplete by them. There was a provision that if the income of the estate was insufficient to pay the revenue due to Government, Jogendra and Nagendra would be entitled to pay the same by mortgaging the properties.

Held—That Jogendra and Nagendra acquired life interests only under the Will.

That Jogendra having died without leaving a son and later on Nagendra having died without leaving any son surviving him, there was an intestacy after Nagendra's death of the corpus of the estate.

That the decree of 19th September 1892 in the mortgage-suit did not bind the estate of Shama Sundari, inasmuch as that suit was against Nagendra's administratrix, his daughter Giribala, and no representative of Shama Sundari had been brought on the record; and in consequence the decree-holder and those claiming under him had acquired no title against the heir of Shama Sundari.

That Plaintiff as such heir was entitled to recover in this suit from the Defendants.

MR. NEOGY'S BILL.

Further to amend the Legal Practitioners Act, 1879.

It is hereby enacted as follows.—

1. This Act may be called the Legal Practitioners (Amendment) Act, 1922.

2. For sec. 1 of the Legal Practitioners Act, 1879, the following shall be substituted, namely.—

"4 (1). Notwithstanding anything to the contrary provided by any law or by any rule framed by any High Court under the Letters Patent constituting such Court or otherwise, every person now or hereinafter entered as an advocate or a vakil on the roll of any High Court under such Letters Patent or under sec. 11 of this Act, shall be entitled to practise in all matters in the Original as well as Appellate Jurisdiction of the Court on the roll of which he is entered

"(2). Every such advocate or vakil shall be entitled to practise in all the Courts subordinate to the Court on the roll of which he is entered, and in all revenue-offices situate within the local limits of the Appellate Jurisdiction of such Court, subject, nevertheless, to the rules in force relating to the language in which the Court or office is to be addressed by pleaders or revenue-agents, and any person so entered who ordinarily practises in the Court on the roll of which he is entered or some Court subordinate thereto, shall, notwithstanding anything herein contained, be entitled, as such, to practise in any Court in British India other than a High Court on whose roll he is not entered, or, with the permission of the Court, in any High Court on whose roll he is not entered, and in any revenue-office.

"(3). Advocates and vakils entered on the rolls of any High Court shall, in the conduct of cases, have pre-audience according to the respective dates of their enrolment."

(XVIII OF 1879).

1. Every person now or hereafter entered as an advocate or vakil on the roll of any High Court under the Letters Patent constituting such Court, or (under sec. 41 of this Act), (or enrolled as a pleader in the Chief Court of the Punjab under sec. 8 of this Act) shall be entitled to practise in all the Courts subordinate to the Court on the roll of which he is entered, and in all revenue-offices situate within the local limits of the Appellate Jurisdiction of such Court, subject, nevertheless, to the rules in force relating to the language in which the Court or office is to be addressed by pleaders or revenue-agents, and any person so entered who ordinarily practises in the Court on the roll of which he is entered or some Court subordinate thereto shall, notwithstanding anything herein contained, be entitled, as such, to practise in any Court in British India other than a High Court on whose roll he is not entered, or, with the permission of the Court, in any High Court on whose roll he is not entered, and in any revenue-office.

Provided that no such vakil (or pleader) shall be entitled to practise under this section before a Judge of the High Court, Division Court or High Court exercising Original Jurisdiction in a Presidency Town

11 (1) A High Court not established by Royal Charter may, from time to time, with the previous sanction of the Local Government, make rules as to the qualifications and admission of proper persons to be advocates of the Court, and, subject to such rules, may enrol such and so many advocates as it thinks fit

(2) Every advocate so enrolled shall be entitled to appear for the suitors of the Court, and to plead or to act, or to plead and act, for those suitors, according as the Court may by its rules determine, and subject to those rules.

refer to two different things. The certificate is to be granted after the rent is fixed and it is to be granted to either of the parties. We do not think, therefore, that the use of the two expressions leads to the conclusion that the fixing of rent by the Controller can be made only under the provisions of sec. 15.

It appears, therefore, that the Act contemplates fixing of the standard rent by the Controller even in cases not coming under sec. 15, in other words, in cases coming under sec. 2 (f) (ii): and if the word "fix" has been used in that section in a particular sense, we must give the word the same meaning in other portions of the Act where it occurs.

We are accordingly of opinion that the order of the Rent Controller is liable to revision under sec. 18 of the Act. The order of the President is therefore set aside and the case is sent back to his Court in order that he may hear the applications made to him by both the landlord and the tenant and dispose of them according to law.

The Opposite Party, however, must pay the costs of the Petitioner, the hearing-fee in this Court being assessed at two gold mohurs. The costs in the lower Courts will abide the result.

[APPEAL FROM THE JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER OF OUDH.]

VISCOUNT CAVE.
LORD SHAW.
SIR JOHN EDGE.

Heard, 20, 21, February and 2, March.

Judgment,
21, March.

KHAN BAHADUR
MOHAMMAD ABDUL GHANI KHAN, since deceased (now represented by Mohammad Ibadul Ghani Khan and anr.), and anr., Appellants,

v.

MUSAMMAT FAHR
ors., Respondents.

Oudh Taluqdar, primogeniture sanad to—Construction—"Successors," if includes transferees by Will or deed—Sunni Mahomedan law—Document whether deed or Will—Test—Inartistic, drafting in India—Gift inter vivos, conditions of—Delivery of possession, actually or constructively, sufficient—Gift of immovable property reserving usufruct in part—Delivery of actual possession of the other part, sufficient as delivery constructively of the whole.

Held, on a construction of a primogeniture sanad granted to an Oudh Taluqdar, that the word "successors" in it meant those designated persons who would succeed in the event of an intestacy and not persons who took, by sale, gift or bequest.

That the grantee's widow to whom the Taluqdar left the Taluqdari property by Will, when by right of inheritance under the sanad it should have gone to the elder of the two surviving brothers, was not competent to alienate the property under the terms of the sanad as a "successor" of the grantee, but could do so subject to the provisions of the Sunni Mahomedan law, the personal law by which she was governed.

In Mahomedan law the broad distinction between a gift (hiba) and a bequest (wasiat) is that in the case of a gift the immediate right of property in the subject of the gift is conferred and in the case of a bequest the vesting of the right of property is postponed.

Held, on a construction of the document in question in this case (after adverting to the difficulty of construing Indian documents owing to the absence of a uniform and accurate system of conveyancing and to the fact that deeds and Wills are as a rule most inartistically drawn, frequently by persons not possessed of legal knowledge), that it was intended to be an irrevocable disposition by the donor of all her moveable and immoveable property and all her zamindari and lambardari estate mentioned in the deed and in the schedules thereto, subject to the reservation for her own use during her life-time of the usufruct of some of the immoveable properties.

The reservation of the usufruct does not by itself make the gift of such property by a Sunni Mahomedan void under Mahomedan law.

NAWAB UMJAD ALLY KHAN v. MUSSUMMAT MOHUMDEE BEGAM (2) followed.

For a valid gift inter vivos under the Sunni Mahomedan law, the three conditions which are necessary are (a) manifestation of the wish to give on the part of the donor, (b) the acceptance of the donee, either impliedly or expressly, and (c) the taking of possession of the subject-matter of the gift by the donee, either actually or constructively.

The old and admittedly authoritative texts of Mahomedan law relating to gifts could not have been intended to lay down for all time what should alone be the evidence that title to lands had passed.

(2) 11 M. I. A. 517; 10 W. R. P. C. 25 (1867)

The object of the Mahomedan law as to gifts apparently was to prevent disputes as to whether the donor and the donee intended at the time that the title to the property should pass from the donor to the donee and that the handing over by the donor and the acceptance by the donee of the property should be good evidence that the property had been given by the donor and had been accepted by the donee as a gift.

Where by the same act, the donor gave the whole of her zamindari property to the donee, but a part of it being given subject to the reservation of the usufruct in the donor, actual physical possession was taken by the donee of the rest only.

Held—That the taking possession by the donee of a part only amounted to taking possession constructively of the whole zamindari including the part of which physical possession was not taken even though the donee did not apply for mutation of names in respect of the latter property.

These were consolidated appeals from a judgment and two decrees, dated the 19th December 1917 of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which reversed a decree, dated the 13th July 1915 of the Subordinate Judge of Kheri.

The parties are Sunni Mahomedans and their relationship is shown by the following pedigree.—

The suit was instituted on the 20th February 1914 by the Plaintiffs-Appellants as the legal heirs of Munni Bibi for the recovery of certain lands in Mundia Misr Jalalpur and Gundhia.

The lands in question were originally held by Niamat Ullah Khan who died in 1867 having by his Will, dated the 20th May 1865, bequeathed his entire estate to his wife Munni Bibi who survived him and succeeded to the Taluqa. Niamat Ullah's name was entered in Lists Nos. 1 and 2 annexed to the Oudh Estates Act, I of 1869.

On the 15th November 1876 a share in the village Gundhia was granted by Government to Munni Bibi who was in possession of the lands in suit until her death on the 16th June 1906.

On the 7th March 1884 Munni Bibi had executed a document in favour of her husband's elder brother Lutf Ullah Khan.

By this document which is fully set out in the judgment of the Board Lutf Ullah was enabled to enter into possession of the whole of Munni Bibi's property with the exception of certain scheduled lands, which were "exempted" and of which she retained possession during her life.

On the death of Munni Bibi, Lutf Ullah obtained possession of the "exempted" lands also and the present first Appellant claims to have become entitled thereto on Lutf Ullah's death intestate a year or two later. Subsequently the sons of Ibrahim set up an alleged Will of Munni Bibi, dated the 10th June 1906, in their favour and brought a suit for possession. To that suit the Plaintiffs-Appellants offered no defence and Abdul Ghani who was called as a witness expressly disclaimed any share in the property.

That suit was finally dismissed on the 13th March 1912.

The present suit was instituted by the Appellants on the 20th February 1914 claiming as heirs of Munni Bibi under the Mahomedan law of succession.

The claim of the Plaintiffs was denied by the Defendants and the Respondents. Mussammat Fakhr Jahan Begam and Pandit Sheo Dayal pleaded inter alia that the property in dispute passed to Lutf Ullah Khan by the document of 7th March 1884 and that the transfers under which they held possession were validly made by Lutf Ullah.

The Subordinate Judge by whom the suit was tried found that the document of 7th March 1884 operated as a Will so far as the lands in suit were concerned. He held that sec. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act did not apply to the case of Pandit Sheo Dayal and the other transferees and gave the Plaintiff a decree for possession of a two-third share of the property. Against this decree appeals were preferred by the second and fifth Defendants and the Plaintiffs filed cross-objections. The appeals and objections were heard by a Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh composed of Stuart and Kanhaiya Lal, JJ., who delivered separate judgments on the 19th December 1917.

The learned Judicial Commissioners agreed in holding that the document of 7th March 1884 was a deed of gift and not a Will and that title to the property in dispute passed thereunder to the donee, and they held that in any event the Plaintiffs' claim, was barred by the provisions of sec. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act. In the result a decree was passed in the appeal and the cross-objections and the suit were dismissed. From this decree the Plaintiffs appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellants.—The document of the 7th March 1884 is a gift,

KHAN BAHADUR MOHAMMAD ABDUL GHANI and not a Will : and possession of the subject-matter was never given, therefore it is invalid

If it is construed as a Will it can only be valid as to one-third of the property unless the heirs consented to the devise, and the evidence shows that they did not consent.

The contention that the parties were Hindus has been abandoned, and the question is now purely one of Mahomedan law.

Niamat Ullah devised the whole of his estate to Munni Bibi in 1865, i.e., prior to the Oudh Estates Act, 1869 and died in 1867.

Had Niamat Ullah died after the Act, succession to his estate would have been governed by sec 22 of the Act but Munni Bibi took under the Will and prior to the Act.

Thakurain Balraj Kunwar v Rao Jagatpal Singh (3) and Thakur Sheo Singh v Raghubans Kunwar (4)

Mr. Dubé —The Act has been amended by Act III of 1910 and the definition of "legatee" is amended.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. —Munni Bibi died in 1906 prior to the amendment. You cannot apply the terms of the Act because no "legatee" took under it, nor the terms of the sanad, because Munni Bibi was not a "successor." You are bound therefore to fall back on the ordinary principle of Mahomedan law.

Ghulam Abbas Khan v. Amatul Fatima (1).

The document executed by Munni Bibi contains a gift to her brother-in-law Lutf Ullah of all except three properties. These latter Munni Bibi is to retain

KHAN BAHADUR MOHAMMAD ABDUL GHANI KHAN v. MUST. FAKHR JAHAN BEGAM.

Consent must not be presumed from any actions, it must be affirmatively established. It must be shown that I treated the document as a Will and as a document alienating my two-third share and that I was willing that it should do so.

The evidence does not support any such theory.

Estoppel under sec 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 is only operative in favour of a transferee for value in good faith.

I have not induced Sheo Dayal to think that Lutf Ullah was full proprietor. I was not entitled to possession so I could not go and apply for mutation of names. I never either expressly or impliedly consented to the transfer. Mere inaction cannot operate as an estoppel.

Baswantapa Shidapa v. Ranu & Malhana (10)

Moreover in the mortgage to Sheo Dayal there was express notice to the mortgagee that the property had once belonged to the wife of Niamat Ullah.

Ramcoomar Koondoo v. Macqueen (11)

Sec 41 of the Transfer of Property Act is only a branch of sec 115 of the Indian Evidence Act. The section says that the transferee must take all reasonable steps to ascertain that the transferor has power to transfer. He took no such steps.

Mr. Dubé for the Respondents was not called upon.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE.—These are consolidated appeals by the Plaintiffs from two decrees, dated the 19th December 1917, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which reversed the decrees, dated the 13th July 1915, of the Subordinate Judge of Kheri, and dismissed the suit.

The suit was brought on the 20th February 1914 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge by Mohammad Abdul Ghani Khan and Mohammad Abdul Rahman Khan against Mohammad Hamid Ullah Khan, Musammat Fakhr Jahan Begam, Musammat Asghari Begam, Musammat Chand Bibi and Pandit Sheo Dayal, for the possession of Mauza Mundia Musir, a 4 annas and 5 pies share in Mauza Gundhua, and two groves, a house and certain sir land in Jalalpur, and for mesne profits. It was a suit of ejectment on title. The Plaintiffs alleged that the right to possession of all the properties in suit was in them as the heirs of Musammat Munni Bibi, who had died on the 16th June 1906, and that the Defendants had no title. The Defendants, who are the Respondents, were not all jointly interested in any of the properties. Some of the Defendants were in possession of some of the properties, others of the Defendants were in possession of other parts of the properties in suit, but the different titles of all the Defendants originated in a document of the 7th March 1884, which was executed by Munni Bibi, and has been variously construed as a deed of gift and as a Will.

Munni Bibi was the widow of Niamat Ullah Khan, who died childless on the 29th August 1867. Niamat Ullah Khan, Munni Bibi and the Plaintiffs, who were her first cousins, were Mohammedans of the Sunni sect, and the Plaintiffs were, when Munni Bibi died in 1906, her heirs, according to the Mohammedan law applicable to Sunnis. The family to which these Mohammedans belonged had, several centuries ago, been Thakurs professing the Hindu religion, who were converted to Islam, and at one period of this suit it was contended by the Defendants, or some of them, that the family had always continued to be governed in matters of succession and inheritance by the rules of the Mitakshara and not by the Mohammedan law. That contention has been abandoned.

Niamat Ullah Khan lived in the village of Jalalpur and was a Taluqdar of Oudh. After the Mutiny of 1857 he received from the British Government the Taluqa of Agar Buzurg, which included, with many villages not now in question, all the immoveable property in question in this suit except the 4 annas 5 pies share in Mauza Gundhua, which was granted to Munni Bibi on the 15th November 1876, by the British Government absolutely in her own right. Although Niamat Ullah Khan had died in 1867, his name was entered as that of the Taluqdar of the Taluqa Agar Buzurg in Lists I and II, which were prepared under Act I of 1869. Instances of the names of other persons who had died before 1869 being entered in those Lists occur.

The British Government granted to Niamat Ullah Khan in his life-time a primogeniture sanad in which the Taluqa Buzurg is described as the estate of Jalalpur in Zillah Mohamdi. That sanad is as follows:—

“C. WINGFIELD,

Chief Commissioner of Oudh

“To “NIAMAT ULLAH OF JALALPUR.”

“Know all men that whereas by the Proclamation of March, 1858, by His Excellency the Right Honourable the Viceroy and Governor-General of India, all proprietary rights in the soil of Oudh, with a few special exceptions, were confiscated and passed to the British Government, which became free to dispose of them as it pleased, I, Charles John Wingfield, Chief Commissioner of Oudh, under the authority of His Excellency the Governor-General of India in Council do hereby confer on you the full proprietary right, title and possession of the estate of Jalalpur in Zillah Mohamdi consisting of the villages as per list attached to the labuliyat you have executed, of which the present Government revenue is Rs. 5,752 (five thousand seven hundred and fifty two).

“Therefore this sanad is given you in order that it may be known to all whom it may concern, that the above estate has been conferred upon you and your heirs for ever, subject to the payment of such annual revenue as may from time to time be imposed, and to the conditions of surrendering all arms, destroying all forts, preventing and reporting crime, rendering any service you may be called upon to perform and of showing constant good faith, loyalty, zeal and attachment to the British Government according to the provisions of the engagement which you have executed, the breach of any one of which at any time shall be held to annul the right and title now conferred on you and your heirs.

“It is another condition of this grant that in the event of your dying intestate, or of any of your successors dying intestate the estate shall descend to the nearest male heir, according to the rule of primogeniture, but you and all your successors shall have full power to alienate the estate either in whole or in part by sale, mortgage, gift, bequest, or adoption to whomsoever you please.

“It is also a condition of this grant that you will so far as is in your power promote the agricultural prosperity of your estate, and that all holding under you shall be secured in the possession of all the subordinate rights they formerly enjoyed. As long as the above obligations are observed by you and your heirs in good faith so long will the British Government maintain you and your heirs as proprietors of the above-mentioned estate, in confirmation of which I herewith attach my seal and signature.”

The labuliyat, mentioned in the sanad, related to more than 30 villages and included Mauza Mundha Misr and Mauza Agar Buzurg (Jalalpur), parts of which are claimed by the Plaintiffs in this suit. The Plaintiffs do not claim any interest in any of the other villages mentioned in the kabuliyat, and do not contend that Munni Bibi was not entitled to give or bequeath those other villages to whom she liked. As will be seen presently, her title to, and interest in, all the villages mentioned in the schedule to the kabuliyat was as the devisee of her husband Niamat Ullah Khan.

On the 20th May 1865, Niamat Ullah Khan made the following Will:—

"I am Mohammad Niamat Ullah Khan, Taluqdar of Jalalpur, Parganas Karanpur and Aliganj.

"Whereas the Government has asked for a Will from the declarant, and the declarant has no issue and is issueless up to this time, and it is necessary to appoint a legatee after me, I, while in the enjoyment of sound health and perfect intellect, during my life-time, having executed this Will, declare that, after me, my wedded wife shall be the owner and possessor of the moveable and immoveable property, like myself. If the heirs belonging to the brotherhood lay a claim, the same shall be invalid and unenforceable before the Government. Wherefore I have executed these few presents by way of a Will so that it may serve as an authority and be of use in time of need.

"Scribed by Najju Khan, General Agent
Dated 20th May 1865

"NIAMAT ULLAH KHAN,
"Taluqdar of Agai Buzurg"

Under the sanad Niamat Ullah Khan had power to bequeath the Taluq of Buzurg (the estate of Jalalpur) to whom he pleased, and under that Will the Taluq passed on his death on the 29th August 1867, to his widow Munni Bibi. At the date of the Will of Niamat Ullah Khan, there were living two younger brothers of Niamat Ullah Khan, of whom Lutf Ullah Khan was the elder, and Ibrahim Khan was the younger. Those younger brothers survived Munni Bibi. One question in this case is whether Munni Bibi was a "successor" of Niamat Ullah Khan within the meaning of the sanad; if she was, she had power to make a gift of, or to bequeath, the whole Taluq or any part of it to whom she pleased. If she was not a "successor" of Niamat Ullah Khan within the meaning of the sanad, she had power to make such a gift as would be recognised as a valid gift by the Mohammedan law applicable to Sunnis, of the whole Taluq or of any part of it to whom she pleased.

On the 7th March 1884, Munni Bibi executed a document which has been construed by the Subordinate Judge as partly a deed of gift and in part a Will, and has been construed by the Judicial Commissioners as a deed of gift. As translated by the official translator it is, so far as is material, as follows:—

"I am Thakurain Musammat Munni Bibi, wife of Mohammad Niamat Ullah Khan, Taluqdar of Mirzapur and Jalalpur, Parganas Bhur and Paila, district Kheri

"Whereas my husband, during his life-time bequeathed the entire property of the aforesaid Ilaga to me, and I, in accordance with the said Will, am in possession and ownership of the same, now I, while in sound health and in possession of perfect intellect without force and reluctance, of my own free will, make a gift of the moveable and immoveable property, the entire zamindari and lambardari estate, &c., in favour of Mohammad Lutf Ullah Khan, son of Mohammad Ibad Ullah Khan, the brother of my husband, the detail whereof is being given below, with the exception of the villages and sur lands, &c., of the estates, specified below, which shall, during my life-time, remain in my and my relation's possession, free of rent and without payment of Government revenue: and I do hereby vest the donee with the power to have the mutation of names effected in his favour. Now I have nothing to do with the gifted property and estate. I shall keep the villages and sur lands, which have been exempted hereunder, for my life-time without the power of alienation by mortgage, sale and gift, and after me, the donee shall also be the owner of the said exempted property. The donee shall pay the Government revenue of the exempted estate from the Ilaga with the exception of the revenue of Patti village Gundhia, which I shall pay out of my own pocket. The donee shall pay all the debt with which the estate is encumbered,--I, the donor, having nothing to do therewith. Wherefore I have executed these few words by way of a deed of gift on a stamp of Rs. 6,008 by fixing the value of the property at Rs. 60,000 (sixty thousand), so that it may serve as an authority and be of use when required.

Mr. Kanhaiya Lal, in his judgment on the appeal to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, gives a slightly different translation of part of the document of the 7th March 1884, as follows:—

"Now in sound health and full possession of my senses, without any persuasion or compulsion and of my own accord I have gifted my movable and immovable property, all my zamindari and lambdari estate, &c, to Mohammad Lutf Ullah Khan, son of Mohammad Ibad Ullah Khan, the brother of my husband, according to the details given below, with the exception of the villages and su land, &c, set out below, name by name, which will remain in my possession for the duration of my life and my dependent relatives (sic) free of rent and Government revenue, out of the aforesaid estate. At this time having exempted them I have made a gift, and by virtue of this deed have authorised the donor to get mutation of names made in his favour, and now I have nothing to do with the estate and property gifted, and such villages and su land aforesaid, as have been at this time for the duration of my life excepted (left out) will be kept by me without transfer by mortgage or sale or gift for my life-time, and after my death the donee will be the proprietor (mulik) of the aforesaid excepted property; and of the excepted property the donee will pay the revenue from the Ilaga except of the Patti Mauza Gundhia. Of the Patti Gundhia, I will pay the revenue from my own pocket and the donee will pay all the debts outstanding against the estate. I have nothing to do with them. Therefore these few words have been written by way of a deed of gift of inheritance and proprietorship on a stamp of Rs. 600,8,0 on a stated value of Rs 7,000 as a title deed which will be useful at the time of need."

In the opinion of their Lordships there is no material difference between the two translations, they bear the same meaning. It should be mentioned that the punctuation in each translation is the punctuation of the person who made the translation. "Patti Mauza Gundhia" was the 4 annas 5 pies share in Mauza Gundhia which the Government had, subject to the payment of the Government Revenue, granted to Munni Bibi absolutely in 1876

On the execution of the document of the 7th March 1884, Lutf Ullah Khan got actual possession of all the property mentioned in it except Mauza Gungipur and the property now in question in this suit. Of the property now in question Lutf Ullah Khan did not obtain physical possession until Munni Bibi died in 1906

Lutf Ullah Khan mortgaged, on the 27th November 1907, the 4 annas 5 pies share in Mauza Gundhia for Rs. 11,000 to the Defendant Pandit Sheo Dayal. Lutf Ullah Khan died some years later, leaving him surviving his widow Musammat Chand Bibi and his son Hamid Ullah Khan. Hamid Ullah Khan, after his father's death, transferred to his wives, Musammat Fakhr Jahan Begam and Musammat Ashgari Begam, or to one of them, portions of the property now in question. On the 17th January 1913, there being then due to Pandit Sheo Dayal Rs. 20,000, under the mortgage of the 27th November 1907, Hamid Ullah Khan, Musammat Chand Bibi and Musammat Ashgari Begam sold the 4 annas 5 pies share in Mauza Gundhia to Pandit Sheo Dayal for Rs. 21,000

Before referring to the judgments of the trial Judge and in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, it is advisable to mention some other matters. Niamat Ullah Khan's youngest brother was Ibrahim Khan, who died and left four sons surviving him, of whom Ehsan Ullah was the eldest. Ehsan Ullah and his three brothers on the 20th December 1910, brought a suit against Hamid Ullah Khan, his two wives, and Mohammad Abdul Gham Khan and Mohammad Abdul Rahman Khan, who are the Plaintiffs in the present suit, and in their plaint, alleging that Munni Bibi had by a Will of the 10th June 1906, bequeathed to their father, Ibrahim Khan, Mauza Mundia Misir, the 4 annas 5 pies share in Mauza Gundhia, and the two groves, the house and sir land in Mauza Jalalpur, all of which are claimed by the Plaintiffs-Appellants in the present suit, asked for a decree for possession. To that suit these Plaintiffs-Appellants offered no defence, and on the contrary the Plaintiff-Appellant here, Mohammad Abdul Ghani Khan, on the 4th November 1910, wrote to Ehsan Ullah as follows:—

"Claim for possession.

"My dear Mohammad Ehsan Ullah Khan and Abdullah Khan, raiss of Jalalpur

"After affectionate greetings, I write to say that as regards the property left and possessed by my deceased sister, Munni Bibi, the wife of Niamat Ullah Khan, Taluqdar and raiss of Jalalpur, you enquire about, I do not at all turn against the purport of her Will. You can obtain the said property under the Will by bringing a suit or otherwise, and I have no objection. You are quite free to take necessary steps. Abdul Rahman Khan too says the same thing. I have enquired from him also.

"With kindest regards.

"Yours affectionately,

"ABDUL GHANI KHAN,

"Dated 4th November, 1910."

Mohammad Abdul Ghani Khan was called as a witness for the Plaintiffs in the suit of 1910, and on being shown his letter of the 4th November 1910, said: "This letter I wrote with the permission of my brother Abdul Rahman Khan, who is joint with me," and "I never thought of the matter whether I am entitled to the assets of Munni Bibi or not. I disclaim a share in the property if I am entitled to it." When Abdul Ghani Khan gave his evidence in that suit he was 42 years of age, and it appears to their Lordships impossible to believe that he and his brother had never before 1910 considered the question as to whether they, as the heirs in Mohammedan law of Munni Bibi, had any claim to any part of the valuable property which had been hers. The Plaintiffs in the suit of 1910 failed to prove the execution of the alleged Will, and their suit was dismissed.

The learned Subordinate Judge, Mahmud Hasan, who tried the present suit, construed the document of the 7th March 1884, as a Will, so far as it related to the property in question here, and as a deed of gift so far as it related to the other property dealt with by it. He held that, sec 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, did not apply to the cases of Pandit Sheo Dayal and of the other transferees, and as he considered that it was not proved that Munni Bibi's heirs had assented to the bequest by her of the property in question, he gave the Plaintiffs a decree for the possession of a two-third share of that property. It should here be mentioned that it does not appear from the record that Pandit Sheo Dayal had given evidence in this suit or that he had made any enquiry as to the title of Lutf Ullah Khan to mortgage, or the title of Hamid Ullah Khan and his mother and wife to sell the 4 annas 5 pies share in Mauza Gundhia. From that decree the Defendants Musammat Fakhr Jahan Begam and Pandit Sheo Dayal appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. Their appeals raised the question as to the true construction of the document of the 7th March 1884, and consequently raised the question as to the right of the Plaintiffs to maintain this suit. The Plaintiffs filed cross-objections.

The appeals and the cross-objections were heard by the learned Judicial Commissioners, Mr. Stuart and Mr. Kanhaiya Lal, and they delivered their very carefully considered judgments on the 19th December 1917. Mr. Stuart held that under the Taluqdari sanad Munni Bibi was a successor within the meaning of the terms "successors" in that sanad, and consequently had an absolute power to give or bequeath the Taluqdari property to whomsoever she pleased, a power of alienation which was not controlled by Mohammedan law. Mr. Kanhaiya Lal was of the contrary opinion: he rightly held that as Munni Bibi obtained her title to the Taluqdari property, not by right of inheritance under the sanad but under the Will of her husband Niamat Ullah Khan, she was not a successor within the meaning of the sanad.

In 1921, the Board in Ghulam Abbas Khan v. Amatul Fatima (1), which was an appeal from Oudh, held that the word "successors" in a similar primogeniture sanad meant those designated persons who would succeed in the event of an intestacy, and not persons who took by sale, gift or bequest. Had it not been for Niamat Ullah Khan's Will the Taluqdari property would, on his death, have vested by right of inheritance under the sanad in Lutf Ullah Khan, who was the elder of his two brothers. Under the circumstances, Munni Bibi's right to dispose by gift or by Will of the Taluqdari property was the right of an owner under the Mohammedan law, and was the same right which she had to dispose of the 4 annas 5 pies share in Mauza Gundhia.

The Judicial Commissioners agreed in their construction of the document of the 7th March 1884, and held that it was, and operated as a deed of gift, and that all the property mentioned in it passed as a good and valid gift under the Sunni law to Lutf Ullah Khan. They held that Munni Bibi by that deed transferred the corpus of the property, the Taluqdari property and the 4 annas 5th pies share in Mauza Gundham, to Lutf Ullah Khan, reserving to herself for her life the usufruct of the property in question in this suit. Apparently they based their judgments on a decision of the Board in 1867, in Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Mussummat Mohum-dee Begum (2).

It had been contended on behalf of the Plaintiffs before the Judicial Commissioners that there had been no possession of this property now in question, given to or taken by Lutf Ullah Khan, and that, consequently the gift was void under the Mohammedan law, but they considered that the clear intention of Munni Bibi as shown by her deed was that the title to this property should immediately vest in Lutf Ullah Khan, and that she should have no right to sell, mortgage, or otherwise dispose of the property, and they found that as the usufruct was reserved for her life by Munni Bibi, it was not possible for physical possession of the property in the suit to be given to Lutf Ullah Khan in Munni Bibi's life-time. In the opinion of the Judicial Commissioners everything which was reasonably possible to make perfect the gift had been done and that nothing more was required to make the gift a good gift according to Mohammedan law. The Judicial Commissioners by the decrees of the 19th December 1917, set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and dismissed the cross-objections and the suit. From the decrees of the Judicial Commissioners these consolidated appeals have been brought.

Their Lordships will now consider whether the document of the 7th March 1884, may be regarded, so far as the property now in question is concerned, as a Mohammedan Will, and if it is not a Mohammedan Will, but is a deed of gift, then the question arises whether in the circumstances of this case the gift of this property to Lutf Ullah Khan became a valid gift under the Mohammedan law applicable to Sunnis.

In construing the document of the 7th March 1884, it has to be borne in mind that in Mohammedan law the broad distinction between a gift (hiba) and a bequest (wasiat) is that in the case of a gift the immediate right of property in the subject of the gift is conferred, and in the case of a bequest the vesting of the right of property is postponed. Owing to the fact that there is in India no uniform or accurate system of conveyancing, and to the fact that deeds and Wills are, in India, as a rule most inartificially drawn up, frequently by persons not possessed of legal knowledge, it is often difficult to ascertain with certainty what was precisely intended by the document, and in some cases to ascertain whether the document was intended to operate as a deed of gift or as a Will. Their Lordships have, for the following reasons, come to the conclusion that the document of the 7th March 1884, cannot be regarded in any respect as a Will.

On the 7th March 1884, Munni Bibi was, as she recited in the document, the owner in possession of the entire property of the Ilaga (the Taluqa of Agar Buzurg) which her husband had bequeathed to her, and she was also the owner in possession of the 4 annas 5th pies share in Mauza

Gundhia; that 4 annas 5 pies sharé and the Taluqdari property constituted her zamindari estate. As their Lordships read the deed, Munni Bibi by it made a gift to Lutf Ullah Khan of "my movable and immovable property, all my zamindari and lambardari estate, etc.," reserving to herself for her life the usufruct of the property now in question, but making it clear that by that reservation of the usufruct she did not reserve to herself any right to transfer by mortgage or sale or gift any part of the property. As their Lordships read the deed it was intended to be and to operate as an immediate and irrevocable disposition of all Munni Bibi's movable and immovable property, and all her zamindari and lambardari estate mentioned in the deed and in the schedules to it, subject to the reservation for her own use during her life-time of the usufruct of the property in question here, and it must be construed as a deed of gift and not as a Will.

The reservation of the usufruct did not by itself make the gift of the property now in question void under Mohammedan law. So far as that is concerned there is the authority of the Board in Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Mussummat Mohumdee Begum (2) for that statement as to Mohammedan law, although the parties in that case were Shias and not Sunnis. But in the Courts below and in this appeal it has been contended that the deed of the 7th March 1884, is void so far as it purported to be a gift of the property in question in this suit on the ground that no possession was actually taken of this particular property, and no mutation of names in respect of this particular property was obtained, by

That contention has raised a question by no means easy of solution. The solution of that question depends upon what are the facts here and upon what is the rule of Mohammedan law applicable to those facts. In considering what is the Mohammedan law on the subject of gifts inter vivos then Lordships have to bear in mind that when the old and admittedly authoritative texts of Mohammedan law were promulgated there were not in the contemplation of any one any Transfer of Property Acts, any Registration Acts, any Revenue Courts to record transfers of the possession of land, or any zamindari estates, large or small, and that it could not have been intended to lay down for all time what should alone be the evidence that titles to lands had passed. The object of the Mohammedan law as to gifts apparently was to prevent disputes as to whether the donor and the donee intended at the time that the title to the property should pass from the donor to the donee, and that the handing over by the donor and the acceptance by the donee of the property should be good evidence that the property had been given by the donor and had been accepted by the donee as a gift.

• For a valid gift inter vivos under the Mohammedan law applicable in this case, three conditions are necessary, which their Lordships consider have been correctly stated thus:—“(a) Manifestation of the wish to give on the part of the donor; (b) the acceptance of the donee, either impliedly or expressly; and (c) the taking of possession of the subject-matter of the gift by the donee, either actually or constructively.” (“Mohammedan Law,” by Syed Ameer Ali, 4th Ed., Vol. I, p. 41). In their Lordships' opinion, the whole zamindari property mentioned in the deed, and not parts of it only, must, for the purposes of this case, be regarded as one property, the taking possession of any part of it being constructively a taking possession of the whole. The wish of Munni Bibi to give that property to Lutf Ullah Khan and his acceptance of it on the 7th March 1884, are clearly manifest from a perusal of the deed which he received and acted upon. The question is, did Lutf Ullah Khan actually or constructively take possession of the property in question in this suit? That he did not, until Munni Bibi's death in 1906, take physical possession of Mauza Mundia Musir, the 4 annas 5 pies share in Gundhia or the two groves, the house and sir land in Jalalpur, or apply for mutation of names in his favour in respect of these particular properties, is admitted. On the execution of the deed of gift in 1884, Lutf Ullah Khan did obtain mutation of names in his favour of all the other zamindari property, and from the 7th March 1884, until Munni Bibi died in 1906, he paid the Government Revenue which became due in respect of the Taluqdari part of the property now in question. If Lutf Ullah Khan had received after the 7th March 1884, and before Munni Bibi died in 1906, any of the rents or profits of the property now in question, he would be held to have received them as a trustee for Munni Bibi, although the title to the corpus of the property was in him. In their Lordships' opinion Lutf Ullah Khan must be regarded as having been constructively in possession, although not in physical possession of the corpus of the property now in question from 1884 until 1906, and the gift was a valid gift.

(2) 11 M. I. A. 517; 10 W. R. P. C. 25 (1887)

Their Lordships will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that these consolidated appeals should be dismissed with costs.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL

No. 125 of 1921.

NOGENDRA NATH CHOUDHURI, Defendant, Appellant,
v.

SANDERSON, C. J.
RICHARDSON, J.

11, January.

ERALIGOOL COMPANY LIMITED, Plaintiff,
Respondent.

Letters Patent, cl. 12—"Suit for land"—High Court's jurisdiction to entertain suit for specific performance of a contract to purchase a tea estate in Assam—Appointment of Receiver, discretion of Judge—Construction of statute

A, carrying on the business of tea planters, owned a tea estate in Assam. B entered into an agreement with A in Calcutta to purchase the estate for a certain sum, but subsequently failed to do so, and A brought a suit on the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court for specific performance or in the alternative, for damages. On an application by the Plaintiff the Judge appointed a Receiver, against which order the Defendant appealed, urging that the suit being a "suit for land" the High Court on its Original Side had no jurisdiction to try the suit in view of the terms of cl. 12 of the Letters Patent and hence had no jurisdiction to appoint a Receiver.

Held per SANDERSON, C. J.—That if the words "suits for land" are given their natural meaning, the suit does not come within the meaning of those words.

LAND MORTGAGE BANK v. SUDURUDEEN AHMED (2) relied on.

In construing a statute, it is necessary for the Court to give the natural meaning to the words which are used, and if it is thought advisable to include cases which are not covered by the words of the statute in their natural meaning, it is not for the Court to strain the language of the statute so as to include them, but it is the function of the Legislature to amend the statute and the same principle applies to the construction of the Charter.

Having regard to the fact that the agreement, which it is sought to enforce, was made in Calcutta, the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

The appointment of a Receiver is a matter for the discretion of the Judge—a discretion which must be exercised judicially and upon well recognised principles.

GIBBS v. DAVID (3) referred to.

Per RICHARDSON, J.—That this is not a suit for land either within the natural meaning of those words or within the meaning which had been given to them in previous decisions of this Court. Nothing can be decided in this suit between vendor and purchaser which directly affects the land or binds third parties who may have or may claim rights therein. That being so, the suit does not appear to be a suit brought for the purpose of establishing title to or acquiring possession of or control over land. The agreement having been made in Calcutta, and the suit being not a suit for land, leave was properly given to institute it on the Original Side.

and SUDAMDIN COAL CO., LTD. v. EMPIRE COAL CO., LTD. (1) referred to.

The learned Judge having seisin of the suit, it was open to him in the exercise of his discretion to appoint a Receiver.

This was an appeal from an interlocutory order appointing a Receiver in Suit No. 562 of 1921, passed by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Greaves on the Original Side on the 11th July 1922.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment.

Mr. H. D. Bose and Mr. A. N. Chaudhuri, Counsel, appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. Langford James and Mr. T. Ameer Ali, Counsel, appeared for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves whereby he appointed a Receiver in a suit, upon an application of the Plaintiff Company. The suit was brought by the Plaintiff Company praying that the Defendant might be ordered and decreed to carry out the agreement referred to in the plaint and to execute and register the conveyance and for a decree for the sum of Rs. 88,280 being the expenses incurred by the Plaintiff Company in carrying on the estate from the 1st January 1920 to the 14th January 1921 and for the sum of Rs. 1,500 per week from the 14th January 1921 until the Defendant would take possession of the said estate less the sum which is referred to in the prayer, and for the sum of Rs. 7,800 odd as interest or by way of damages, or, in the alternative, in the event of the Court deciding that the Plaintiff Company was not entitled to specific performance, for damages.

(1) I. L. R. 42 Cal. 942 (1915).

NOGENDRA NATH CHOUDHURI v. ERAHGHOOL COMPANY, LIMITED.

It appears that the Company was carrying on the business of tea planters in Assam and owned and worked an estate in Assam known as the Erahgool Tea Estate. It was alleged in the plaint that the Defendant agreed to purchase the estate for Rs. 2,25,000, the purchase to date from the 1st January 1920, the work on the estate until the completion to be carried on by the Plaintiff Company which was to be reimbursed by the Defendant for all expenditure as from the 1st January 1920. It was agreed by the learned Counsel that the agreement was made in Calcutta. The plaint further alleged that on the 5th August 1920 the attorneys of the Defendant sent to the Plaintiff Company's Attorneys a deed of conveyance prepared from a draft which had been accepted by the Plaintiff Company duly stamped and engrossed and the Plaintiff Company approved the said deed and called upon the Defendant to complete the same. It was then alleged that inspite of repeated demands, although the Defendant admitted his liability to execute the said conveyance, he refused so to do. The plaint set out the amount of money which the Plaintiff Company expended in carrying on the work since the 1st January 1920.

The written statement amongst other matters referred to certain representations, which, it was alleged, had been made on behalf of the Plaintiff Company and which it was said induced the Defendant to send the conveyance to the Plaintiff's Attorneys, and stated that the Defendant had never intended to complete the transaction without a satisfactory investigation of title, that the Defendant believed that the Plaintiff Company was unable to convey about 100 acres of the entire land of the estate and that consequently by reason of such shortage the Plaintiff Company was not entitled to specific performance or damages.

The main point, which was argued in this Court, was that this Court on its Original Side had no jurisdiction to try the suit and that consequently inasmuch as the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit he had no jurisdiction to appoint a Receiver. The learned Counsel for the Defendant argued that the learned Judge ought to have tried an issue as to whether this Court on its Original Side had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, before he decided to appoint a Receiver.

We have not the advantage of any judgment of the learned Judge and I cannot ascertain to what extent the learned Judge considered the question whether the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. I agree with the learned Counsel that it would have been more satisfactory, to say the least, if the learned Judge had decided the question whether the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit before he made an order appointing a Receiver; I do not propose, however, to accede to the learned Counsel's application to remand this question to the learned Judge because, in my judgment, it would be an unnecessary waste of time and money. The matter has been fully argued and at considerable length in this Court by the learned Counsel for the Appellant and in view of that it seems to me that it would not be right for us to remand this matter to the learned Judge in order that he might try the issue which the learned Counsel argued ought to have been tried in the first instance.

The main question, therefore, is: Had this Court jurisdiction to entertain the suit? It is said that this is a "suit for land" and consequently inasmuch as the land in question is in Assam and outside the local limits of the Ordinary Original

NOGENDRA NATH CHOUDHURI v. ERALIGOOLOO COMPANY, LIMITED.

Jurisdiction of the High Court, the High Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit having regard to the terms of cl. 12 of the Letters Patent which provides that "The High Court in the exercise of its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction shall be empowered to receive, try and determine suits of every description, if, in the case of suits for land or other immoveable property, such land or property shall be situated within the local limits of the Ordinary Original Jurisdiction of the said High Court." If we give to those words, "suits for land," then ordinary meaning in the English language, to my mind it is clear that this suit does not come within the meaning of those words. But the learned Counsel for the Appellant drew our attention to certain cases which have been decided by this Court which go to show that the words, to which I have referred, are not to be confined to suits for the recovery of land or for the recovery of possession of land, and, the latest case, to which our attention was drawn, was the case of Sudamdih Coal Co., Ltd. v. Empire Coal Co., Ltd. (1). In that case the Plaintiff Company and the Defendant Company, who had their registered offices in Calcutta, were the owners of adjoining collieries situate in Sudamdih in the District of Manbhum in the Province of Behar and Orissa. The boundary between the Plaintiffs' and the Defendants' properties was demarcated superficially by pillars. It was alleged by the Plaintiffs, but denied by the Defendants, that the Plaintiffs had left as a protection a barrier of twenty-five feet along the eastern boundary of its property: and the suit was brought for damages for coal which the Plaintiffs alleged the Defendants had extracted; and the substantial question in dispute in that case was whether the Plaintiffs or the Defendants were the owners of the coal in question. The learned Chief Justice Sir Lawrence Jenkins said this: "The matter in dispute here relates to a mining property outside the jurisdiction so defined. On behalf of the Plaintiffs it is contended that having regard to the pleadings it cannot be said that it is a suit for land or other immoveable property. The question is what was intended by that expression. It appears to me that it was not a mere formal test that was proposed—a test to be determined by the precise form in which a suit might be framed; but that regard was to be had to the substance of the suit, and I cannot help thinking that the particular expression was used, because there was its equivalent in the Civil Procedure Code of 1859, sec. 6." He then went on to say: "The course of decisions on the Charter shows that the description cannot be limited to suits for the recovery of land in its strict sense, and as to that there can be no dispute and, running on parallel lines with that, we find the Code of Civil Procedure of 1859 developed in 1877, so as to embrace a number of topics which perhaps would not in strictness be regarded as suits for land, and it is instructive to observe what they are." The learned Chief Justice then described the suits which are included in the section of the Civil Procedure Code which he was discussing and he concluded by saying: "Therefore, it seems to me that we are not giving a construction that is opposed to the general trend of legal thought, if we hold that suits for land at any rate extend to a suit of this kind, which is a suit for compensation for wrong to land, when, as I hold to be the case here, the substantial question is the right to the land." It is not necessary for me to express any opinion about that case because, in my judgment, that case does not cover the present one, for it is clear to me that the substantial question between the parties in this case is not the right to the land. The words in cl. 12, if we give to them their natural meaning, in my judgment cannot be said to cover this suit, which is a suit for specific performance of the agreement, which was made in Calcutta and to recover a sum of Rs. 88,000 odd said to be due from the Defendant to the Plaintiffs by reason of that agreement. Some decisions such as those referred to by the learned Chief Justice in his judgment in the above-mentioned case seem to have extended the operation of the clause in question beyond the natural meaning of the words "suits for land," but I am not prepared to put an interpretation upon these words, which as far as I know, has never been given to them hitherto and which, in my judgment, having regard to the natural meaning of the words, is not justified. The case of Land Mortgage Bank v Sudurudeen Ahmed (2) is an authority against the contention of the learned Counsel for the Appellant. In my judgment, it cannot be too clearly laid down that in construing a statute it is necessary for the Court to give the natural meaning to the words which are used, and if it is thought advisable to include cases which are not covered by the words of the statute in their natural meaning, it is not for the Court to strain the language of the statute so as to include them, but it is the function of the legislature to amend the statute and the same principle applies to the construction of the Charter. In my judgment, this is not a suit for land within the meaning of cl. 12 of the Letters Patent and the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit having regard to the fact that the agreement, which it is sought to enforce, was made in Calcutta. To my mind that really disposes of this case.

NOGHENDRA NATH CHOUDHURI v. ERALIGOOLOO COMPANY, LIMITED.

The other point, to which the learned Counsel for the Appellant referred, was that the learned Judge ought not to have appointed a Receiver inasmuch as the Plaintiffs were themselves in possession of the land and could go on managing the property as they had in the past. But this was a matter for the discretion of the learned Judge—a discretion, which, no doubt, must be exercised judicially and upon well recognised principles. Having regard to the facts of the case, and especially having regard to the alleged liability of the Defendant under the agreement to reimburse the Plaintiffs for the money which the Plaintiffs had to expend upon the estate after the 1st January 1920, the fact that the Defendant is alleged to have recognized his liability by paying a sum of Rs. 5,000 on or about the 26th August 1920 and to the fact that the Defendant's attorneys sent the conveyance to the Plaintiff's attorneys, it cannot be said that the learned Judge was wrong in exercising his discretion in the appointment of a Receiver. The case of Gibbs v. David (3) may be referred to in this connection. I do not mean to say that the facts in that case are on all fours with the facts in this case, but it is useful for ascertaining the principles upon which a Receiver may be appointed.

For these reasons, in my judgment, the learned Judge's order should be upheld and the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

question which now arises is whether the suit is a suit for land within the meaning of cl. 12 of the Letters Patent. If so, the land being outside the local limits of the Ordinary Original Jurisdiction, the Court had no power to entertain the suit in that jurisdiction and therefore no power to make the interlocutory order appointing a Receiver of the property, from which this appeal has been preferred by the Defendant. The question perhaps assumes more importance now than it may originally have done because we are informed that a learned Judge, other than the learned Judge who made the order, has in the meanwhile given the Receiver leave to sell the property.

To the best of my judgment, on the materials before us this is not a suit for land either within the natural meaning of those words or within the meaning which has been given to them in previous decisions of this Court. It has been held that a suit in the nature of a suit by a purchaser for specific performance is a suit for land [Sicenath Roy v Cally Das Ghose (4)]. On the other hand, in Land Mortgage Bank v Sudurudeen Ahmed (2) it was held in reference to a vendor's suit that it was not a suit for land. It is sought to distinguish that case on the ground that at the beginning of the judgment where the facts are set out, it was expressly stated that the title was not in dispute. Mr. H. D. Bose, appearing for the Defendant referred us to the plaint in the present case, where the Plaintiffs describe themselves as the owners and workers of this tea estate. He also referred us to paras 4-13 of the written statement where a question is raised as to the title of the Plaintiffs in respect of about 100 acres out of the 1500 which form the subject-matter of the agreement. But nothing can be decided in this suit between vendor and purchaser which will directly affect the land or bind third parties who may have or may claim rights therein. That being so, the suit does not appear to be a suit brought for the purpose of establishing title to or acquiring possession of or control over land. The title, if it comes in question will come in question incidentally with reference to the main issue whether the Defendant should or should not be held to his bargain, but whatever the result of the suit may be as between the Plaintiffs and the Defendant, as against third parties, the title of the Plaintiffs whether it remains in them or passes to the Defendant will remain precisely what it now is. We were asked to apply the test indicated by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in Sudamdih Coal Co., Ltd v Empire Coal Co., Ltd. (1), but in my opinion the suit cannot be regarded as being in substance a suit for land within that test.

I have said that the agreement was made in Calcutta and I gather that the agreed price was to be paid in Calcutta. There is no dispute, therefore, that if the suit is not a suit for land, leave was properly given to institute it on the Original Side.

On the other point which was argued, I agree with my Lord that the learned Judge having seisin of the suit it was open to him in the exercise of his discretion to appoint a Receiver.

In the result the appeal should, in my opinion, be dismissed.

NOWRANG SINGH,

Defendant, Appellant,

v.

JANARDAN KISHORLAL

tiffs, Respondents.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 108 (c), lessee is entitled to suspend payment of rent on account of unauthorized and unlawful interruption by another lessee of the same lessor - "Without interruption," what it signifies - Lessee is protected against tortious acts of other lessees or strangers - "Person claiming under the lessor," significance of.

P leased out two contiguous mines to D and M. Subsequently M joined his mine to D's mine by galleries encroaching upon the latter's coal land, as a result of which a portion of D's mine was flooded and submerged. The said act of M was unauthorized by the terms of his lease. In a suit by P against D for royalty and other dues, D pleaded that his possession having been interrupted by a lessee of P the entire rent was suspended:

Held - That M's act was, as between him and his landlord, entirely unauthorized by the terms of his lease and must be regarded as unlawful.

In the absence of a contract or local usage to the contrary, sec. 108 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act secures for the lessee the benefit of an unqualified covenant for quiet enjoyment, which protects the lessee against interruption by the lessor, his heirs and assigns or by any other person or persons whatsoever (including the superior landlord or other person claiming by title paramount, exercising a power of re-entry or otherwise dispossessing the lessee). But even such a covenant does not include a case of disturbance by persons having no lawful title or right of entry, for against such tortious acts the lessee has his proper remedy against the wrong-doers and does not require a covenant, nor can he, on account of being evicted by such persons, be relieved of his liability to pay rent.

HAYES v. BICKERSTAFF (1) and VITHILINGA v. VITHILINGA (2) discussed and followed.

Under such a covenant, the lessee is protected against all disturbance by the lessor whether lawful or not, save under a right of re-entry, but as against other persons, it protects the lessee only against lawful disturbance.

TAYAMA v. GURSHUDAPPA (3), WOTTON v. HELE (5), DUDBY v. FOLLIOT (7), SRINIVASA v. RANGASWAMI (21) and several other cases referred to.

Held - That the wrongful interference by M could not be treated as an interruption by "a person claiming under the lessor," as the latter expression means a person claiming under the lessor the right to do the particular act complained of.

HARRISON v. MUNCASTER (22), SANDERSON v. BERWICK (12), LUDWELL v. NEWMANS (25), KALI PRASANNA v. MATILURANATH (32) and other cases referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 1st of August 1919 against the decision of Babu Phonindra Mohan Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zillah Burdwan, dated the 30th of April 1919 and from findings recorded by Babu Probode Chandra Bose, Subordinate Judge, Assansol, dated the 24th June 1921.

lows :—The predecessor of the Plaintiffs in 1897 granted a lease of a coal mine to Myer & Co. and in 1901 granted a lease of an adjoining mine to the Defendant. A considerable portion of the mine of the Defendant was flooded and submerged by reason of the act of Myer & Co. in joining their mine to the Defendant's mine by galleries encroaching upon the Defendant's coal land. Further, the removal of some pillars in the mine of Myer & Co. caused subsidence in their mine, thereby creating a passage for rush of a large volume of rain and flood water into the mine of the Defendant. The terms of the grant in favour of Myer & Co. did not, however, authorize such acts. Subsequently when the Plaintiff brought the present suit for recovery of minimum royalty and other dues under the mining lease the Defendant resisted the claim substantially on two grounds, e.g., that he was entitled to abatement inasmuch as a portion of the land had been acquired under the Land Acquisition Act, and secondly, that as his possession of the mine had been interrupted by Myer & Co., who were the lessees of the adjoining mine, the rent was suspended. The lower Court gave effect to the first contention and overruled the second, with the result that the claim was decreed in part. Against the said decree the Defendant preferred the present appeal to the High Court.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the first Defendant in a suit for recovery of minimum royalty and other dues under a mining lease granted by the predecessor of the Plaintiffs on the 28th September 1901. The suit was instituted on the 6th July 1917, and the claim covered the period of six years between the 14th April 1911 and the 13th April 1917. The Defendant resisted the claim substantially on two grounds, namely, first, that he was entitled to abatement, inasmuch as six bighas out of the thirty two bighas of coal land included in the lease had been acquired under the Land Acquisition Act; and, secondly, that as his possession of the mine had been interrupted by Myer & Co., who were lessees of an adjoining mine under a grant made by the predecessor of the Plaintiffs on the 22nd April 1897 the entire rent was suspended. The Subordinate Judge gave effect to the first contention and overruled the second, with the result that on the 30th April 1919, the claim was decreed in part. The present appeal, preferred by the Defendant against this decree, was heard on the 17th January 1921. In support of the appeal it was urged that in view of the provision of sec. 108 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act, the Appellant was entitled to reduction of the rent payable by him, as a considerable portion of the mine let out to him had been flooded by reason of the act of Myer & Co., who held the adjoining mine under the Plaintiffs. The Court held that before the question of the true construction of sec. 108 could be usefully discussed, it was necessary to ascertain facts which had not been investigated by the Court below. The Court accordingly directed the lower Court under Or. 41, r. 25, of the Civil Procedure Code to try the following issues on additional evidence and to return the evidence to this Court together with the findings thereon and the reasons therefor: first, was there in fact an interruption of the possession of the Defendant during the years in suit within the meaning of cl. (c) of sec. 108 of the Transfer of Property Act; secondly, if there was such an interruption, was it attributable to any act on the part of Myer & Co., as alleged by the Defendant; thirdly, what were the terms of the grant made by Plaintiffs in favour of Myer & Co. The Subordinate Judge has held a local enquiry, taken the additional evidence required and submitted his findings. We have now to determine the appeal under Or. 41, r. 26, sub-r. (2).

The findings of the Subordinate Judge have been accepted by both the parties before us and may be summarised as follows :—

First, that during the period from the 14th June 1911 to the 13th April 1917, there was interruption of the possession of the Defendant in respect of an area of ten bighas fifteen cottas and twelve chattaks, approximately in the top seam, while the balance, fifteen bighas four cottas and eight chattaks, remained in fully workable condition and had during this period a shaft pit by which the first Defendant extracted coal;

Secondly, that this interruption of possession was due to the unlawful act of Myer & Co. in joining their mine to the Defendant's mine by galleries encroaching upon the Defendant's coal land;

Thirdly, that the terms of the grant in favour of Myer & Co. were set out in the lease granted by the predecessors of the Plaintiffs on the 22nd April 1897 to Hari Charan Singh.

The Subordinate Judge has found that if Myer & Co. had not driven galleries by encroaching into the coal land of the Defendant and had not thus joined their mine to his mine, no water from their mine could have entered his mine which was thereby flooded and submerged. The immediate cause was the destruction of the barrier by Myer & Co., the ulterior cause was the robbing of pillars in the mine of Myer & Co. and also in a natural channel which carried the surplus rain water of the locality into a neighbouring river. This removal of pillars naturally caused subsidence in their mine and also in the channel, thereby creating a passage for rush of a large volume of rain water and flood water into the mine of the Defendant. There can be no doubt that the act of Myer & Co. was, as between them and their landlords, entirely unauthorized by the terms of their lease and must be regarded as unlawful. In these circumstances, we have to decide whether such unauthorized act on the part of the lessees of the Plaintiffs absolves the Defendant from liability to pay rent in accordance with his lease. The solution of this question depends upon the true construction of sec. 108.

Cl. (c) of sec. 108 provides that, in the absence of a contract or local usage to the contrary, the lessor of immoveable property shall be deemed to contract with the lessee that, if the latter pays the rent reserved by the lease and performs the contracts binding on the lessee, he may hold the property during the time limited by the lease without interruption. This provision secures for the lessee the benefit of an unqualified covenant for quiet enjoyment. A qualified covenant for quiet enjoyment protects the lessee against interruption by the lessor, his heirs and assigns, or any other person claiming by or under him, them or any of them, whereas an unqualified covenant protects the lessee against interruption by the lessor, his heirs and assigns or by any other person or persons whomsoever. The covenant, in the unqualified form, covers the case of interruption by the superior landlord or other person claiming by title paramount, exercising a power of re-entry, or otherwise dispossessing the lessee. But even such a covenant does not include a case of disturbance by persons having no lawful title or right of entry; for, against them the lessee has his proper remedy and does not require a covenant, nor can he, on account of being evicted by such persons, be relieved of his liability to pay rent. Reference may be made in this connection to the exposition contained in the classical judgment of Sir John Vaughan, Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, in the case of Hayes v. Bickerstaff (1), where he shows that the express covenant, like the implied covenant, protects the lessee only against lawful disturbance of strangers, and then summarises the "inconveniences if the law should be otherwise:"

"1. A man's covenant without necessary words to make it such, is strained, to be unreasonable, and therefore improbable to be so intended, for, it is unreasonable a man should covenant against the tortious acts of strangers, impossible for him to prevent or probably to attempt preventing.

2. The covenantor, who is innocent, shall be charged, when the lessee hath his natural remedy against the wrong-doer. and the covenantor made to defend a man from that from which the law defends every man, that is, from wrong.

3. A man shall have double remedy for the same injury against the covenantor, and also against the wrong-doer. :

4. A way is opened to damage a third person (that is, the covenantor) by undiscoverable practice between the lessee and a stranger, for there is no difficulty for the lessee secretly to procure a stranger to make a tortious entry, that he may therefor charge the covenantor with an action."

This principle was recognised by Mr. Justice Subramaniya Iyer in Vithilinga v. Vithilinga (2), when he observed that by a covenant for quiet enjoyment, the lessee is to enjoy his lease against the lawful entry, eviction or interruption of any man, but not against tortious entries, evictions or interruptions, and the reason for the law is solid and clear, because against tortious acts the lessee has his proper remedy against the wrong-doers. The decision of Mr. Justice Ranade in Tayama v. Gurshidappa (3) takes substantially the same view, when it lays down that the words "without interruption," in sec. 108 (c), give a lessee in India the same rights as he would have under what is known in England as a covenant for quiet enjoyment in an unqualified form. The case then before the Court, was as in Gopanund v. Lala Gobind (4), decided by Sir Barnes Peacock, C. J. and Jackson, J., that of interruption caused by paramount owner of the property, and although it is stated that "the lessee is protected against interruption from any person whomsoever," it is made abundantly clear by the observations which follow that the lessee must protect himself against interruption by a person without lawful right or against wrongful disturbance by a stranger. The rule is thus now firmly settled that, like the express covenant, the implied covenant protects the lessee against all disturbance by the lessor whether lawful or not, save under a right of re-entry, but, as against other persons, it protects the lessee only against lawful disturbance; Wotton v. Hele (5), Anon

Sunder* (14) and Udai v. Katyani (15). It may be pointed out that, before the Transfer of Property Act, it had been maintained in a long series of decisions that if the lessee were evicted by title paramount to that of the lessor or by a person to whom he had given the land on lease, the lessee was discharged from the payment of rent and might claim abatement or suspension: Munee v. Campbell (16), Munee v. Campbell (17), Gopanund v. Lala Gobind (4), Kadambini v. Kashinath (18) and Kristosundar v. Kumarchunder (19). To the same effect was the decision in Donzelle v. Girdhari (20), which held that, in the absence of express agreement to the contrary, a landlord is bound by an implied obligation to indemnify the tenant against disturbance by his own act or by the acts of those who claim under him or by right paramount to him, but not against the wrongful acts of strangers. The same view is reflected in the judgment of Sir John Wallis, C. J., in Srinivasa v. Rangaswami (21), where he states that a covenant for quiet enjoyment, as between lessor and lessee even in its more extended form, is only a covenant against disturbance by somebody claiming under a lawful title and does not extend to disturbance by a trespasser.

In view of what must thus be recognised as settled law, the Appellant has been driven to contend, as a last resort that Myer & Co., who hold under a lease granted by the Plaintiffs, may rightly be treated as included within the category of persons claiming under them. This argument is attractive but fallacious. Lord Esher M. R., when pressed with the identical argument in Harrison v. Muncaster (22) on the authority of Fry, L. J. in Sanderson v. Berwick (12) made an important observation which may be usefully recalled here: "the expression in that judgment, claiming under him, must be restricted in its meaning to claiming a right under him to do the particular act complained of." This interpretation led to the result that where a lessee of a mine was interrupted, not by any act which the lessor had authorised, but by a flow of water which he had not authorised, the lessor was not liable under his covenant for quiet enjoyment; see also Jones v. Consolidated Anthracite Collieries (23). The same construction was placed upon the expression, "claiming under him," by Bray, J., in Williams v. Gabriel (24), when he ruled that a person claiming under the lessor means a person claiming under him the right to do the act complained of, so that if a lessor parts with the property or any adjoining property to a third person, and that person is in a position to rightfully claim, under his title from the lessor, that he is authorised to do those acts, the lessor will be responsible. If this interpretation were not adopted, the lessor would be responsible for all interruptions by any person claiming title through him, whether assignee or under-tenant, however, wilful or negligent the interruption. There must clearly be some limit, and we are of opinion that the limit indicated by Lord Esher is reasonable. It comes to this, that the lessor becomes bound for any act of interruption by himself or by any person whom he has expressly or impliedly authorised to do the act. This is good sense and fits in with what the parties might well have contemplated, because the lessor has really authorised the acts to be done; but to hold that the parties contemplated that the lessor was to be responsible for wrongful and negligent acts which he had not authorised, would plainly be beyond reason. This principle explains the decision in Sanderson v. Berwick (12), where the Court of Appeal held a lessor responsible, because his tenant of adjoining land had, in the proper and contemplated use of certain drains, damaged the Plaintiff (another tenant of his) but refused to hold the lessor responsible for excessive user of those drains. The test formulated by Lord Esher, it will be found, renders intelligible the decisions in Ludwell v. Newmans (25), Evans v. Vaughan (26), Calvert v. Sebright (27), Carpenter v. Parker (28), Jeffryes v. Evans (11), Rolph v. Crouch (29) and White v. Jameson (30), where the interference with the lessee was by a person whose title arose by a prior act or procurement of the lessor; see also Harmer v. Jumbil Tin Areas (31). The same principle appears to have been recognised in Kali Prasanna v. Mathuranath (32), where it was ruled that a lessee, who may have lost possession of a portion of the lands covered by his lease, was not entitled to suspend the payment of rent, if the dispossession had been effected, not by the landlord, but by other persons who were subsequent lessees under him in respect of different lands and had no authority to interfere with the possession of the prior lessee. In the case before us, there was no express covenant for quiet enjoyment in the lease granted to the Defendant, and his rights must be determined with reference to sec. 108 alone; on the other hand, there was an express engagement by the Defendant to pay the prescribed royalty even if no coal could be raised on account of difficulties in working. In these circumstances, we hold that the remedy of the Defendant, if any, lay against Myer & Co.; their wrongful interference could not be treated as an interruption by persons claiming under the lessors, such as could be successfully set up in answer to the claim for rent made by the lessors in the present action. We hold further that there was no covenant for quiet enjoyment, either contractual or statutory, as against tortious interruption by wrong-doers.

The result is that the decree made by the Subordinate Judge on the 30th April 1919 is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs. There will be one hearing fee only, Rs. 160, and each party will bear his own costs of the further enquiry by the lower Court.

BANKU BEHARI

DHUR, Appellant,

v.

J. C. GALSTAUN and anr., Respondents.

Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 74—Penalty, provision in the nature of—Loss or damage not proved—Right to relief—Failure of purchaser to complete contract within stipulated time by reason of vendor's default—Purchaser liable.

Where an intending purchaser of property failed to complete the purchase within the stipulated period by reason of the vendor not having taken steps to make out, as he had undertaken to do, a marketable title in respect of the property, the latter was not entitled to ask for the enforcement of a provision in the nature of penalty which the purchaser was to incur in case of such failure.

The vendor having failed to prove that he had suffered any loss in consequence:

Held—That even if he had not been in default, the vendor was not (in view of sec. 74 of the Contract Act) entitled to any relief on account of the purchaser's default.

This was an appeal from an order, dated the 11th December 1918, of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, in its Appellate Jurisdiction, varying an order of the same High Court, dated the 26th July 1918, made in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The main question for determination on the present appeal related to the meaning and effect of the terms of a consent decree, dated the 1st May 1918, which was passed in a suit (No. 744 of 1915) for sale instituted by the Plaintiff in the said High Court in 1915.

The Plaintiff (J. C. Galstaun) sought to recover a sum of Rs. 3,50,000 advanced by him on a mortgage of (inter alia) 21, Strand Road, Calcutta, and secured by an indenture of mortgage and two further charges, all dated the 2nd August 1906. One Madhab Mohini Dasi was a puisne encumbrancer, and the Appellant, Banku Behari Dhur, and the Defendant-Respondent, Radharani Dasi, were interested in the equity of redemption, the former as trustee for Radharani Dasi, and the latter as his cestui que trust.

There were some second mortgages upon the property. The parties compromised the suit, and the terms of settlement were recorded on the 28th April 1918, and were embodied in a decree of the High Court, dated the 1st May 1918. The Plaintiff's solicitors received the draft decree on the 14th May, the draft was settled on the 23rd May, and the minutes were mentioned before the Judge on the 27th May at the instance of the said Madhab Mohini Dasi, and the decree was completed and filed on the 31st May 1918.

In consideration of the Plaintiff agreeing to the terms of settlement, the said Banku Behari Dhur and Radharani Dasi covenanted to sell and convey to the Plaintiff or his nominee 21, Strand Road, Calcutta, free from all encumbrances for the price of Rs. 2,90,000. The remaining terms of settlement which are material were the following:—

(c) That Mr. Galstaun will, at the request and by the direction of Babu Banku Behari Dhur, pay off the moneys due to other mortgagees not exceeding Rs. 60,000 and the amount paid will be added to this mortgage claim and carry interest at 7 per cent. per annum with quarterly rests in account and the said Mr. Galstaun will not under any circumstances whatsoever be able to call for or take any steps for realisation thereof until the expiration of four years from the date hereof.

(g) That the title should be accepted by Mr. Galstaun upon the said Babu Banku Behari Dhur making out a marketable title thereto and that the purchase should be completed within one month from the date hereof. If such purchase be not completed within the aforesaid period, then the interest on part of the principal money secured by the said mortgage and further charges, namely, Rs. 2,90,000, should cease to run and Mr. Galstaun shall be deemed to be the owner of the above premises subject to the charge and mortgage mentioned in the cl. (a) as well as all existing encumbrances on the property herein and the whole of the said consideration money of Rs. 2,90,000 should ipso facto be set off against his claims under his mortgage and further charges.

Before the expiry of one month from the date of the said decree, the Plaintiff paid and satisfied the claims of the Defendants Mathura Nath Mitter and others. The said Madhab Mohini Dasi made delays in furnishing an account of what was due to her under her puisne encumbrance. On the 31st May 1918, the Plaintiff tendered to Madhab Mohini Dasi's attorney two Government Promissory Notes of the value of Rs. 20,000, and Rs. 12,760-2-0 in cash, with an undertaking to pay any sum due in excess of the amount of the tender, but the tender was refused as being short of the amount due. In the absence of an exact amount which the puisne encumbrancer repeatedly refused to furnish, the Plaintiff had calculated the amount in the best way he could, and he filed the present application on the 17th June 1918, praying that the said Madhab Mohini Dasi might be directed to accept from the Plaintiff Government securities of the nominal value of Rs. 20,000 with interest at 12 per cent, and costs in full satisfaction of her claim in the suit and that upon such payment being made she might be directed to execute and register a proper reconveyance of her mortgage or that in default of her acceptance the said amount might be deposited in Court to her credit, and a reconveyance executed and registered by the Registrar of the High Court on her behalf.

Mr. Justice Greaves who heard the said application delivered judgment on the 8th July 1918. He made the order prayed for, and observed as follows:—

"The present case seems to me to be one in which an even stronger duty was cast on the mortgagee to state what was due, and assist in the redemption. She was party to a consent decree whereby she agreed that the mortgagor should redeem her on certain terms by a certain date, and yet she has taken up an attitude which has prevented this being done, by asserting that she was under no obligation even to formulate her claim, she was tendered Rs 10-11-3 less than the sum she now claims for interest, with an undertaking to pay any sum that might be due in excess of the amount tendered, and I do not think that any reasonable person can doubt that if she had said on the 31st May and the 1st June, you have tendered me Rs 10-11-3 too little, that the full amount of her claim would have been forthcoming."

In accordance with the terms of settlement the Appellant, Banku Behari Dhur, was bound to make out a marketable title to the property in dispute, but he failed to do so. He did not send copies of the mortgages upon the property, subsequent to the Plaintiff's mortgage, nor did he furnish an account of the moneys due under those mortgages, nor did he arrange for proper reconveyances being executed and registered by those mortgagees. After waiting in vain the Plaintiff submitted to the applicant a draft conveyance on the 31st May 1918. The Appellant contended before the High Court that the Plaintiff had failed to complete the purchase "within one month," as provided in cl. G of the terms of settlement, and that by way of penalty the Court ought to give effect to the terms contained in that clause.

Mr. Justice Greaves delivered judgment on the 26th July 1918, rejecting the contention of the Appellant. He concluded as follows:—

"Now, I think it is evident that, reading the terms as a whole, it was never contemplated that the conveyance by Banku Behari Dhur and Radharani to Mr. Galstaun should be subject to the mortgages subsequent in date to Mr. Galstaun's mortgage. That being so, I think certainly that Banku Behari Dhur owes, under the terms of cl. G, a duty to Mr. Galstaun to send him copies of these mortgages, and either satisfy him that they had been discharged, or at any rate facilitate the discharge of these mortgages, by Mr. Galstaun under the provisions of cl. E, although it is true that no time was mentioned for the discharge of the mortgages. This he has not done, and that being so, I do not think that he is entitled to insist on the strict letter of cl. G in so much as he has not complied with the obligation which I hold lay upon him thereunder.

"The result is that I think Mr. Galstaun's contention is correct, and that the conveyance should be executed without any reference to cl. G at all. Banku Behari Dhur and Radharani are to execute the conveyance in that form, i.e., omitting all references to cl. G within a week from to-day, and in default of their executing the conveyance within a week from to-day, then the Registrar will execute it on their behalf settling the form, if necessary. No order as to costs."

The Appellant appealed from the said judgment, dated 26th July 1918, of Mr. Justice Greaves, and the appeal was heard by Sir Lancelot Sanderson, C. J., and Woodroffe, J. The learned Chief Justice delivered judgment on the 11th December 1918, Woodroffe, J., concurring. The Appellate Court came to the conclusion that in submitting the draft conveyance on the 31st May 1918, the Plaintiff had committed a breach of the contract contained in cl. G, of the terms of settlement which is "That the title should be accepted by Mr. Galstaun upon the said Babu Banku Behari Dhur making out a marketable title thereto, and that the purchase should be completed within one month from the date hereof."

The Appellate Court therefore held that under sec. 74 of the Indian Contract Act, the Appellant was entitled to receive some "reasonable compensation" for breach of the contract, and summed up its decision in terms following:—

"Now, it has not been suggested by anybody that the Appellant suffered any money loss through the draft conveyance being presented on the 31st May instead of some days previous, in order that the matter might be completed within one month; and, when asked, the learned Advocate-General was unable to assist us as regards the amount of compensation which ought to be awarded to the Appellant. As far as I can see, the Appellant has suffered no loss from the few days' delay that occurred in Mr. Galstaun presenting the draft conveyance. Therefore I am unable to award the Appellant any actual monetary compensation. But at the same time I have held that Mr. Galstaun was out of time and did commit a breach of the contract, and by reason thereof I am of opinion that these proceedings have been rendered necessary.

"We think that Mr. Galstaun should pay two sets of costs in each Court, i.e., the costs of the Appellant and the cost of the Defendants-Respondents, and the Appellant, being a trustee, his costs being between solicitor and client, and in that respect the order of Mr. Justice Greaves will be varied. In other respects the order of Mr. Justice Greaves will stand."

The Appellant appealed from the above order of the High Court to His Majesty in Council.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment of the Board.

MR. AMBER ALI.—This is an appeal from an order of the High Court of Calcutta, dated the 11th December 1918, which, with a variation as to costs, affirmed an order made by Mr. Justice Greaves in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the Court on the 26th July 1918, in a matter which came before him upon an application arising out of a case to which reference will be made presently.

It appears that a Hindu inhabitant of Calcutta named Nanda Lal Mullick, who died on the 22nd February 1901, owned considerable house property in that city. He left surviving him a widow and an adopted son, Prem Lal Mullick. The estate of Nanda Lal Mullick appears to have been at the time of his death burdened with debts, which increased in the hands of Prem Lal Mullick. In order to save the property from sale in execution of decrees, Prem Lal, with the consent of the Administrator-General, executed on the 2nd October 1895, a document by which he conveyed his entire estate inherited by him from Nanda Lal Mullick to the present Appellant, Banku Behari Dhur, as trustee for the liquidation of his debts. Prem Lal died intestate on the 20th March 1907, leaving a widow, Srimati Radharani Dasi.

In order to liquidate the debts of the deceased Prem Lal Mullick, and other liabilities on the estate, Banku Behari Dhur had, in conjunction with Prem Lal, who was then alive, obtained considerable sums of money from the Respondent Galstaun on three mortgages in respect of several properties owned by Prem Lal Mullick, among them being 21, Strand Road, to which the present dispute relates. On the 26th June 1915, Galstaun brought a suit in the High Court of Calcutta upon the several mortgages held by him for the usual mortgage decree.

Beside Banku Behari Dhur, the trustee aforesaid, Srimati Radharani Dasi, the widow of Prem Lal, as the heiress of her husband, was made a party along with a number of puisne mortgagees. One of these puisne mortgagees was a lady named Madhab Mohini Dasi.

This suit was compromised, and the agreement of compromise was incorporated in the decree which was made by Mr. Justice Greaves in the High Court in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction on the 1st May 1918. The terms of the agreement material to this judgment are as follows:—

"(c) That Mr. Galstaun will at the request of the direction of Babu Banku Behari

Dhur pay off the moneys due to other mortgagees not exceeding Rs. 60,000 and the amount paid will be added to this mortgage claim and carry interest at 7 per cent. per annum with quarterly rests in account and the said Mr. Galstaun will not under any circumstances whatsoever be able to call for or take any steps for realisation thereof until the expiration of four years from the date hereof.

"(g) That the title should be accepted by Mr. Galstaun upon the said Babu Banku Behari Dhur making out a marketable title thereto and that the purchase should be completed within one month from the date hereof. If such purchase be not completed within the aforesaid period then the interest on the part of the principal moneys secured by the said mortgage and further charges, namely, Rs. 2,90,000, should cease to run and Mr. Galstaun shall be deemed to be the owner of the above premises subject to the charge and mortgage mentioned in cl. (a) as well as all existing encumbrances on the property herein and the whole of the said consideration money of Rs. 2,90,000 should ipso facto be set off against his claims under his mortgage and further charges."

Madhab Mohini Dasi, the puisne mortgagee referred to above, appears to have made some delay in furnishing an account of her claim, and when the money was tendered to her by the Plaintiff, on behalf of Banku Behari Dhur in the terms of the decree, she refused to accept it, making the delay the reason of her refusal. The matter had to go before the Court, and the learned Judge had to make a peremptory order directing that what was due to her should be paid within one week from the date of his order in certain shape set out therein, and that on her failure to accept the payment the money due should be paid into Court to the credit of the suit, and the Registrar should thereupon approve of the reconveyance on her behalf. Thereafter Mr. Galstaun tendered to Banku Behari Dhur, the Appellant, the conveyance in respect of 21, Strand Road in the terms of the agreement embodied in the decree in the mortgage suit. The date of the agreement was the 28th April 1918, and it was provided under the agreement that the purchase by Mr. Galstaun should be completed "within one month from the date hereof." The conveyance was apparently tendered by Mr. Galstaun three days later, viz., on the 31st May 1918. It was in the usual form, but Banku Behari Dhur refused to accept it on the ground that Mr. Galstaun was, under the terms of the agreement, bound to complete the purchase within one month from its date and had failed to carry it out; his contention being that Galstaun must consequently bear himself the burden of all outstanding incumbrances, and was not entitled to add them to his own security, which was to form the consideration for the conveyance.

On the objection of Banku Behari Dhur to accept the conveyance as tendered by Mr. Galstaun, the matter had to go again before Mr. Justice Greaves, and he came to the conclusion that the delay in the completion of the purchase was due principally to the default of the Appellant himself; that, as a matter of fact, he did not deliver copies of the mortgages to the Respondent, and did not make out a marketable title; that is that he did not send to the mortgagee (Galstaun) copies of the mortgages upon the properties other than the mortgages in his favour, which were with him; that he did not send or cause to be sent within one month from the date of the settlement, account of the dues to the several subsequent mortgagees; and that he did not arrange for proper reconveyances being executed and registered by the mortgagees on receipt of their actual claims. It also appears that he did not take proper steps to expedite the reconveyance from Madhab Mohini Dasi. The learned Judge accordingly considered that the Respondent was not in default in respect of the delay in tendering the conveyance under the terms of the settlement as embodied in the decree, and he accordingly overruled the objection of Banku Behari Dhur, and directed that he and Radharani Dasi were to execute it in the form tendered by Galstaun, omitting all reference to cl. (g), within a week from the date of his order.

Banku Behari Dhur preferred an appeal to the High Court from the order of the learned Judge sitting on the Original Side of the Court, and the learned Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Woodroffe, who heard the appeal, came to the conclusion that Galstaun was actually in default; but they were also of opinion that the provision in cl. (g) relating to his default was by way of a penalty, and that as, under sec. 74 of the Contract Act, it was not established that he had suffered any loss from the delay in the actual tender, Banku Behari was not entitled to any relief on account of Galstaun's default. They accordingly affirmed the order of Mr. Justice Greaves in so far as the execution of the conveyance was concerned, but varied his order relating to costs, and made Galstaun liable for all the costs incurred in the course of the proceedings. Banku Behari Dhur has now appealed to His Majesty in Council, and his contention is that as Galstaun has been found to be in default, he must be held subject to the condition embodied in cl. (g) of the terms of settlement and ought to bear himself the burden of whatever charges or encumbrances may be outstanding in respect of the property in question, viz., 21, Strand Road.

Their Lordships, after having fully heard Counsel in support of Banku Behari's contention, are of opinion that the position taken up by him is wholly untenable. They agree with Mr. Justice Greaves that there was a duty imposed on him in relation to the conveyance he had to execute in favour of Galstaun; that he was bound to make out a marketable title in respect of the property, and, as the learned Judge points out, he did not take any steps to do so; and that consequently he is not in a position to ask for the enforcement of the provision on which he takes his stand in cl. (g). Further, their Lordships think that even if he had not been in default, and the provision in cl. (g) might be regarded as one in the nature of a penalty, he has not made out any loss—as the Appellate Court find—and is therefore not entitled to refuse the conveyance tendered.

Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed with costs, and that the order of the High Court on appeal should be varied by striking out the order as to costs, and that in respect of costs the order of the first Judge should be restored. And their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL

No. 104 of 1921.

THE BENGAL & NORTH-WOODROFFE, J. WESTERN RAILWAY
RICHARDSON, J. Co., Ltd.

17, February.

v.

SADARAM BHAIRODAN and anr.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 1, r. 3
-Joinder of parties—Parties, if can be joined as

THE BENGAL & NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO., LD. v. SADARAM BHAIRODAN.

Defendants in one suit when cause of action against one of them was outside jurisdiction.

Where X had distinct and separate causes of action against A and B and the cause of action against A arose within, and that against B outside, the jurisdiction of the Court, and X brought a suit against A and B claiming relief against both:

Held—That the joinder of A and B as Defendants in one suit in the circumstances stated is not contemplated by Or. 1, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code and that the cause of action against B having arisen outside jurisdiction, the Court was not competent to try the suit as against him on the ground that it was competent to try the suit as against A.

Per WOODROFFE, J.—Or. 1, r. 3 is a provision which relates to joinder of parties; and it assumes the existence of a suit in a proper forum, the Court having jurisdiction to try the suit. If the Court has such jurisdiction, then Or. 1, r. 3 may come into play.

Per RICHARDSON, J.—Rules defining the jurisdiction of the Court must be distinguished from rules regulating the procedure of the Court in respect of causes of action within jurisdiction.

Argument from convenience might be of assistance if the relevant statutory provision is of doubtful or ambiguous import, but not where no such doubt or ambiguity exists.

This was an appeal preferred on the 30th July 1921 from the judgment of Ghose, J., dated the 30th June 1921 passed in the exercise of Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The facts of the case were as follows:—

The Plaintiff firm delivered to the River Steam Navigation Company, Ltd. (referred to as the Steamer Company) at its station at Jagannath Ghat two bales of piece goods for carriage, despatch and delivery by transmission to Bhuptiahi—a station on the Bengal & North-Western Railway line, owned by the Bengal & North-Western Railway Co., Ltd. (referred to as the Railway Company) which has its place of business at Gorakhpur. The Plaintiff firm did not get delivery of the bales they had delivered to the Steamer Company from the Railway Company at Bhuptiahi. Thereupon they instituted this suit against both the Steamer Company and the Railway Company for recovery of the value of the bales on the Original Side of the High Court. The Steamer Company pleaded inter alia that they had delivered the bales to the Railway Company at a station called Paleeza Ghat and denied liability. The Railway Company pleaded, inter alia, that no part of the cause of action as against them having arisen within jurisdiction, the Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit as against them. On the evidence the lower Court found that there was no through booking of goods between Jagannath Ghat and Bhuptiahi, that goods were carried from Jagannath Ghat to Paleeza Ghat by the Steamer Co. and thence to Bhuptiahi by the Railway Company, that the Steamer Company delivered the bales they had received from the Plaintiff firm to the Railway Company at Paleeza Ghat, and that the Railway Company had offered for delivery certain goods to the Plaintiff firm at Bhuptiahi, but that these were not the goods which had been delivered to the Steamer Company by the Plaintiff firm and which had been delivered by the Steamer Company to the Railway Company at Paleeza Ghat. On these facts, Ghose, J., dismissed the suit as against the Steamer Company and decreed it as against the Railway Company. The Railway Company appealed on the ground, among others, that the Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit as against them.

Messrs. N. N. Sircar and C. O. Remfry, Counsel, for the Defendant-Appellant.

Messrs. Zorab and N. N. Bose, Counsel, for the Plaintiff-Respondent.

Messrs. Langford James and Punkridge, Counsel, for the Defendants-Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

WOODROFFE, J.—This is a suit for the recovery of the value of two bales of piece goods alleged to have been delivered on the 7th April 1918 at Jagannath Ghat in Calcutta to the River Steam Navigation Co., Ltd., and the India General Steam Navigation and Railway Co., Ltd., for carriage, despatch and delivery by transmission to Bhuptiahi, a station on the Bengal and North-Western Railway, and which, it is said, have not been delivered to the consignee at Bhuptiahi.

I need not go into the facts of the case so far as they affect the merits, because the point which has been argued before us is a question of jurisdiction and, in the view I take of the case, it is unnecessary to deal with the question of merits.

There is no question that the Court had jurisdiction as against the River Steamer Company. The question before us is whether it had jurisdiction against the Bengal and North-Western Railway Co., Ltd., the Defendant-Appellant, to whom I will refer as the Railway Company.

The learned Judge has held upon this point of jurisdiction that there is no doubt that when the goods were delivered in Calcutta for transmission to Bhuptiahi, there was so far as the Plaintiff firm was concerned, only one transaction: and, he says that that being so and this Court having undoubted jurisdiction to enquire into all the matters relating to the carriage of the goods to Paleeza Ghat, Or. 1, r. 3, C. P. C., comes into play, so far as the Railway Company are concerned. He was, therefore, of opinion that the Railway Company were properly joined as Defendants in this suit. He has dismissed the suit against the Steamer Company and given judgment against the Railway Company for a sum of Rs. 3,627.

The argument on behalf of the Plaintiff-Respondent has been that as the Court has jurisdiction over the suit, because it has jurisdiction as regards the Steamer Company, it must be taken that there is no longer any question of jurisdiction but one of procedure only and Or. 1, r. 3, justifies the decision which has been passed, namely, a decree against the Railway Co., the cause of action against which arose out of the jurisdiction. To this argument I cannot agree. There is no doubt that the cause of action against the Railway Company arose out of the jurisdiction, from whatever point of view we may regard it: this is admittedly so if the Steamer Company were regarded as the agent of the Plaintiff to hand over the goods to the Railway Company at Paleeza Ghat outside the jurisdiction. This is also admittedly so if the action were regarded as an action in tort to recover the Plaintiff's goods from the Railway Company to whom they had been delivered and, I think the cause of action equally arises out of the jurisdiction on the argument that the course of business in carrying the goods throughout constituted a cause of action arising in Calcutta. This, I think, cannot be maintained. The fact that the Court has jurisdiction against the Steamer Company does not give jurisdiction against the Railway Company. The fallacy of the argument, it appears to me, lies in the use of the words "the Court has jurisdiction over the suit,"—such jurisdiction the Court has over the suit as regards the Steamer Company. This does not give jurisdiction over the Railway Company, and in my opinion Or. 1, r. 3 has no bearing on the case. That rule of the Order is a provision which relates to a joinder of parties: and, it assumes the existence of a suit in a proper forum, the Court having jurisdiction to try the suit. If the Court has such jurisdiction, then Or. 1, r. 3 may come into play.

No case has been cited to us in support of the Plaintiff-Respondent's contention: and, so far as it goes, the decision in Krishna Kishore De v. Amar Nath Khattri (1) appears to be against that contention.

It is said that to hold otherwise, i.e., to say, that there was no jurisdiction would place the Plaintiff in a position of great difficulty, and, indeed it is suggested that it would be impossible for him to bring two separate suits. I am not sure at all that the difficulty alleged actually in fact exists. But even if it did, that would not affect the question before us, namely, whether in fact or in law this Court had jurisdiction in the suit as against the Railway Company.

In my opinion the issue whether this Court had jurisdiction to try this case against the Railway Company should be decided in the negative.

The appeal, therefore, succeeds on this question, and it is unnecessary to go into the merits.

The Appellant, who has succeeded in this appeal will get the costs of this appeal as also his costs in the first Court from the Plaintiff-Respondent. The Appellant will pay the costs of the Steamer Company, Respondent of the appeal. We do not make the order which we have been asked to make by the Appellant that he do recover the costs, so paid to the Steamer Company, from the Plaintiff-Respondent. As regards the cross-objections, they are not pressed and are dismissed, and the Plaintiff-Respondent who took them must pay the costs both of the Appellant and of the other Respondent. The order made by the first Court as regards the costs of the Steamer Company will stand.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree. The goods were carried from Calcutta to Paleeza Ghat by the Steamer Company and then by the Railway Company from Paleeza Ghat to Bhuptiahi.

There is no course of business or agreement established between the two carrying Companies under which it would be possible to treat the Steamer Company as Agents in Calcutta of the Railway Company so that the contract to carry the goods to their ultimate destination at Bhuptiahi would be a contract entered into in Calcutta by the Steamer Company on its own behalf and on behalf of the Railway Company. The forwarding notes of the Steamer Company show that the goods were accepted by the Steamer Company to be carried from Jagannath Ghat to Paleeza Ghat for Bhuptiahi. The notes, however, contain two clauses or instructions to which our attention has been drawn, as follows:—

(1) "If goods refused by Railway, to remain at River Terminus at shipper's entire risk as regards damage or deterioration."

(2) "Please forward by rail from Paleeza Ghat at shipper's and consignee's risk and expense. Steamer Agent to sign Railway notes and necessary risk notes on my behalf," (i.e., on behalf of the consignor).

The oral evidence is that the Railway

(1) I. L. R. 47 Cal. 770, s. c. 24 C. W. N. 693 (1920).

THE BENGAL & NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY Co., Ltd. v. SADARAM BHAIRODAN.

Co. treat the Steamer Company as they would any other member of the public. It appears therefore that the contract with the Steamer Company was to carry the goods to Paleeza Ghat and then as agents of the consignor to make them over to the Railway Company to be carried to Bhuptiahi.

That being so, on the materials placed before us in this case, I am unable to say that the cause of action against the Railway Company arose in Calcutta within the local limits of the Original Jurisdiction of this Court.

Mr. Zorab's main argument, as I understand it, is that once you have a suit properly instituted on the Original Side on a cause of action arising within the local limits of the jurisdiction, then the Court having jurisdiction over that suit would also have jurisdiction to exercise such powers as those conferred by Or. 1, r 3 of the Civil Procedure Code relating to the joinder of Defendants, even though the cause of action against Defendants joined, as here, in the alternative, might be an entirely distinct and separate cause of action arising wholly outside the jurisdiction. No authorities were cited in support of this contention: and, though the contention seems to have found favour with the learned Judge at the trial, with much respect, I am unable to accede to it. Rules defining the jurisdiction of the Court must be distinguished from rules regulating the procedure of the Court in respect of causes of action within the jurisdiction.

Mr. Zorab endeavoured to re-inforce his position on the ground of convenience. No doubt, if the relevant statutory provision was of doubtful or ambiguous import, the argument from convenience might be of assistance. But in the present case no doubt or ambiguity exists with regard to the meaning of the language of cl. 12 of the Letters Patent, such as would justify a recourse to this argument. Nor am I satisfied that the inconvenience suggested might not in some way be obviated. The resources of pleading would not seem to be unequal to the framing of separate claims in separate suits against the two Companies, and no doubt some procedure is available by which an order could be obtained for the trial of both suits by the same Court.

In the result, I agree that the appeal of the Railway Company succeeds on the preliminary ground that, as the suit was framed, the Court had no jurisdiction to try the claim against that Company.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Sch. III, Art. 3, limitation for suit for recovery of possession when the dispossession at the instigation of the landlord by two of his peons, to whom the landlord granted a settlement.

Certain raiyats were forcibly dispossessed of their raiyati holding at the instigation of their landlord by two of his peons to whom he had granted a settlement, and his barkandazes assisted in the dispossession. The dispossessed raiyats brought a suit for recovery of possession more than two years after the dispossession :

Held—That where a person has been dispossessed by another who subsequently takes settlement from or is recognized as tenant by the landlord and the landlord has had no hand in the ouster, such dispossession does not amount to dispossession by the landlord and in such a case the Plaintiff will not be barred by Art 3 of Sch 3, nor in a case where the landlord simply favoured the dispossession* by a third party.

But where the landlord, as in the present case, granted a settlement to some of his peons and the dispossession was effected by them with the help of his barkandazes, and at the instigation of the landlord, all of them acting in concert, the case comes under Art. 3 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Banamali Sen, Officiating Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah Mymensingh, dated the 16th of May 1919, affirming the decree of Babu Atul Chandra Banerjee, Munsif, 3rd Court at that place, dated the 27th of July 1918.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The main question involved in this appeal is whether the suit out of which this appeal arises is barred by the special limitation under Art. 3, Sch. III, of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Plaintiffs alleged that they had been dispossessed in Pous 1323 of their raiyat land by Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, at the instigation of the Raja, the Defendant No. 3, and with the help of Defendants Nos. 4 to 7. The suit has been decreed by the Courts below overruling the objection that the suit was barred. The lower Appellate Court held that the special law of limitation had no application to the case as the dispossession was by Defendant No. 1 after the settlement by the Raja and after the execution of the kabuliyat in favour of the Raja. It is found, however, that the dispossession took place in 1317 and not in 1323 as alleged in the plaint.

As stated above the Plaintiffs came to Court on the allegation that the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 with the assistance of the Defendants Nos. 4 to 7 who have been found to be the barkandazes of the Raja, and instigated by the Raja (Defendant No. 3), forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed the Plaintiffs from the land.

There is no doubt that where a person has been dispossessed by another who subsequently takes settlement from or is recognised as tenant by the landlord, and the landlord has had no hand in the ouster, such dispossession does not amount to dispossession by the landlord, and in such a case the Plaintiff will not be barred by Art. 3 of Sch. III. See Ranjulla v. Ishab Dhali (1), nor in a case where the landlord simply favoured the dispossession by a third party [see Basanto Kumari v. Nanda Ram (2)]. In the case of Kedar Nath v. Mohesh Chandra (3), the learned Judges were inclined to hold on the authority of the above case that the article does not apply where the dispossession was by a person under an authority from the landlord. And where the landlord himself had no hand in the ouster and some person on his behalf, without having any authority to do so, gives an amaluamah to a person who dispossesses the raiyat, it has been held that the case does not come under Art. 3. See Sheikh Eradut v. Daloo Sheikh (4).

The doctrine of constructive dispossession should not be extended, as was observed by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J. in Basanto Kumari v. Nanda Ram (2) and Rudra Narain v. Natabar (5) and as was pointed out by him in the case of Krishna Chandra Bagdi v. Satish Chandra Banerjee (6), in determining what Art. 3 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act means, the purpose and the scope of the Act, which governs the relation of landlord and tenant only, must not be left out of sight, and that it was not the design of the Act to deprive a tenant of the rights that he otherwise possesses against a third person between whom and himself there was no relationship of landlord and tenant, and that it was only intended to deal with such rights as existed between landlord and tenant. The learned pleader for the Respondent relied upon this case, and also the other cases mentioned above. But in the present case the Raja, the landlord, granted a settlement to Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who were his peons and the dispossession was effected by them with the help of the Raja's barkandazes (Defendants Nos. 4 to 7), and at the instigation of the Raja, the principal Defendant No. 3, all of them acting in concert. We think, under the circumstances, that it is a case which comes under Art. 3 of Sch. III of the Limitation Act. That being so, it is not necessary to consider the other points raised in the case.

The decrees of the Court below will be set aside and the Plaintiffs' suit will be dismissed with costs in all Courts.

nal appeals and reporting the progress of criminal work to the High Court, called for a report of an incident which took place during the trial of a criminal case in the Court of a Deputy Magistrate at Dacca and upon receiving such report framed charges under secs 13 (b) and 13 (f) of the Legal Practitioners Act against three pleaders and a muktear. The latter having showed cause, Mr. G reported against them under sec. 14 of the Act through the Sessions Judge who having heard counsel on their behalf upon the matter of the report forwarded it with his own opinion thereon to the High Court. They were both of opinion that one of them, Mr. M, on retiring from the case in which he was appearing for the accused, had made gratuitous imputations against the fairness and impartiality of the trying Deputy Magistrate.

Held—That the Additional District Magistrate was a Court subordinate to the High Court within the meaning of sec. 14 of the Act and was competent to draw up the charge and report the matter to the High Court.

That he followed the correct procedure as laid down in sec. 14 (c) in forwarding his report through the Sessions Judge.

That even if he was incompetent the High Court would adopt the enquiry and report when it appeared that the charge was framed with particularity and precision and there was a full inquiry in which the legal practitioners in question showed cause and appeared by counsel or pleaders.

The High Court is competent and ought, in a proper case, to take action even without the intervention of a subordinate Court.

A pleader making gratuitous and unfounded imputations in open Court against the fairness and impartiality of the tribunal in the trial of the case in which the pleader is appearing is guilty of grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty within the meaning of sec. 13 (b) of the Legal Practitioners Act and also of such misconduct as would come under sec. 13 (f) of that Act.

Pleaders have a duty not only towards their clients but also towards the Court of which they are pleaders, and it is part of their duty to co-operate with the Court in the orderly and pure administration of justice.

The independence of the Bar can and ought to be maintained without making gratuitous and unfounded imputations upon the fairness and impartiality of the tribunal.

Per RICHARDSON, J.—The independence of the Bar is recognised as a valuable asset in the civil life of a community and is a corollary of that independence which appertains in the same sense to the Bench. Independence in this connection means freedom to do one's individual duty without fear or favour of any man.

This was a Reference by the Additional District Magistrate of Dacca under sec. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act in connection with the alleged misconduct of three pleaders and a muktear practising in the Courts at Dacca.

Re MAHENDRA LAL ROY.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a report under sec. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act by the Additional District Magistrate of Dacca with respect to charges of misconduct under secs. 13 (b) and 13 (f) against three pleaders and one muktear practising in the Courts of and subordinate to the District Magistrate of Dacca. The report has been forwarded through the learned Sessions Judge of Dacca.

There were two other pleaders against whom charges were framed, but the Additional District Magistrate came to the conclusion that there was no ground for reporting against these two pleaders.

At the beginning of the hearing in this Court, a preliminary point was taken by the learned vakil, appearing for Mahendra Lal Roy, that the reference was invalid by reason of the procedure adopted.

It was contended that the proceedings, if any, should have been instituted by the Deputy Magistrate, who was trying the case, during the hearing of which the incident, which is the basis of these proceedings, occurred. That his report, if any, should have been submitted through the District Magistrate and the learned Sessions Judge as provided by sec. 14 (b) of the Legal Practitioners Act. It was further contended that the Additional District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to institute the proceedings.

The facts, which it is necessary to state for the consideration of this point, are as follows :— It appears from the Gazette, that Mr. Gurner was appointed on the 15th October 1921 as Additional District Magistrate at Dacca with all the powers of a District Magistrate under the Criminal Procedure Code.

It appears from the report of the Additional District Magistrate, that at the time in question he was in charge of the Criminal work of the District, hearing criminal appeals, and reporting the progress of criminal work to the High Court.

The incident, which is the basis of these proceedings, occurred on the 4th February 1922 in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate, Mr. S. P. Ghose, who was trying the case [A. Das Gupta v. Purna Chandra Ghose and another], in which the accused were charged with offences under secs. 500 and 501, Indian Penal Code.

It seems that an account of the incident appeared in a newspaper, on the 5th February 1922. The Additional District Magistrate on that day wrote to the Deputy Magistrate, calling for a report of the circumstances relating to that incident. The Deputy Magistrate made a report on the 6th February 1922 and a further one on the 7th February 1922.

The result was that on the 9th February 1922, the Additional District Magistrate drew up a charge under the Legal Practitioners Act alleging misconduct within the terms of secs. 13 (b) and 13 (f). Notice was duly given to the pleaders and muktear concerned, and cause was shown before the Additional District Magistrate by them on the 6th March 1922.

The report of the Additional District Magistrate, dated 6th May 1922, was forwarded by him to the High Court through the learned Sessions Judge of Dacca.

The learned Judge heard learned counsel on behalf of those concerned in the report, drew up his opinion on the matter and sent it together with the report of the Additional District Magistrate to the High Court.

The Additional District Magistrate's Court was a Court subordinate to the High Court within the meaning of sec. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act and in my judgment the Additional District Magistrate was competent to draw up the charge. He was the presiding officer of the Court in which the pleaders and the muktear were charged with the alleged misconduct and he was competent to report the matter to the High Court.

There is no mention of an Additional District Magistrate in sec. 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act. This is explained by the fact that the power to appoint Additional District Magistrates was not vested in the Local Government until after the passing of the Legal Practitioners Act.

It was argued by the learned Standing Counsel that the Additional District Magistrate being a Court subordinate to the High Court, might have reported direct to the High Court. In my judgment, however, the Additional District Magistrate very properly followed the procedure laid down in sec. 14 (c) with reference to a report by a District Magistrate and forwarded the report through the learned Sessions Judge.

In my judgment, therefore, the preliminary point has no substance in it and must fail.

But even if the Court had felt constrained to adopt the argument of the learned vakil for Mahendra Lal Roy, his client would not have been benefited thereby.

In Rasik Lal Nag (1), it was held by the learned Judges as follows:—"It cannot be disputed that this Court is competent to take action under sec. 13, cl. (f) after such enquiry as it thinks fit. The section does not require that the enquiry should be conducted directly by the High Court, the enquiry may well be made by a subordinate Court under the direction of the High Court. The only essential is, as pointed out by the Full Bench in In the matter of Ganapathi Sastri (2), that notice must be given to the legal practitioner concerned to show cause against suspension or dismissal, and the notice must formulate the charges, with great particularity and precision, so as to enable the practitioner to know the charges he is called upon to meet. That condition has been amply fulfilled in this case. There is, thus, no reason why the enquiry by the Munsif, though not conducted under the orders of this Court, should not be adopted for the purpose of a proceeding under sec. 13, if we took the view that this Court could proceed only under sec. 13 and not on a report by the subordinate Court under sec. 14."

In this case there was due notice, the charge was framed with particularity and precision, there was a full enquiry in which those concerned showed cause, and appeared by counsel or pleaders, and this Court has the opinion, not only of the Additional District Magistrate but also of the Sessions Judge. Even if this Court considered that the preliminary objection should be sustained, there could be no possible reason for directing a further enquiry, and the Court would adopt the enquiry and reports already made.

As regards the merits of the case, it appears that the three pleaders concerned in the report, Babus M. L. Roy, P. M. Ghosh, S. Mohon Mukherjee and two other pleaders and P. K. Basu, muktear, were representing the accused in the case hereinbefore mentioned which was in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate. It appears from the judgment of Mr. Justice Wainman in connection with the Rule to which I will refer presently, that on 25th October 1921, the accused persons filed a petition in the Court of the trying Magistrate intimating that for special reasons it was not proper that the case should be tried by him, and that they intended to apply to the High Court for a transfer. The trying Magistrate gave them six weeks' time to make the application to the High Court but no steps were taken. The case accordingly proceeded before the Deputy Magistrate and evidence was taken. A charge was framed and the complainant was cross-examined for three days, 25th to 27th January 1922. The cross-examination lasted from 12 to 5 on the first (two) days and from 12 to about 2-30 on the third.

On 27th January 1922, the Deputy Magistrate disallowed certain questions. This in the exercise of his judicial discretion he was entitled to do; and if he regarded the questions as irrelevant, as the Deputy Magistrate said he did, he was bound to disallow them. After this decision the cross-examination of the complainant went on for some time. It was then closed and the case was adjourned until 4th February. On that day the pleaders on both sides and the other witnesses who still had to be cross-examined were present.

The learned pleader, Mr. M. L. Roy, then presented and read a petition, Ex. 4, on behalf of the accused.

The petition set out reasons which were alleged to show that the above-mentioned questions were relevant and should not have been disallowed and the Deputy Magistrate was therein asked to reconsider the matter and to allow the further cross-examination of the complainant in this respect. The pleader for the complainant was then heard upon this matter and after hearing the pleader for the accused the Deputy Magistrate made the following order:—

"I consider these questions to be irrelevant and I therefore refuse to allow further cross-examination on that point."

Thereupon the pleader for the accused, Babu M. L. Roy, presented another petition which was already prepared asking for an adjournment of three weeks in order that an application might be made to the High Court for a transfer of the case from the file of the Deputy Magistrate to some other Court of competent jurisdiction. The petition alleged as the ground of the application "that your Petitioners now apprehend for reasons not necessary to disclose here that they cannot expect to have a fair and impartial trial in this Court."

The Deputy Magistrate refused this application making the following order:—
"An adjournment under sec. 526, C. P. C. was allowed before; this petition which is filed again under sec. 526, C. P. C., at a late stage of the trial is rejected." The Deputy Magistrate no doubt was referring in that order to the adjournment which had been previously granted in October 1921.

He might have added, what was the fact, that no steps had then been taken by the accused to apply to the High Court for a transfer of the case to another Court.

Then occurred the incident which is the basis of the proceedings under the Legal Practitioners Act. The account given by the Deputy Magistrate is as follows:—
"Then Babu M. L. Roy said that they would retire from the case because they could not expect a fair and impartial trial in this Court. As far as I remember I told them that I did not know what they would do but their clients could not retire from the case. After this Mahendra Babu addressed the accused persons in Bengali. He told them to sit quietly and not to cross-examine the witnesses and added that they could not expect a fair and impartial trial in this Court. Saying this they went away. As far as I remember when they left the Rai Bahadur said: "It seems that the pleaders are non-co-operating with the Court." After the pleaders left I asked the accused if they would cross-examine the witnesses. They said they could not as their pleaders had gone away. Neither Mahendra Babu nor any other of the pleaders told me that they were retiring as the accused had previously agreed on their doing so. The pleaders did not before retiring take the permission of the accused in Court, nor did the accused in my presence tell them to retire. Mahendra Babu did not ask or receive my permission to retire. The statement that Mahendra Babu asked the accused whether they wished them to cross-examine, to which the accused answered in the negative, is untrue."

Re MAHENDRA LAL ROY.

The explanation given by Mr. M. L. Roy is that in consequence of a ruling given on the 27th January by the Deputy Magistrate disallowing the questions, a consultation was held some time before the date of the next hearing.

Paras. 15 and 16 of the explanation are as follows:—

"That in consequence of the attitude taken up by the learned Magistrate a consultation was held some time before the date for the next hearing amongst the defence pleaders in which both the accused were present. After a most careful consideration of the matter the defence pleaders including your Petitioner were of opinion, that, with all respect to the trying Magistrate the points on which the cross-examination was not allowed were not only relevant but most material and essential and went to the very root of the defence and if cross-examination on those points was not allowed, it would seriously hamper the defence and in fact no proper defence of the accused would be possible and would amount to a virtual denial of the right of the accused to prove their defence and that it would be useless for the pleaders to further appear in the case as they would not be able to render any effective service to the accused.

That it was then decided in consultation with both the accused:—

(a) That on the next date of hearing, i.e., on 4th February 1922, a petition should be put in fully explaining the relevancy of the questions which had been disallowed and praying that the complainant might be recalled for further cross-examination on those points and other relevant points.

(b) That if the said petition be rejected then a petition for adjournment should be submitted to enable the accused to move the Hon'ble High Court for the transfer of the case to some other Court as it was apprehended by the accused that they would not get a fair and impartial trial in that Court.

(c) That if the latter petition too were rejected the accused would not defend themselves in the said Court and the services of their lawyers would no longer be necessary for the purpose of the defence in the case in that Court and the accused would move the Hon'ble High Court for a transfer of the case whether an adjournment were granted for the purpose or not; your Petitioner further submits that both the accused fully agreed to this."

The learned pleader's account of what took place in Court, after the petition for adjournment was rejected on the 4th February, is contained in paras. 20, 21 and 22 of the explanation, which are as follows:—

"That thereupon your Petitioner submitted to the Court that as in their humble opinion the trial would under the circumstances be void and illegal and as the accused did not expect a fair and impartial trial in that case in that Court they thought they would retire to which the Court observed that they might retire but their clients could not.

That the Petitioner and the lawyers for the defence including your Petitioner who were present there at the time were then about to retire from the Court when Babu Parbati Charan Bose, mukhtear for the defence, suggested that under the circumstances the accused should be questioned as to whether they would stick to the course they had already decided upon.

That your Petitioner told the accused in Bengali that as they (the accused) did not expect a fair and impartial trial in that Court and as under the circumstances no useful purpose could be served by cross-examining the other witnesses and your Petitioner advised both accused not to cross-examine the remaining witnesses and asked them if they desired him to cross-examine them to which they answered in the negative "

The Additional District Magistrate came to the following conclusions : —

" Between these two accounts one has to accept one or the other and on that decision rests the answer to the question whether Babu Mahendra Lal Roy, as spokesman of the pleaders, was engaged in necessary and legitimate consultation with the accused or, under cover of remarks to the accused, unnecessarily unpairing public confidence in the Court. After carefully weighing the two accounts I cannot believe that the Magistrate, and two pleaders called for the proceedings are so completely wrong in their recollection as one must believe if accepting the truth of the opposite account. I find it the more difficult to believe this when the general circumstances already noticed are so far out of keeping with a bond fide consultation between the pleaders and their clients.

My conclusion is that the words used by Babu Mahendra Lal Roy to his client did not amount to a bond fide consultation, but that cover was taken of an address to the client for a parting fling at the fairness of the Court. In making this second and quite gratuitous rally to impair confidence in the Court, it seems to me, that Babu Mahendra Lal Roy was guilty of grossly improper conduct as a pleader, and that those who associated themselves with him in retiring in these circumstances participated in the impropriety.

The conclusions I have come to on the four main issues stated are then that the pleaders retired probably by previous arrangement with the leading accused on the Court giving a judicial ruling rejecting the application under sec 526 and that Babu Mahendra Lal Roy marked that retirement by words addressed first to the Court, and then to the accused accentuating the idea that this retirement took place as justice was not to be obtained in the Court."

The Additional District Magistrate concluded .—" In fact, the whole affair takes, in my view, the appearance of a forensic manoeuvre designed to accentuate the difficulties of the Court in the event of its rejecting the petition under sec. 526, Cr. P. C. and to make the most in the Court room of the idea that justice was not to be had in this Court."

The learned Sessions Judge in giving his opinion said, " If it be a fact that the pleaders had previously arranged with their clients that they should retire from the case in the event of the Magistrate refusing their application for an adjournment under sec. 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the moment chosen by them for the retirement and the manner in which it was effected showed great disrespect for the Court. They retired immediately after the Magistrate refused their application for an adjournment, and they effected it in such a manner that it amounted to a demonstration against the order made by the Court in the exercise of its judicial discretion."

In my judgment there can be no doubt that the learned pleaders had arranged with their clients that they should retire from the case in the event of the Deputy Magistrate refusing the two petitions above referred to. I am not however satisfied that it had been previously arranged among the pleaders that their retirement should be marked by statements in open Court making imputations against the fairness and impartiality of the Deputy Magistrate.

I am satisfied that the findings of the Additional District Magistrate and the learned Sessions Judge as to what took place after the petition for adjournment was refused are justified by the evidence that the learned pleader Babu M. L. Roy made two statements—the first addressed to the Deputy Magistrate and the second to the accused—in such a way that they were heard by those in Court and that both such statements involved imputations upon the fairness and impartiality of the Deputy Magistrate. In my judgment both these statements were gratuitous and unjustifiable. These statements were not made in the course of argument or in support of the application for adjournment. That application for adjournment so that the High Court could be moved had been discussed and rejected. There was no reason why the learned pleader should have done anything more than retire from the case in accordance with the instructions of his clients, which he alleged he had already received, without making any imputation against the Court. The High Court could have been moved for an order of transfer. It is to be noted that on 13th February 1922, an application for transfer of the case to some other competent Court was in fact made to the High Court, and on the ground that the accused reasonably apprehended that they would not get a fair and impartial trial before the Deputy Magistrate and a rule was obtained. When however the rule was heard by the High Court it was discharged, and it must therefore be assumed for the purpose of these proceedings that there was no substantial reason, if any, for the alleged apprehension of the accused. Similarly there was no reason or necessity for the learned Pleader to address the accused in such a way that all could hear and advise them that "as they did not expect a fair and impartial trial in that Court" they should take a certain course.

The course which was to be taken apparently had been agreed beforehand. But even if it was necessary for the learned pleader to communicate with his clients again upon the matter that should have been done in the usual way, and not by addressing the accused from one side of the Court to the other as described in the opinion of the learned Sessions Judge.

It is not necessary for me to deal with the evidence in detail. I agree with the Additional District Magistrate that the evidence of Purna Chandra Ghosh, one of the accused, who was the first witness for the pleaders, was obviously unreliable, and as regards the evidence of the only other witness who gave evidence on behalf of the learned pleader it was stated by him that he had told no one what he knew about the case until he went into the witness-box and that he had no note of what occurred. The incident occurred on 4th February and he was giving his evidence on 10th March—two months after the event. It is quite possible to conclude that the witness had not remembered all that occurred, without making any reflection upon his veracity. The evidence on the other hand against the learned pleader, which has been adopted by the Additional District Magistrate, is confirmed by documents which came into existence on or about the time of the incident. I refer to the petition filed on behalf of Ashutosh Das-Gupta, the complainant, and the reports of the Deputy Magistrate, dated 6th and 7th February.

I have no doubt that the petition of the complainant was drawn on 4th February 1922, the very day of the occurrence, though there is a dispute as to the date of filing. The pleader who drafted the petition was called in as a witness and proved that he attached his signature to it and made it over to Jadu Babu about 4-30 P.M. on 4th February for the purpose of filing.

It was argued on behalf of the learned pleader that nothing would have been heard of this matter but for the action of the Additional District Magistrate in calling for a report from the Deputy Magistrate. In my judgment that is not correct. The Deputy Magistrate said in his evidence, "On the 6th I went to see the District Magistrate on my own account, to report the incident to him. My idea, at that time, was to report to the Additional District Magistrate what had happened. My intention at that time was to see what remedy could be taken and I wanted to consult the District Magistrate about it. He asked me to report to the Additional District Magistrate, and on coming to my room to do so I found a note from the Additional District Magistrate enquiring about the incident as reported in the Dacca Herald."

He further said that the Court was crowded when the incident took place and he considered himself much humiliated.

It is clear therefore, from the above passage, that the Deputy Magistrate went of his own accord to the District Magistrate to report the incident to him and to consult him as to what should be done, before he received the letter from the Additional District Magistrate enquiring about the incident.

In any event, the final determination in these cases rests with the High Court and with the High Court alone, as was pointed out by the learned Judges in Russick Lal Nag (1) and even if the alleged misconduct had been brought to the notice of the High Court, without the intervention of the Subordinate Court, this Court is competent and ought, in a proper case, to take necessary action.

Having carefully considered the matter I regret that I am bound to come to the conclusion that the learned pleader, M. L. Roy, gratuitously and unnecessarily made in open Court statements which contained imputations against the fairness and impartiality of the Deputy Magistrate, imputations which, as already mentioned, we must assume for the purpose of this case were without any foundation. Such statements, impugning the fairness and impartiality of a judicial tribunal, would be, in any event, a grave matter, but when they emanate from a learned pleader, such as M. L. Roy, occupying a leading position at the Bar, they assume a still more serious character and are calculated to have an effect, which is far-reaching and detrimental to the due administration of justice.

Re MAHENDRA LAL ROY.

the learned pleader, to the "independence of the Bar."

I yield to none in my desire to see the independence of the Bar maintained. It is necessary, however, to note that, in the case now before us, the Deputy Magistrate had in no way interfered with the independence of the Bar. He merely gave a judicial ruling as to the relevancy of certain questions: in consequence of which the pleaders chose to take the action, which has been referred to. Further, I am glad to think that the independence of the Bar has been, in the past, and I hope will be, in the future, maintained without making gratuitous and unfounded imputations upon the fairness and impartiality of the tribunal.

In my judgment the learned pleader, M. L. Roy, in making such statements, was guilty of grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty within the meaning of sec. 13 (b) and of such misconduct as would come under sec. 13 (f) of the Legal Practitioners Act.

As regards the case of the other pleaders and the mukhtear, there is no suggestion that any of them made any such statements as those to which I have referred.

By leaving the Court in company with their leader, M. L. Roy, after he had made the above-mentioned statements, they, in a sense, associated themselves with his misconduct.

I am not satisfied however that the statements of M. L. Roy were made in pursuance of any previous arrangement with the other pleaders or the mukhtear, although no doubt it was arranged that they should retire from the case in the event of the petition for the adjournment being rejected.

It was also argued on their behalf that they may not at the time have realised the serious nature of the statements made by their leader, M. L. Roy, and that they went out of Court with him merely because of the previous arrangement to take no further part in the case.

I am not prepared to hold that from their conduct and by the sequence of events they must be taken to have associated themselves with their leader's statements and I am willing to accept the view of this case put before the Court by the learned vakil, who appeared for them, viz., that they may not have realised the nature of the statements made by M. L. Roy and the serious position which must naturally arise in consequence of such statements being made by a learned pleader. I therefore come to the conclusion that this Court should not hold that the learned pleaders, P. M. Ghosh, S. M. Mookerjee and the mukhtear—P. K. Basu—were guilty of such misconduct as is contemplated by sec. 13 (b) and (f) of the Legal Practitioners Act.

We have carefully considered what course should be adopted in the case of the learned pleader, M. L. Roy.

The Deputy Magistrate said that he was on intimate terms with the learned pleader and that out of Court he is an amiable gentleman.

He stated, however, that the learned pleader was very impulsive, that he had recently insulted a pleader in his Court, and that he had apologised a few days after in open Court. It appears also that the learned pleader is the secretary of the Local Bar Association and therefore I assume that he enjoys the confidence of his brother pleaders and that he is a man of position at the Bar of Dacca. These considerations are in one sense in his favour.

On the other hand the very fact that the learned pleader occupies such a leading position, in my judgment, makes his misconduct all the more serious and inexcusable. Further it is to be noted that there has been no sign of any apology or expression of regret for his conduct, although it must have been obvious to him shortly after the incident of 4th February 1922 that what he had done had inflicted humiliation on the Deputy Magistrate and was calculated to bring the administration of justice into disrepute.

It is to be remembered that pleaders have a duty not only towards their clients but also towards the Court of which they are pleaders, and it is part of their duty to co-operate with the Court in the orderly and pure administration of justice.

The learned Sessions Judge in his report referred to an occasion when the learned pleader is alleged to have made an offensive remark with regard to a learned Subordinate Judge. We refer to this, only for the purpose of making it clear that we have not taken this matter into consideration and we have not been influenced by it in any way. We confine our judgment to the report and evidence relating to the incident of 4th February 1922.

We regard this case as a serious one, and we cannot help regretting that the learned pleader has not been fit to express his regret.

Under these circumstances it is impossible, in our judgment, to dispose of the case merely by passing censure on the conduct of the learned pleader and we consider it our unpleasant duty to direct that the learned pleader, M. L. Roy, be suspended for the period of one month.

M. L. Roy, therefore, is suspended for the period of one month from to-day.

RICHARDSON, J.—There is really nothing for me to add to my Lord's exhaustive judgment which I have had the opportunity of reading and with which I agree throughout. I desire, however, to associate myself especially with what my Lord has said as to the independence of the Bar. I wish that gentlemen belonging to the learned profession of the law would get it out of their heads that any one desires to curtail the privileges of the Bar or interfere with its independence. I take it that independence in this connection means 'freedom to do one's individual duty without fear or favour of any man'. The independence of the Bar is recognised as a valuable asset in the civil life of the community and is, as I regard the matter, a corollary of that independence which appertains in the same sense to the Bench. I know of no quarter from which the independence of the Bar in that sense is in any way menaced unless there be a hint of danger arising from Associations formed by members of the Bar themselves. There may be a tendency on the part of such Associations unduly to restrict the liberty of individuals in matters not strictly pertaining to professional practice. But if there be such a danger, or such a tendency, the members of the profession have the remedy in their own hands. Incidents will, of course, occur from time to time which had better not have occurred. After all men are human, whether on the Bench or at the Bar, and in the heat of the moment or on the impulse of the moment, expressions may be used on one side or the other which are not within the bounds of propriety but in the great majority of such cases an apology or an expression of regret for over-hastiness in speech, tendered and accepted in the right spirit, would be sufficient to terminate the incident. Relations between Bench and Bar can be adjusted only on a basis of mutual respect and mutual anxiety that justice should be duly administered.

With these few observations, I concur in the judgment which has just been delivered.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. NO. 562 OF 1922.

SANDERSON, (C. J.) MAZAHUR ALI,
CHOTZNER, J. Petitioner,
1922, v.
1, August. KING-EMPEROR.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 342 (1)—Examination of the accused after the close of the prosecution case, if imperative—Failure to comply with this provision, if initiates trial—"After the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined," meaning of—Practice of taking depositions in one case and having them copied and used in a connected case, propriety of—Examination of several witnesses by one Magistrate and completion of the trial by another Magistrate, propriety of.

In certain connected criminal cases the prosecution witnesses were examined and some of them cross-examined before the District Magistrate, and the accused was examined once before all the prosecution witnesses had been examined and again after all the prosecution witnesses had been examined but before all of them had been cross-examined. The cases were then made over to another Magistrate before whom the remaining prosecution witnesses were cross-examined and who convicted the accused. The depositions were taken in one of the cases and they were copied and used in the other cases:

Held—That sec. 342 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code requires that the Magistrate shall question the accused generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined, cross-examined, and re-examined, if necessary. The provision is mandatory, and not having been complied with, the conviction was illegal.

That it was improper to take depositions in one case and have them copied out and used in another case, and such a course should not be adopted in trials of criminal cases.

Held, further—That a Magistrate who undertakes the trial of a criminal case and who also hears the witnesses give their evidence should, if possible, finish it. Examination of some witnesses by one Magistrate and completion of the trial by another Magistrate is an undesirable proceeding.

This was a Rule granted on the 10th July 1922 against an order of the District Magistrate of Rungpur, dated the 4th March 1922, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 420, I. P. C. and sentencing him to four months' rigorous imprisonment, which order was, on appeal, affirmed by the Sessions Judge of Rungpur on 17th June 1922.

The facts material to this report are as follows.—In three sets of criminal cases before the District Magistrate of Rungpur, the first part of the proceedings was heard by himself and when the cases were before him the witnesses for the prosecution were examined and some of them were cross-examined. The accused was examined twice by the District Magistrate, once before all the prosecution witnesses had been examined and again after all the prosecution witnesses had been examined but before all the witnesses had been cross-examined. The cases were then made over to another Magistrate, Mr. J. C. Sen, some of the witnesses for the prosecution were cross-examined before him, and the accused put in a written statement of defence, but the accused was not examined generally on case any further. Mr. Sen then finished the trial and convicted the accused. The depositions of some of the witnesses taken in one case were copied and used in the other cases. On appeal, the Sessions Judge acquitted one of the accused and also acquitted the Petitioner of the charges against him in two of the cases. He, however, upheld the conviction of the Petitioner in one case only and against that conviction the present Rule was obtained.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal and Debendra Narayan Bhattacharjee for the Petitioner
Mr. Orr for the Crown

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate to show cause why the conviction of the Petitioner and the sentence passed upon him should not be set aside.

The learned Sessions Judge who heard the appeal commented upon the procedure which had been adopted at the trial and said that "the three sets of cases had a checkered life," and it is impossible for this Court to view the procedure adopted at the trial with approval. The matter, however, has been simplified by reason of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, and it is not now necessary for me to deal with the question of the joint trial or whether it was proper to take the depositions in one case and have them copied and used in another case. Speaking generally, in my judgment, that is not a course which should be adopted in trials of criminal cases. The learned Judge in the appeal Court acquitted one of the accused of all the charges and he acquitted the accused Mazahur Ali of two of the charges against him. He the conviction of Mazahur Ali in case only; that is the case in which Hufi Dass was the complainant. In that case there is now only one matter, which it is necessary for this Court to consider, viz., whether the provisions of sec. 342 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure were complied with in the trial Court.

The first part of the proceedings was heard by the District Magistrate and when the case was before him the witnesses for the prosecution were examined, and some of them were cross-examined.

The accused was examined twice by the District Magistrate, once before all the prosecution witnesses had been examined, and again after all the prosecution witnesses had been examined but before all the witnesses had been cross-examined.

The case was then made over to another Magistrate, Mr. J. C. Sen; some of the witnesses for the prosecution were cross-examined before him, the accused put in a written statement of defence and Mr. Sen finished the trial and convicted the Petitioner. This in itself was, in my judgment, an undesirable proceeding. The Magistrate who undertakes the trial of a criminal case, and who also hears the witnesses give their evidence should, if possible, finish it.

It appears that although, as already stated, some of the prosecution witnesses were cross-examined before Mr. Sen, the accused was not examined generally, on the case by Mr. Sen in accordance with the provisions of sec. 342 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In my judgment, under these circumstances the provisions of sec. 342 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure were not complied with.

The object of the examination referred to in the section is to enable the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him and the last part of that section runs as follows:—The Court “shall question him generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence.” In my judgment it is clearly indicated in that part of the section that the time, at which the Court shall question the accused generally on the case, is, after the prosecution case is completed and before the accused person is called on for his defence.

In this case I have not the least doubt that the accused person was able to put before the Court every thing that he wanted to say about his case. He was examined on two occasions by the District Magistrate. The accused said that he would put in a written statement and he did put in a written statement. On the merits, as far as I can see, there is nothing to be said in support of this application, but there are the words of the section which, in my judgment, expressly provide that the Magistrate shall question the accused generally on the case at a certain stage in the proceedings. That stage is “after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for the defence.” That must mean after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined, and after the cross-examination and re-examination, if any, of such witnesses, for ordinarily the accused is not called on for his defence until the case for the prosecution is closed.

I am not now considering exceptional cases, where it may be necessary for the prosecution, with the sanction of the Court to recall witnesses, or to give rebutting evidence.

The above-mentioned provision in the sanction is mandatory and it has not been complied with in this case.

The result is that we are compelled to make this Rule absolute.

It remains to be considered whether the case should be remitted in order that it may be retried. It appears from the learned Sessions Judge's judgment that the proceedings were started so long ago as August 1920. There were partial trials before three Magistrates, the Petitioner was in jail for two weeks. Having regard to these matters, we do not consider it right that the Petitioner should be again put on his trial and the result is that the conviction and sentence will be set aside, and the bail bond will be cancelled.

I hope that in future the Courts will observe the provisions of sec. 342 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. If they will do so, they will save the High Court an immense amount of time, because, in my experience, the point, herein considered, is frequently arising, and Rules have to be issued by reason of the fact that the trial Court has not observed the provisions of the section.

CHOTZNER, J.—I agree.

Appellants,

v.

NAWAB SIR SALIM-

ULLAH BAHADUR

since deceased, and ors, Respondents.

Mahomedan Law—Wakf—Property settled in perpetuity for aggrandisement of family under colour of charity—Wakf, illusory—Remote gift to the poor, if validates wakf—Wakf Validating Act (VI of 1913), not retrospective—Suit to set aside wakf as invalid—Compromise—Agreement confirming the wakf and stipulating for payment by mutwali of allowances to members of the family out of the income of settled properties, how far binding—Contract for valuable consideration creating charge on property, not accompanied by delivery, validity of.

Held—That two deeds of 1846 and 1868 which purported to create by gift a perpetual succession of interests for the aggrandisement of the family of the donors were invalid by the Mahomedan law and were not validated by the use of the term wakf or by the insertion of a remote trust to the poor.

That the Mussulman Wakf Validating Act, 1913, cannot be construed as validating deeds executed before its date.

A suit brought in 1880 to set aside the deeds as invalid was compromised in 1881 by two agreements made and concluded between the members of the family on the one hand and the then mutwali on the other which whilst purporting to confirm the wakfnamas provided for the payment by the mutwali of fixed allowances to living and named members of the family out of the income of the settled properties, in consideration of which stipulation the mutwali was confirmed in his possession of those properties. The allowances were made payable to the persons named immediately and were to be continued to their heirs:

Held—That the purpose of the agreements was quite different from that of the wakfs and the agreements were enforceable though the wakfs were invalid. The allowances payable under the former were intended to take effect as immediate and heritable charges on the income of the properties, taking priority of all the limitations contained in the settlements.

That the direction in the agreements to the allowances "out of the income" the settled properties showed an intention to create a charge and this intention was not frustrated by the ineffectual attempt to keep alive the subsequent and invalid limitations of the settlements.

That the agreements were not gifts but being contracts for valuable consideration were not required to be accompanied by delivery; and the charges on land created by them could be enforced like other charges by the Courts.

That the fiduciary character of the mutwali's possession and the conditions on which it was given could not be repudiated by his heirs and the latter allowed to keep the properties in their own hands free from all charges.

That the provision in the agreements that the distribution of an annuity among the heirs of the annutant should be in proportions to be determined by the family panchayet (if it was intended to do more than to authorise the panchayet to settle disputes as to heirship) was inoperative and could be disregarded.

This was an appeal against the decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated the 6th June 1919, which reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Dacca, dated the 16th April 1917, and made in Suit No. 70 of 1914.

The said suit was brought by the present Appellants to recover Rs. 45,000 as arrears of certain allowances claimed by them on the footing of two agreements of 1881, together with other relief. The Subordinate Judge delivered judgment for the arrears claimed but refused the other relief. Against this refusal no appeal was preferred by the Plaintiffs.

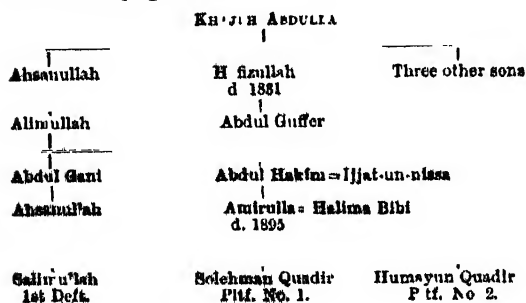

On an appeal preferred by the Defendants the High Court held that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to the allowances and passed a decree dismissing the suit.

KHAJEH SOLEHMAN QUADIR v. NAWAB SIR SALIMULLAH BAHADUR.

The present appeal was preferred by the Plaintiffs against the said decree of the High Court.

The original Defendant, now represented by the present Respondents, was the Appellants' cousin and the son of Nawab Ahsanullah, the executant of the agreements above-mentioned dated 1881. The Plaintiffs, viz., the present Appellants, who were born subsequently to that date, were the sons of Amirulla and Halima Bibi who received under the said documents certain monthly allowances until the dates of their respective deaths in 1895 and 1896. The Appellants' case was that they as their heirs were entitled to the said allowances and they claimed payment of arrears thereof.

The relationship of the persons named appears from the following extract from the family pedigree.

Khajeh Abdullah, who came from Cashmere, set up an extensive trading business in the town of Dacca, and settled there towards the end of the eighteenth century. On his death his second son Hafizullah became the head of the family, and he died about the year 1831. He was succeeded by his son Abdul Gaffer who was followed by his cousin Alimullah, the ancestor of the Respondents.

On the 20th September 1835, Alimullah made a gift of a sum of two lacs of rupees to his son Abdul Gani, followed on the 26th December 1845 by a deed of gift of valuable immoveable properties. On the 8th May 1846, the other members of the family created a "wakf," of which Abdul Gani was made the mutwali. This document recited that the custom of the family had been to appoint one of the members as the head who granted allowances to the others and was accepted by them as the leader of the family; it was stated explicitly that the object of the wakf was the maintenance of the members of the family. It was also provided that the mutwali would not be liable to be removed and would have authority to appoint his successor.

On the 11th September 1868, Abdul Gani executed a touliatnama whereby he transferred the mutwaliship to his son Ahsanullah and also executed a deed of "wakf" (of his own property) whereof he appointed his son Ahsanullah as the mutwali. The wakf was created in favour of all his sons, offspring and all the members and relatives descended from his grandfather, and was descendible to children in the male and female lines, and, on their failure, in favour of the fakirs and the poor indigent of Dacca. There can be no doubt as to the purpose of the wakf, because it was, expressly recited that the wakf was created for the maintenance of the members of the family, generation after generation. To remove the possibility of all doubt on this point the founder added.

"The object of the wakf of the properties is this that they be protected from injury and ruin and that the name and dignity of the family be maintained and that the profits of the estate be, according to the practice and usage of the family, spent for the improvement of the position and dignity of the family, for the comfort and benefit of the persons in whose favour the wakf is made, and for the performance of worldly and religious affairs and of charitable acts "

Rules were laid down for the management of the wakf properties for succession to the office of mutwali and for other like matters, and there was a somewhat remarkable provision that none of the beneficiaries would be competent to demand accounts from the mutwali. The mutwali appears to have carried out the directions of the founder for many years.

On the 2nd September 1880, certain members of the family including Amrullah (the father of the Appellants) who was the 35th Plaintiff, brought a suit against Abdul Gani and Ahsanullah above-mentioned, claiming proprietary rights in respect of the property comprised in the deed of 1816, of which they impugned the validity as a deed of wakf. In the defences put in on behalf of Abdul Gani and Ahsanullah (with whom other members of the family were joined as co-Defendants) it was pleaded as follows:—

"The Plaintiffs have no maliki right with regard to the said wakf properties. The Plaintiffs' present claim cannot be admitted unless they first establish by a suit their said maliki right and that they are not bound by the said towliatnama.

"From over 30 years Plaintiffs or their predecessors never have or had any possession of, or maliki right to, the disputed properties. The right alleged by the Plaintiffs is barred by limitation "

The suit was brought to trial but before judgment was delivered an agreement was arrived at between the parties in accordance with which all the Defendants other than Abdul Gani and Ahsanullah were made Plaintiffs and an application was made by the Plaintiffs collectively "that this suit be allowed to be withdrawn without any right of instituting any fresh suit on any causes of action which form the subject-matter of this suit." This application was granted on the 26th August 1881. On the same day the agreement between the parties was drawn up which was supplemented by a subsequent deed, dated 17th September 1881.

The documents just referred to were the agreements on which the Appellants' claim in the present litigation was founded. The first of these agreements declared who were the persons who should receive allowances payable out of the income of the properties held under the deeds of 1846 and 1868 respectively; and it was thereby provided that the particular amounts to be paid to each individual should be fixed by a family committee or panchayet therein provided for. The second agreement dated the 17th September 1881 was drawn up after the said committee had fixed the amounts; and to it was annexed a schedule of the persons to whom monthly allowances were to be paid at various rates. Among them was Amirullah the present Appellants' father; it seemed to be admitted that he and also his wife were fully paid till their respective deaths in 1895 and 1896. The Appellants' claim was that their late parents' allowances should have been paid to them as then heirs by the mutwalis from time to time under the terms of the said agreement.

In or about 1894 Abdul Gani was advised on the strength of certain decisions of the High Court and the Privy Council that the so-called wakf of 1868 was not a true wakf enforceable at law, and that consequently it and the agreements of 1881 were invalid and unenforceable and he instituted Suit No. 29 of 1894, in the Subordinate Court of Dacca, praying for declarations to that effect together with consequential relief. Written statements were put in by various members of the family including the present Appellants' father, who inter alia pleaded that the compromise of 1881 was fraudulent. In the following year Abdul Gani applied to be allowed to withdraw the suit and he was permitted to do so, liberty being reserved to him to sue again for the same subject-matter.

In the interval, viz., on the 17th September 1894, other members of the family brought a suit against, among others, Abdul Gani, who after his death was represented by Ahsanullah. This suit was No. 136 of 1894, and the Plaintiffs' claim therein was for certain shares of the property comprised in the wakf deeds and for accounts and possession. This suit remained pending until 9th September 1907, when it was declared to have abated.

Meanwhile in 1895 Abdul Gani conveyed his rights in the lands to his son Ahsanullah, and subsequently Ahsanullah issued notices to the persons concerned stating that he was advised that his father's supposed wakf of 1868 was invalid, but that he intended for the present to continue to pay the allowances stated in Sch. D of the agreement of 1881 to the various persons who were parties to the said agreement.

A further suit No. 96 of 1895 was instituted by other members of the family against Abdul Gani and Ahsanullah for relief of the same general character as that sought in Suit No. 156 of 1894. Amirullah, the Appellants' father, and his wife Hahma were parties to this litigation until the dates of their respective deaths. Some of the Plaintiffs withdrew without liberty to sue again, others died, and though numerous written statements of defence were put in and issues were framed, the case had not been brought on for trial when the present litigation commenced.

On the 30th June 1914, the present suit was instituted in the Subordinate Court, Dacca, by the present Appellants (the sons of Amirullah above referred to) against Salmullah, the heir of Ahsanullah, and other Defendants. Salmullah died shortly afterwards and his heirs who are wards of the Court of Wards were brought on to the record to represent him.

The plaint dealt at length with the history of the family and in para. 22 the Plaintiffs referred to the "wakf" of 1868, and the two agreements of 1881 on which they based their present claim. Their claim inter alia was for Rs. 32,725 being arrears of their father's allowance at the rate of Rs. 148-10-0 a month and for Rs. 12,967 being arrears of their mother's allowance at the rate of Rs. 60-5-0 a month. And they said in para. 24 of their plaint "the Defendants are liable and bound to pay the said amount either from the profits of the properties of the wakf of 1869 which are in their possession or from their personal funds."

In the written statement of defence it was inter alia pleaded that the properties included in the "wakf" deed of 1868 were properties belonging to Abdul Gani; that the wakf deed was invalid; that the allowances referred to in the agreement of 1881 were personal only and the Plaintiffs had not then been born and were not entitled to sue on the agreement and had no right to the arrears claimed; that no decision by the family panchayet had been given in the Plaintiffs' favour and that their claim was time barred. Objection was also taken to the form of the suit on the ground that all the necessary parties were not before the Court. Further it was pleaded that the suit as brought was barred by the result of the previous litigation and the pendency of the suit of 1895.

KHAJEH SOLEHMAN QUADIE v. NAWAB SIR SALIMULLAH BAHADUR.

On these pleadings numerous issues were framed of which the following are material.

(3) Is this suit barred under sec. 10, Civil Procedure Code, by reason of Suit No. 96 of 1895 pending in this Court?

(9) Have the Plaintiffs any right or title to the allowances claimed in the plaint; was any right created in their favour by the memorandum of agreement and the deed of agreement referred to in the plaint as well as by the withdrawal of Suit No. 189 of 1880?

(11) Are the Defendants precluded and estopped from questioning the validity of the said deed of agreement, without restoring the Plaintiffs or their representatives of the said Suit No. 189 of 1880, and the signatories or their representatives of the said memorandum of agreement to their original position in which they were during the pendency of the said suit before its withdrawal, and without revival of the said suit; does the question arise?

(12) Were the grants of allowances mentioned in the aforesaid memorandum of agreement and the deed of agreement in the nature of voluntary, charitable and compassionate gifts to specific individuals for life only, as is alleged in the written statement?

(13) Have the Plaintiffs inherited any of the allowances claimed in the plaint; are the allowances claimed in the plaint heritable; did the persons named in paras. 14 and 16 of the plaint inherit any allowance?

(14) Is the wakf of 1868 a valid document enforceable in law; if not is the claim of the Plaintiffs maintainable; can the Defendants question the validity of the wakf of 1868; has the said wakf been set aside by Nawab Abdul Gani as invalid; whether he had authority to set it aside after the agreement of 1881; does the question of the validity or otherwise of the said wakf at all arise in the present suit?

The Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment in the suit on 16th April 1917. He said "the question of the validity or otherwise of the wakf does not properly arise in this suit which is based on the agreement the consideration of which was lawful and good," and consequently he expressed no opinion on this question. He adds: "the admission as to title of Sir Abdul Gani in the memorandum of agreement could not make the wakf valid, if it was in law an invalid one, and the admission was the result of compromise; but the present case is based on the memorandum of agreement and the agreement notwithstanding the admission."

On the construction of the agreement (regarded apart from the above question) he said "the Plaintiffs are entitled to their parents' allowances not by heirship but under the covenant in para. 11 of the memorandum of agreement; the fact that they are the heirs of their parents who were in receipt of allowances from the 1868 properties as mentioned in the schedule of the deed entitles the Plaintiffs to receive the allowance under the said covenant . . . It is to be observed that the Plaintiffs' parents were in existence at the time of the memorandum of agreement, and that at the termination of the first life-estate of the Plaintiffs' parents the allowance would not and did not remain in abeyance, and the Plaintiffs stepped into their rights on their parents' death; and thus the covenant in the memorandum of agreement does not in so far as the present Plaintiffs are concerned militate against the rules of remoteness involved in the law of perpetuities."

The Subordinate Judge deemed it im-

material that the family panchayat contemplated by the agreement had not decided that the Plaintiffs were entitled to the relief which they claimed. Further he considered that the previous litigation above referred to and the pendency of the suit of 1895 mentioned above in para. 12 were immaterial to the question whether the Plaintiffs were entitled to make their present claim, which he further held was not affected by the law of limitation. He accordingly passed a decree in their favour for Rs. 45,692 on account of arrears of the allowances. The further claim made in the plaint for Rs. 15,000 as a provision for the construction of a house for them he disallowed.

Against the said decree of the Subordinate Judge the Defendants preferred an appeal to the High Court which was allowed with costs by a decree, dated the 6th June 1919. The Plaintiffs preferred no appeal against the disallowance of their further claim for Rs. 15,000.

In their judgment the learned Judges (Mookerjee and Walmsley, JJ.), pointed out that the Plaintiffs' claim was reduced to a claim for arrears of maintenance based on the two agreements dated respectively the 26th August and 17th September 1881. They said "The substantial matter in controversy thus is, whether there is a valid agreement enforceable at the instance of the Plaintiffs. For the determination of this question it is necessary to investigate two preliminary points, namely, first, are the wakfs valid in law, and secondly, if not valid in their inception have they been validated by the Mussalman Wakf Validating Act 1913." On these preliminary questions the judgment of the Court was that the alleged wakfs were not valid in law and had not been validated by the Act referred to, and they added:—

founded on, and is inseparably associated with the wakfs of 1846 and 1868; consequently, as soon as these wakfs are pronounced to be invalid and inoperative in law, the entire scheme must of necessity be shattered to pieces. The assertion of the parties or of their representatives cannot validate illegal wakfs, and the Court cannot be utilised for the enforcement of a scheme elaborately devised to carry out a plan of family aggrandisement in contravention of the whole policy of law. In this view a desperate effort has been made on behalf of the Respondents to support the scheme as if it were not based on the wakfs of 1846 and 1868; but plainly it is not the function of the Court to reconstruct for the parties a plan of maintenance allowance out of the wreckage of the scheme they themselves had ingeniously, but unsuccessfully, devised. Besides even if such an attempt were made it could not possibly succeed as the Court would have to support what was in disguise a scheme of family settlement which had failed because it was based on illegal wakfs. In our opinion there is good ground for the contention of the Appellant that a scheme for family allowances so framed would itself be contrary to law."

Further on the learned Judges said: "We cannot hold accordingly that the 11th paragraph of the memorandum of the 26th August 1881, created heritable interests" and the conclusion of their judgment was as follows: "In our opinion there is no escape possible from the position that, as the wakfs have failed, the entire scheme for grant of maintenance allowances by the mutwali from the income of wakf properties has been completely demolished."

The present appeal was preferred against the said decree of the High Court.

Palat for Appellants.—Assuming that the wakfs were invalid the ownership of the property was never parted with. A trust was formed, and whether Abdul Gani was or was not a valid mutwali is immaterial, he was put into possession purely as a trustee and has held the property only in that capacity. Being a trustee he cannot retain the property for himself.

Muhammad Rustam Ali v. Mushtaq Husain (9) and Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar (10).

I am also “persona designata” under the compromise agreement. That agreement is separate from the wakfs and its terms must be carried out.

Inasmuch as the agreement charges immoveable property with allowances in favour of certain members of the family, any person entitled to the allowance may proceed in equity to enforce his claim, whether he were a party to the original agreement or not.

KHAJEH SOLEHMAN QUADIR v. NAWAB SIR SALIMULLAH BAHADUR.

Messrs. Dunn & K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Respondents.—The whole intention of the compromise was to re-establish the wakf. You have in it a direct assertion that the wakfs are valid and a list of the properties comprised in each.

In 1894 it was laid down by the Privy Council that the wakfs were bad and the agreement which was really a re-enactment of the wakfs falls with them.

The claim here is a claim under the compromise, and the compromise is invalid whether you construe it as a gift or as a settlement.

The only method by which a Mahomedan could create this type of settlement was by wakf.

In no other way could he create a settlement giving a life interest and a heritable interest in the heirs.

To do so by wakf having been held invalid the alternative is gift—and in the present case no valid gift can be made because there is no donee who takes possession.

Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak v. Russomoy Dhur Chowdhry (3), Rasamaya Dhur Chowdhuri v. Abul Fata Mahomed Ishak (22), Abdul Gafur v. Nizamudin (2), Maulvi Saiyid Muhammad Munawwar Ali v. Razia Bibi (4) and Mutu Ramanadan Chettiar v. Veva Levvai Marakayar (23).

Under Mahomedan law, it is impossible to create a life-estate with remainder to a person who is not a party to the original transaction.

In Nawab Umjad Ali Khan v. Mohumdee Begum (6), the question was whether a donor could make a valid gift coupled with a condition to defeat the heirs and it was held that it was compatible with such a gift that the property should pass to the donee.

It is doubtful whether that judgment really illustrates Mahomedan law and in any case the reservation there by the donor is in himself.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

VISCOUNT CAVE—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal dated the 6th June 1919, which reversed a judgment and decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dacca dated the 16th April 1917. The facts giving rise to the dispute may be stated as follows:—

Early in the 19th century one Khajeh Abdullah, a Mahomedan trader of Dacca, died intestate, possessed of the property in dispute and leaving among other heirs four sons named Ahsanullah, Hafizullah, Abdul Azim and Abdul Karim.

On the 5th May 1846, certain members of the family executed a deed whereby they purported to "make wakf of" certain family properties therein described for the benefit of themselves and their descendants, generation after generation, and relatives, and then for the poor and destitute; and they thereby appointed Abdul Gani (grandson of Ahsanullah) to be mutwali of the properties, and directed him to pay to the heirs of Hafizullah, Abdul Azim and Abdul Karim, certain monthly allowances mentioned in the schedule and to keep the balance in deposit. On the 11th September 1868, Abdul Gani appointed his son Ahsanullah to be mutwali of this deed in his place.

On the same date, namely, the 11th September 1868, Abdul Gani executed a deed whereby he purported to "make perpetual wakf of" certain other properties of which he claimed to be the owner by inheritance or purchase in favour of his sons and offspring and all the members and relatives descended from his grandfather, the wakf being descendible to children both in the male and female lines, and on their failure, in favour of the fakirs and the poor indigent of Dacca; and he thereby appointed his son Ahsanullah to be mutwali of the wakf so created, and directed him to spend money befitting his reasat and to pay allowances to the parties in whose favour the wakf was made, with power to increase or reduce such allowances. This deed contained the following clause:—

The object of the wakf of the properties is this, that they be protected from injury and ruin, and that the name and dignity of the family be maintained, and that the profits of the estate be, according to the practice and usage of the family, spent for the improvement of the position and dignity of the family, for the comfort and benefit of the persons in whose favour the wakf is made, and for the performance of the worldly and religious affairs and of charitable acts

The purpose of these two deeds is plain. The intention of the donors in each case was to make perpetual provision for the members of their family by settling the the properties upon such members generation after generation so long as the family should last; and as such a settlement was not recognised by Mahomedan law, they sought to validate it by calling it a wakf and by inserting a distant and contingent provision for charitable purposes.

In the year 1880 some members of the family descended from the donors of 1846, being dissatisfied with the allowances paid to them out of the income of the settled properties (which had greatly increased), brought a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Dacca against Abdul Gani and Ahsanullah his son, alleging that the deed of 1846 was not valid as a wakf and that the deed of 1868 comprised properties purchased by the mutwali out of income accrued under the deed of 1846 and claiming accounts upon that footing and payment of their share. Among the parties to this suit were Amirullah (the father of the Appellants), his mother Izzatennessa Bibi, his wife Halima Bibi, and her mother Ayesha Khanum. The precise interests of these persons in the properties comprised in the two deeds of wakf are not clear on the record, and it is not now material to ascertain them, but it is plain that they had or claimed interests in the properties comprised in both deeds

The suit was heard, but before judgment was pronounced some friends of the family (including the then Lieutenant-Governor, Sir Ashley Eden, and the District Judge, Mr Rampini) intervened in the interests of peace, and ultimately a compromise was effected and the suit was stayed upon the terms of two agreements dated the 26th August 1881, and the 17th September 1881.

By the agreement of the 26th August 1881, which was signed by or on behalf of all the parties to the suit of 1880, it was agreed that all the persons entitled to receive allowances under the deed of 1846, and all the Defendants to the suit except Abdul Gani and his son Ahsanullah, should be made Plaintiffs in the suit, and that the suit should be withdrawn without power to bring any fresh suit for the same subject-matter. The principal terms of the agreement were contained in the following clauses :—

4. The persons signing this Memorandum of Agreement admit that the two deeds of 1253 B. E. and 1275 B. E. [1846 and 1868] are valid and binding deeds of wakf.

5. The persons signing this Memorandum of Agreement admit that the properties held as wakf by the Nawab Ahsanullah under the deed of 1253 B. E. now consist of the properties entered in Sch. A appended to this Memorandum of Agreement and of no other properties, and that the properties held as wakf by the Nawab Ahsanullah under the deed of 1275 B. E. now consist of the properties entered in Sch. B appended to this Memorandum of Agreement and of no other properties.

6. The Nawab Ahsanullah consents, by virtue of the power vested in him as mutwali by the said two deeds, to increase the allowances of the various members of the family whose names are entered in the Schs. C and D appended to this Memorandum of Agreement to an aggregate or total amount of Rupees one lac thirty-three thousand and eighty-four and eleven annas only per annum. And it is declared that the persons whose names are entered in the Sch. C appended to this Memorandum of Agreement are the persons entitled to allowances payable out of the income of the properties held as wakf under the deed of 1253 B. E. And the persons whose names are entered in the Sch. D appended to this Memorandum of Agreement are the persons entitled to allowances payable out of the income of the properties held as wakf under the deed of 1275 B. E. And it is agreed that the particular amount to be paid to each individual person shall be fixed hereafter by a Committee consisting of four male members of the family who shall be lineal descendants of the original proprietors of the estates entered in the said Schs. A and B, two of the said four male members being nominated by the Nawab Ahsanullah and two by the Plaintiffs of the Suit No. 189 of 1880, and the said four members having power to select an umpire with a casting vote from amongst their number or to select one other member of the family to be an additional member of their Committee, but who shall have one vote only.

7. On the amounts of the allowances to be paid to each individual member of the family being fixed by the said Committee, the Nawab Ahsanullah shall within two weeks' time execute an agreement on stamped paper agreeing to pay to each individual member the amount of the allowance fixed for him or for her by the said Committee, and stipulating that such allowance shall not be stopped except as hereinafter provided in this Memorandum of Agreement.

11. On the death of any member of the family in receipt of an allowance his or her allowance shall be distributed amongst his or her heirs and residuaries in proportions to be determined by the family panchayat to be appointed as hereinafter provided.

18. The family panchayat referred to in cls. 8, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15 and 17, and which shall consider and determine all the aforesaid family arrangements shall consist of the mutwali for the time being, if he chooses to sit, and four male members of the family being lineal descendants of the original proprietors of the estates mentioned in the said Schs. A and B, which four members shall be elected biennially by such adult male and female members of the family as choose to vote at the election, after having received due notice.

The agreement of the 17th September 1881, which was signed by Ahsanullah only, after a recital to the effect that a Committee, selected in accordance with cl. 6 of the agreement of the 26th August 1881, had fixed the amounts entered in the schedule given below as the amounts of the monthly allowances to be paid to the members of the family, whose names were entered in the same schedule, proceeded as follows :—

I, the Nawab Ahsanullah Khan Bahadur, as mutwali of the deeds of wakf of 1253 B. E. and 1275 B. E., referred to in the said Memorandum of Agreement, do hereby execute this agreement and agree, firstly, that within seven days after the beginning of each month of the Bengali calendar I and all future mutualis shall pay to each member of the family whose name is entered in the Schedule appended to this agreement the amount of the allowances entered against his or her name; secondly, that neither I nor any future mutwali shall stop or withhold payment of the allowances entered in the Schedule given below without just cause, such cause to be first declared just by the family panchayet to be elected biennially in accordance with Clause eighteen of the said Memorandum of Agreement; thirdly, that on the allowance of any member of the family being so stopped, I and all future mutualis, after deduction of any compassionate allowance which I or any future mutwali may make to the said offending member, shall pay the balance of the allowance so stopped to his or her family or relatives dependent on him or her; fourthly, that on the said biennially elected family panchayet determining on sufficient cause being shown to it that the allowance so stopped should be restored to the offending member, I or any future mutualis shall accordingly restore and continue it; and fifthly, on the death of any member of the family in receipt of an allowance, I and all future mutualis shall distribute the amount of his or her allowance amongst his or her heirs and residuaries in proportions to be determined by the said biennially elected family panchayet.

The schedule contained a list of the monthly allowances to be paid to the several members of the family out of the income arising from each of the two deeds, and included allowances under the deed of 1868 of Rs. 20 a month to Izzatennessa, Rs. 150 a month to Ayesha Khanum, and Rs. 150 a month to Amirullah. The suit was duly withdrawn in accordance with the agreements.

For some years after the execution of these agreements peace reigned in the family and the allowances secured by the agreements were duly paid. On the death of Izzatennessa her son Amirullah became entitled to a share of her estate, and a proportionate part of her monthly allowance of Rs. 20 was thenceforth paid to him; and on the death of Ayesha Khanum her daughter Halima (the wife of Amirullah) succeeded to a share of her estate, and a proportionate part of her monthly allowance of Rs. 150 was thenceforth paid to her. But in the year 1889 and the following years a series of decisions of this Board established that a settlement of property upon successive generations of a Mahomedan family, such as was attempted to be made by the deeds of 1846 and 1868, was void by Mahomedan law and was not validated by the use of the term "wakf" and the insertion of a remote and illusory provision for charitable purposes [See Sheik Mahomed Ahsanulla Chowdhry v. Amarchand Kundu (1), Abdul Gafur v. Nizamuddin (2) and Abdul Fata Mahomed Ishak v. Russomoy Dhur Chowdhry (3)]. In consequence of these decisions the Nawab Ahsanullah and his father (then Sir Abdul Gani, K.C.S.I.) appear to have taken advice as to the legal effect of the two deeds of wakf and the agreements of 1881, with the results to be now stated.

On the 18th January 1895, Sir Abdul Gani executed a Heba-Bilwaz (or deed of gift) whereby, after referring to the decisions of the Board and reciting that he was convinced and had been advised by lawyers that the wakfnama executed by him on the 11th September 1868, was not legally valid, he purported to make a gift in favour of his son Ahsanullah and his heirs of the properties therein described, being the greater part of those comprised in the deed of 1868; and he added:—

of Agreement executed on the 26th of August 1881, and as the legal effect, construction and force thereof are therefore binding upon me, you shall as the malik in possession hold and enjoy the properties which I make over to you by this Heba-Bilwaz, subject to the legal effect and construction of the said Memorandum of Agreement.

Shortly afterwards Ahsanullah gave notice to the heirs of such of the persons entitled to allowances under the agreements of 1881 as had died since the execution of those agreements, that he had been advised that the effect of the agreements of 1881 was that he was liable to pay allowances from the income of the properties covered by the wakf of 1868 to such persons only as were parties to the agreement of the 26th August 1881, and whose names were given in Sch. D of that agreement, but that he was not liable to pay such allowances to the heirs of such persons in perpetuity. Accordingly on the death of Amirullah (who died on the 3rd December 1895) and of his wife Halima (who died on the 29th April 1896) Ahsanullah stopped payment of the allowances under the deed of 1868 to which they had been entitled under the agreements either personally or as heirs of Izzatennessa and Ayesha Khanum, and refused to continue those allowances to their heirs. The heirs of Amirullah and Halima, who are the present Appellants, were then minors of the age of four and three years respectively; but shortly after attaining their majority they instituted the present suit against Salimullah Bahadur (the heir of Ahsanullah, who had then died) claiming arrears of their allowances, amounting to Rs. 45,692 and a declaration that the allowances were a charge on the properties comprised in the deed of 1868. They also claimed that a residence should be provided for them.

The suit was heard by the Subordinate

Judge of Dacca, who on the 16th April, 1917, gave judgment for the Plaintiffs (the present Appellants) for the arrears of maintenance allowances and costs, but disallowed the claim for a residence.

On Appeal by the Defendants to the High Court at Calcutta, that Court, on the 6th June 1919, gave judgment allowing the appeal and dismissing the Appellants' suit with costs. The reasons given by the Court for their decision were briefly:—

(1) that on the authority of the cases above cited [to which may be added Maulvi Sayid Muhammad Munawar Ali v. Razia Bibi (4)], the wakfs of 1846 and 1868 were invalid;

(2) that they were not validated by the Mussulman Wakf Validating Act, 1913, which is not retrospective; and

(3) that the agreements of 1881, being founded upon and inseparably associated with the wakfs of 1846 and 1868, fell with those wakfs.

Against this judgment the present appeal was brought.

In the argument before their Lordships there was no serious dispute as to the above propositions numbered (1) and (2). There can be no doubt that, having regard to the decisions of the Board above referred to, the deeds of 1846 and 1868, which purported to create by gift a perpetual succession of interests for the aggrandisement of the family of the donors, were invalid by the Mahomedan law and were not validated by the use of the term "wakf" or by the insertion of a remote trust for the poor; nor can the Act of 1913 be construed as validating deeds executed before its date. The real question to be determined, therefore, is whether the High Court was right in holding that, the deeds of wakf being invalid, the scheme of maintenance allowances contained in the agreements of 1881 also fell to the ground. The conclusion of the learned Judges of the High Court to that effect appears to have been based upon the view that the scheme of 1881 was founded upon and inseparable from the illegal wakfnamas and could not be supported by the Court without also supporting a family settlement which is contrary to Mahomedan law. They appear to have assumed, on the authority of the decision of the Board in Lakshmi Narayana Ananga Garu v. Madhawa Deo Garu (5), that if the maintenance allowances had been charged on the property they might have been upheld as heritable allowances; but they held that the parties to the agreements could not have intended to create a charge on property which they were dedicating to religious purposes, and accordingly that no charge was created.

With great respect to the learned Judges who came to that conclusion, it appears to their Lordships to give too little weight to the essential differences between the two deeds of wakf on the one hand and the agreements of 1881 on the other. The deeds of wakf were invalid because they attempted to create a perpetual succession of estates contrary to Mahomedan law, and the attempt was not validated by giving to the settlements a colour of charity; but the main purpose of the agreements of 1881 was quite different. The principal purpose of those agreements was to secure to living and named persons certain fixed allowances which were to become payable immediately and were to be continued to their heirs. It is true that the agreements purported to confirm the wakfnamas, and that the allowances were made payable by the hand of the mutwali of the wakfnamas out of the income accruing to him from the properties thereby settled; but the allowances were intended to take effect as immediate and heritable charges on such incomes taking priority of all the limitations contained in the settlement, and they may, therefore, be supported although those limitations fail. The direction to pay the allowances "out of the income" of the settled properties, which appears in both agreements, shows an intention to create a charge, and this intention was not frustrated by the ineffectual attempt to keep alive the subsequent and invalid limitations of the settlements.

There is a further difference between the two sets of documents which is also of importance. The wakfnamas were gifts and were, therefore, subject to the rule of Mahomedan law which requires that a gift shall be accompanied by delivery; but the agreements of 1881 are not gifts, but contracts for valuable consideration. By those agreements the members of the family other than Sir Abdul Gani and his son Ahsanullah surrendered their claims to property of considerable value and stayed their suit in consideration of a firm contract securing to them annuities to an amount exceeding Rs 1,30,000, and continuing such annuities to their heirs. Such an agreement if made for valuable consideration is not subject to the restrictions affecting gifts among Mahomedans, but is a contract creating a charge on lands, which may be enforced like other charges by the Courts. The provision contained in the agreements that the distribution of an annuity among the heirs of the annuitant should be in proportions to be determined by the family panchayet (if it was intended to do more than to authorize the panchayet to settle disputes as to heirship) may be disregarded, the more so as no panchayet has functioned for many years past. This view is in accordance with the decisions of the Board in Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Mussumat Mohumdee Begum (6), Lakshmi Narayana Ananga Garu v. Madhawa Deo Garu (5), Khwaja Muhammad Khan v. Husaini Begum (7) and Raja of Ramnad v. Sundara Pandiyasami Tevar (8); and it appears to their Lordships that it should prevail.

It is satisfactory that the above conclusion as to the law applicable to the case corresponds with the justice of the matter. It would be lamentable if the heirs of Ahsanullah, who in 1881 were confirmed in the possession of valuable properties as mutual only and on a clear agreement for the payment out of the income of such property of annuities to the members of the family and their heirs, were now at liberty to repudiate the fiduciary character of that possession and the conditions on which it was given and to keep the property in their own hands free from all charges. It is consistent not only with law, but with "equity, justice and good conscience," that the agreements should be observed.

For the above reasons their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed and that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge should be restored, the Respondents to pay the costs in both Courts and the costs of this appeal.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 50, 3, cl. (5), 106—Rent in kind—Firmity of rent—Presumption under sec. 50, if applies in case of produce rent—"Rent" in sec. 50, if restricted to "money rent"—Reference to Report of Select Committee and proceedings of Legislature, if permissible to interpret statute.

Where tenants paying rent in kind having been recorded as settled raiyats instituted suits under sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to have them entered as raiyats at fixed rents, and proved uniform payment of rent for over 20 years, but the suits were dismissed on the ground that the presumption under sec. 50 of the Act was not applicable to cases of rent in kind:

Held—That sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applied and the tenants were raiyats at fixed rents.

The presumption under sec. 50 is applicable to a tenure-holder or a raiyat holding at a rent payable partly in cash and partly in kind or entirely in kind.

The term "rent" in the said section is not restricted to "money rent" and bears the meaning attributed to it in sec. 3, cl. (5), of that Act.

Reference to the Report of Select Committee and proceedings of Legislature is not permissible in aid of the interpretation of a statutory provision.

These were appeals preferred on the 16th of August 1920 against the decree of DINA NATH PAL v. RAJA SATI PROSAD GARGA BAHADUR.

Babu Parada Kinkar Mukerjee, First Additional Special Judge of Zillah Midnapur, dated the 5th of February 1920, affirming the decree of Babu Hari Har Banerjee, Revenue Officer of Midnapur, dated the 22nd of April 1918.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Pearl Mohan Chatterjee for the Plaintiffs-Appellants.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babu Probodh Chandra Chatterji for the Defendants-Respondents.

MOOKERJEE, J.—These six appeals have arisen out of as many suits, instituted by tenants, under sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, against their landlords, for the decision of disputes regarding entries which had been made in a finally published record-of-rights. The Plaintiffs had been recorded as settled raiyats under the Defendants; they claimed that they were raiyats at fixed rents. In support of their contention, they produced rent receipts which showed that each of them had held at a uniform rent for over 20 years. In each case, however, the rent consisted partly of cash and partly of the money value of a fixed quantity of paddy. To take one illustration: in the case of one tenancy, the amount of rent as shown in the rent receipts was Rs. 20-1 anna 12 gandas 2 karas; this amount is made up of Rs. 18-13 annas 18 gandas 2 karas as cash rent and Re. 1-3 annas 14 gandas as the money value of 2 kuris 3 mans 1 khupi of paddy. These two items are shown separately in the receipts up to the year 1902, and, thereafter, the consolidated sum is shown as cash rent. Similar observations apply to each of the other cases.

In these circumstances, the Revenue Officer who tried the suits in the Court of first instance held that sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was not applicable. In his opinion, the term "rent" in that section did not include rent in kind. The result was that the suits were dismissed. On appeal, the Special Judge adopted the same construction of sec. 50 and confirmed the decision of the Revenue Officer. In this Court, the tenants have urged that sec. 50 has not been correctly interpreted by the Courts below.

"50 (1) Where a tenure-holder or raiyat and his predecessors-in-interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed from the time of the permanent settlement, the rent or rate of rent shall not be liable to be increased except on the ground of an alternation in the area of the tenure or holding.

(2) If it is proved in any suit or other proceeding under this Act that either a tenure-holder or raiyat and his predecessors-in-interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed during the twenty years immediately before the institution of the suit or proceeding, it shall be presumed, until the contrary is shown, that they have held at that rent or rate of rent from the time of the permanent settlement."

This section must be read along with sec. 3 (5) which provides that, unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context, rent means whatever is lawfully payable or deliverable in money or kind by a tenant to his landlord on account of the use or occupation of the land held by the tenant. This definition is in no way repugnant to the subject or context of sec. 50, and the term "rent" in that section may well be replaced by its equivalent as given in sec. 3 (5). This leads inevitably to the conclusion that the substantive rule formulated in sec. 50 (1) and the presumption embodied in sec. 50 (2) do not become inapplicable because a tenureholder or raiyat holds at a rent payable partly in cash and partly in kind or entirely in kind.

A determined effort was successfully made in the Courts below on behalf of the landlords—and the attempt has been resolutely repeated here—to place a restricted construction on sec. 50, by reference to the report of the Select Committee of the Legislative Council of the Governor-General which considered the draft of the Bengal Tenancy Bill at the final stage. It is well-known that there was, at one time, some divergence of judicial opinion on the question, whether produce rent, which, though varying annually with the varying amount of the yearly produce, was yet fixed as to the proportion it was to bear to such produce, was a fixed rent for the purposes of secs. 4 and 16 of Act X of 1859 and secs. 4 and 17 of Act VIII of 1859, B. C. The question was answered in the affirmative in a long series of decisions. Thakooranee Dossee v. Biscwar Mookerjee (1), Mitrajit Singh v. Tumdan Singh (2), Ramadayal v. Lachmi Narain (3), Jutto Moar v. Basmuttee Kooer (4) and Hanuman Parshad v. Kaulcshwar Pandey (5). The contrary opinion, however was maintained in Yacoob Hossein v. Wahid Ali (6) and Thakur Pershad v. Syed Mahommed Baker (7). But the decision in Yacoob v. Wahid Ali (6) was disapproved in Mitrajit v. Tumdan (2) and in Ramadayal v. Lachmi Narain (3). Jackson, J., when pressed with the decisions in Yacoob v. Wahid (6) and Thakur Pershad v. Syed Mahommed Baker (7), described in graphic terms the injustice of the rule favoured therein: "I confess I would have considerable difficulty in assenting to the rulings in these cases; because if the rulings are correct, the Legislature must have intended that raiyats who have held land upon one principle, that is to say, upon one fixed ratio of division of the produce of their land with the landlord, from the time of the permanent settlement, would be entitled to no protection whatever, but would after these 80 or 90 years be subject to a suit for enhancement or for commutation of their rent at such money rates as the landlord might be enabled to prove. I cannot believe that the Legislature could have intended any such injustice to raiyats in those parts of the country where the bhaobe system is prevalent, as it is in many parts of Behar. In those parts of the country, there being no such thing as a rate of rent in money, raiyats holding from the time of the permanent settlement would have no protection whatever, unless the Legislature meant to include under the words "rate of rent" the mode or principle of bhaobe payment. But it is not necessary for us to determine the case upon this point; if it had been so, I should have been inclined to propose a reference to a Full Bench."

There can thus be no doubt that there was a marked preponderance of judicial opinion in favour of the view that raiyats who paid their rent in kind, partially or entirely, were not disentitled to the benefit of the statutory presumption corresponding to the rule now embodied in sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

But the Respondents have invited our attention to the fact that while legislation, which ultimately culminated in the present Bengal Tenancy Act, was in hand, an attempt made to insert the following clause, so as to give effect to the view adopted in the majority of judicial opinions, was abandoned :—

“ When a raiyat has paid as rent a fixed share or the value of a fixed share of the produce of the land, the rent or rate of rent shall not be deemed to have been changed within the meaning of this section, merely by reason of the amount paid having varied from year to year, or by reason of the rent having been commuted, with the consent of both the raiyat and his landlord, to a fixed money rent ” [Digest of the Law of Landlord and Tenant prepared by C. D. Field, sec. 38; Bill prepared by the Rent Commission, 1880, sec. 16, Exp. I, Bill submitted by the Bengal Government, 1881, sec. 15, Exp. I, Bill as introduced in the Legislative Council, 1883, sec. 16, Bill as amended by the Select Committee of the Legislative Council, 1884, sec. 64 (3)]

This provision was omitted at the final stage, as appears from the following passage from the Report of the Select Committee :

“ We have omitted from the section, which enacts the well-known presumption arising from holding at a rent unchanged for twenty years, the sub-section which made the presumption applicable to produce rents, as opinion generally was opposed to it ” (Gazette of India, dated 21st February 1885, Part. V, p. 64).

We shall presently consider whether reference is permissible to the report of a

Select Committee in aid of the interpretation of a statutory provision. But, even if we assume for a moment that such reference is legitimate, it is plainly of no assistance in the present case. The omission of the clause left the Bill as it was, and that Bill, it cannot be overlooked, contained a comprehensive definition of the term “ rent ” Act X of 1859 did not contain a definition of the term “ rent ” and thus opened up, as is well-known, various opportunities for controversies of a recedite character. The Legislature remedied this defect by the insertion of a definition of the term “ rent ” in sec. 3 (5) of the Bengal Tenancy Act—a definition which, as Sir Arthur Wilson observed in Jatindia Mahan v Jaro Kumari (8), “ seems to express very clearly the meaning of the word ‘ rent ’ as it would be understood without any statutory definition.” We need not speculate, whether the members of the Select Committee fully realised the effect of this definition on the other provisions of the Bill they had then under consideration. But this much is clear, if they intended to alter the current of judicial opinion under the old law, they unquestionably failed to achieve their purpose by the mere omission of the clause we have mentioned. The result might have been different, if the term “ rent ” in sec. 50 had been replaced by the phrase “ money rate ” which makes its appearance in secs. 28, 29, 30, 53 and 61. We may add that the decision of Jenkins, C. J., in Baneswar v. Umesh Chandra (9), which was mentioned in the course of argument, does not assist us in the solution of the question raised before us. That case turned upon the construction of a document then before the Court, though, no doubt, it implies the opinion that rent payable partly in money and partly in kind cannot be regarded as fixed in amount. It may further be pointed out that the actual decision in that case has not been accepted in later decisions, which will be found reviewed in Nilmadhab v. Sitanath (10), Asutosh v. Hara Chandra (11), Gurudas v. Gobinda Chandra (12) and Basiruddin v. Afsarunnessa (13).

We are, however, of opinion that reference is not permissible to the report of Select Committee. The Judicial Committee ruled in Administrator-General v. Premlal Mullick (14), which reversed the decision of this Court in Administrator-General v. Premlal Mullick (15), that reference is not permissible to the proceedings of the Legislature which result in the provisions of an Act as legitimate aids to its construction, and Lord Watson observed that the same reasons which exclude their consideration when the clauses of an Act of the British Legislature are under construction, are equally cogent in the case of an Indian Statute. In that case, reference had been made by Petheram, C. J., and Pimsep, J., to the report of a Select Committee when the Bill which subsequently became the Administrators-Generals Act, was before the Legislative Council, Trevelyan, J., had, on the other hand, hesitated to adopt such a course, even though there was precedent in its favour in the Full Bench decision in Queen-Empress v. Karlik (16). The Judicial Committee cannot be deemed to have departed from the rule enunciated by them in Administrator-General v. Premlal Mullick (14), merely because they did not again express their disapproval of a similar method of interpretation adopted by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Re, Parbati Charan Chatterjee (17). Lord Watson and Sir Richard Couch were members of the Board on each occasion, and there is no indication that the Judicial Committee had, in the course of a few months, altered their opinion on the subject.

As regards the principles, which, as indicated by Lord Watson in Administrator-General v. Premlal Mullick (14), exclude the consideration of proceedings of the Legislature when the clauses of an Act of the British Legislature are under construction, it may be taken as well-settled that although light may be thrown on the scope of a statute by looking at what Parliament was doing contemporaneously and at the history of the statute, Hawkins v. Gathercole (18), yet even when words in a statute are so ambiguous that they may be construed in more than one sense, regard may not be had to the Bill by which it was introduced, Herron v. Rathmines Co. (19), nor to what has been said in Parliament, Miller v. Taylor (20), A. C. Railway v. Railway Commissioners (21), R. v. West Riding Council (22), or elsewhere, Martin v. Hemming (23) and Ewart v. Williams (24). The view has been consistently maintained that the Court cannot look at the history of a clause or of the introduction of a proviso, Barbat v Allen (25) and R. v Capel (26), nor at debates in Parliament, R v Whittaker (27) and Gorham v. Bishop of Exeter (28), nor at amendments and alterations made in Committees, Donegall v Layard (29) Attorney-General v Sillem (30) In Donegall v. Layard (29), Lord Campbell observed :—

“I must lament that his (Smith, M R, Ireland) zeal to do justice has led him into enquiries respecting this Act of Parliament which could not legitimately assist him in construing it, and which I think unfortunately induced him to change the sound construction which he had twice before put upon it. Surely, the fifth section ought to receive the same construction, whether it was first introduced in the House of Commons or in the House of Lords, and whether it was introduced in the Committee or on the third reading, and whether it was or was not altered after it was introduced. Nor could the rejection of the clauses moved by Lord Beaumont on behalf of the Marquis of Donegall in any way affect the construction of the clauses which were allowed to form part of the Act when it became law.”

In Attorney-General v Sillem (30), Pollock said: “No Court can construe any statute, and least of all, a criminal statute, by what Counsels are pleased to suggest were alterations made in Committee by a member of Parliament, who was ‘no friend to the Bill,’ even though the Journals of the House should give some sanction to the proposition. That is not one of the modes of discovering the meaning of an Act of Parliament recommended by Plowden or sanctioned by Lord Coke or Blackstone.”

Reference may also be made to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Re, Trans-Missouri Freight Assn (31), of the Supreme Court of Canada in Gosselin v R. (32) and of the High Court of Australia in Sydney Municipal Council v. Commonwealth (33). We may also usefully recall the observations of Lord Halsbury in Hilder v. Baxter (34):

“I have more than once had occasion to say that, in construing a statute, I believe the worst person to construe it is the person who is responsible for its drafting. He is very much disposed to confuse what he intended to do with the effect of the language which, in fact, has been employed. At the time he drafted the statute, at all events, he may have been under the impression that he had given full effect to what was intended, but he may be mistaken in construing it afterwards, just because what was in his mind was what was intended, though, perhaps it was not done.”

We must further remember that, as pointed out by Farwell, L. J., in R. v. West Riding Council (22), we have only to deal with the construction of the Act as printed and published—that is the final word of the Legislature as a whole, and the antecedent debates and subsequent statements of opinion or belief are not admissible. But they would be quite untrustworthy in any case. In the case of an Act dealing with a controversial subject, ambiguous phrases are often used designedly, each side hoping to have thereby expressed its own view, and the belief of each that it has succeeded is more often due to the wish than to any effort of reason. The generality of public understanding is quite incapable of proof and is beside the mark, unless as an appeal to timidity. The principles of construction applicable to Acts of Parliament are well-settled; they will be found stated in Stradling v. Morgan (35), which received the approval of Turner, J. J., in Hawkins v. Gathercole (18), of Lord Halsbury in Eastman Co. v. Controller General of Patents (36) and were quoted with approval by the Full Bench in Nulman v. Sati Prosad (37). They certainly do not admit of any such consideration. We hold accordingly that reference could not be made to the Report of the Select Committee, and that even if reference were permissible, the contention of the landlords would not be advanced thereby.

Our conclusion is that in sec. 50, the term "rent" cannot be restricted to "money rent" and that it bears the meaning attributed to it in sec. 3, cl. (5). The result is that these appeals are allowed and the suits decreed with costs in all the Courts. The hearing fee in this Court will be assessed at one gold mohur in each appeal.

Re-assessment of revenue and rent after expiry of settlement of temporary settled estate—Island chur—Regulation VII of 1822, sec. 9, settlement under—Collector, if may enhance rent payable by tenants—Proper procedure for enhancement—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Chap. X, Part II—Act IX of 1847, if applies to temporarily settled estates.

Where after the expiry of the settlement of an island chur, proceedings being taken under Reg. VII of 1822, the revenue was reassessed, and the estate was settled with the Plaintiff (the previous settlement-holder) and he brought a rent suit against the tenants at a rent settled by the revenue authorities (which was higher than the previous rent):

Held—That the Plaintiff was not entitled to recover the rent as settled by the revenue authorities.

Sec. 9 of Reg. VII of 1822 does not appear to do more than enable the Collector to ascertain and record the rents actually payable at the time when a settlement or re-settlement is made.

If it was desired to enhance the rents of the tenants, proceedings should have been taken by the revenue authorities under Part II of Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act or by the Plaintiff himself under sec. 52 or some other appropriate provisions of that Act.

Semle:—In a case of a temporarily settled estate, it would be always open to the revenue authorities to re-assess the revenue and re-settle the estate with effect from the expiry of a previous term of settlement, Act IX of 1847 not applying to the case.

This was an appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Khulna (Babu Nitai Charan Ghosh), dated the 25th November 1919, affirming a decree of the Munsif of Bagerhat (Babu Satchidanund Mukerjee), dated the 11th January 1919.

The facts material to this report are these :—

These appeals arose out of suits for rent by the Plaintiffs against the Defendants in respect of has mahal lands in island chur Sonakur bearing Touzi No. 1020 of the Khulna Collectorate held by the Plaintiffs as ijaradars under the Government. As a result of the proceedings taken under Reg. VII of 1822 the revenue payable by the Plaintiffs was re-assessed, and the annual revenue was settled at Rs. 674, the previous revenue having been Rs. 178. In the said proceedings the revenue authorities also settled the rents payable by the Defendants to the Plaintiffs, and these rents were higher than the previous rents. The reason of the enhanced rates was on account of increase in area.

Plaintiffs brought the present rent suits against the Defendants at the enhanced rates settled by the revenue authorities. The defence, inter alia, was that the Plaintiffs could not recover rents at the rates claimed as the settlement made under Reg. VII of 1822 was illegal, and that the settlement ought to have been made under the provisions of Act IX of 1847.

The Court of first instance held that the settlement made under Reg. VII of 1822 was illegal and decreed the suits at the original rates.

The learned Munsif held as follows. —

“ . . . It is argued on behalf of the Defendants that this is island chur, i.e., land gained from the sea or river and the

Reg. VII of 1822 therefore has ceased to have effect in all such cases and that Act IX of 1847, i.e., the Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Act shall be applicable in the present case. I do not see how the Plaintiff can get over this point. I think the settlement was not correctly made and that it was illegal. Under the circumstances the Defendants cannot be bound by the settlement. I therefore hold that the Plaintiffs would get rents at the original rate. Ordered that the suits are decreed in part at the admitted rate.”

On appeal by the Plaintiffs, the learned Subordinate Judge of Khulna affirmed the decision of the Munsif, and dismissed the appeals.

The following portion of his judgment will be found material to this report —

“ The learned vakil for the Appellants argues that Act IX of 1847 is confined to two questions, viz — (1) The liability to assessment of lands gained from the sea or from river by alluvion or dereliction, and (2) the right of Government to the ownership thereof, and he states that the question as to the settlement of rent is still within the scope of Reg. VII of 1822 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I think his contention is not a sound one. The question as to the liability to assessment covers settlement of rent. On a perusal of the provisions of secs. 3, 4, 5 and 6 of Act IX of 1847, it is evident that the assessment of new lands formed after the last survey can be undertaken only after the lapse of 10 years from the date of the previous survey under Act IX of 1847, which is in force in Bengal, Bihar and Orissa. Alluvial increments are to be assessed under the rules in force (see sec. 6 of Act IX of 1847). The last settlement of chur Sonakur was made in 1907. The area of the chur had been nearly doubled owing to alluvial accretion (see the Report marked Ex. 5). The re-settlement operation ought therefore to have been undertaken under Act IX of 1847 in 1917. I cannot therefore think that the settlement was legal and valid. The learned Munsif was therefore justified in deciding the claim for rent at the old rates."

Against this decision of the Subordinate Judge the Plaintiffs preferred the present second appeals to the High Court. Babus Surendra Chandra Sen and Hemendra Chandra Sen for the Appellants.

Rabu Mukunda Behary Mallick for the Respondents in Nos 551, 552 and 553.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

RICHARDSON, J.—It appears that an island formed in the Dhaleswari river in the District of Khulna to which the provisions of Bengal Act, IV of 1868, would seem to have been applicable. Possession of the island was taken by the Government, and in the year 1902 the island was settled with the Plaintiffs for a period of five years expiring on the 31st March 1907, as chur Sonakur bearing Touzi No 1020. This temporary settlement was continued for another period of five years ending on the 31st March 1912. The revenue authorities then decided that there should be a fresh assessment of revenue. The estate was therefore resettled for one year only with the Plaintiffs and proceedings were taken under Regulation VII of 1822 to re-assess the revenue. The result was that the estate was settled with the Plaintiffs for a term of five years commencing on the 1st April 1913 at an annual revenue of Rs. 674, the previous revenue having been Rs. 178.

In 1917 the Plaintiffs instituted four suits for rent which have given rise to the second appeals now before us. The Courts below concurred in dismissing these suits on the ground that the revenue authorities were not at liberty to proceed under Reg. VII of 1822 but were bound to proceed under Act IX of 1847. As to that Act the lower Appellate Court was of opinion that it was not open to the revenue authorities to apply its provisions because ten years had not elapsed from the date of the last previous survey thereunder. The learned Subordinate Judge seems to have assumed, without finding, that a survey of the land had been made under the Act before the second settlement of 1907. But apart from that I should have thought, though I do not decide the point in these appeals, that in the circumstances the Act of 1847 had no application and that in the case of a temporarily settled estate such as this, it would always be open to the revenue authorities to re-assess the revenue and re-settle the estate with effect from the expiry of a previous term of settlement.

Here, however, the revenue authorities not only re-assessed the revenue and made a Revenue settlement of the estate. They also purported to settle the rents payable by the Defendants and these suits are suits for arrears of rent at the rates thus settled. The question, therefore, arises whether the Defendants are under a legal liability to pay rent at those rates.

In the final report of the new settlement, dated 15th August 1914, it is stated that on the 18th February 1914, it was ordered that the operations should be carried out in accordance with the Regulations and not under the Bengal Tenancy Act. I gather from that and from the course which these suits followed in the Courts below, that the rents of the tenants were not settled under the provisions of Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act or under any other provisions of that Act.

The final report shows that the rate of rent was fixed under the Collector's orders at a uniform rate of Re. 1-8^{as} per standard bigha for all lands comprised in the chur and that the revenue assessed was calculated on the aggregate rental so arrived at. It is not disputed that the Defendants' rents, or the rents entered as payable by the Defendants in the settlement proceedings, were higher than the rents previously payable by them. The learned vakil for the Plaintiffs has been unable to tell us under what provision of Reg. VII of 1822 it was open to the revenue authorities to impose this increase or enhancement of rent on the Defendants.

No doubt sec. 9 of the Regulation lays certain duties on a Collector making or revising a settlement of the land revenue. Inter alia it requires that "a record shall likewise be formed of the rates per bigha of each description of land or kind of produce demandable from the resident cultivators not claiming any transferable property in the soil whether possessing the right of hereditary occupancy or not." The section also says—"The information collected on the above points shall be so arranged and recorded as to admit of an immediate reference hereafter by the Courts of Judicature, it being understood and declared that all decisions on the demands of the zamindar shall hereafter be regulated by the rates of rent and modes of payment arrived and ascertained at the settlement and recorded in the Collector's proceedings until distinctly altered by mutual agreement or after full investigation in a regular suit."

These provisions however do not appear to do more than enable the Collector to ascertain and record the rents actually payable at the time when a settlement or re-settlement is made.

If it was desired to enhance the rents of the tenants, proceedings should, as it would seem, have been taken by the revenue authorities under Part II of Chap. IX of the Tenancy Act or by the Plaintiffs themselves under sec. 52 or some other appropriate provision of that Act. This view, I may add, accords with that of the Board of Revenue as expressed in r. 87 at p. 19 of the Bengal Survey and Settlement Manual, 1917. The Rule states that "an officer making a settlement under Reg. VII of 1822 has no power to settle rents or to record rents higher than those hitherto paid, except by agreement with the parties subject to sec. 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in the case of rayati lands, when that Act applies."

In the circumstances I am not satisfied that the rents recorded in the settlement proceedings against the names of the Defendants in those suits were validly settled rents which the Defendants are bound to pay. As I understood the trial Court gave the Plaintiffs a decree for arrears of rent at the rates admitted by the Defendants, or at the original rates as the learned Munsif calls them.

The learned vakil for the Appellants has pressed for a remand of these cases to the trial Court for the purpose of an enquiry being made whether proceedings were in fact taken under the Bengal Tenancy Act or not. To my mind it would serve no useful purpose to direct a remand in face of the plain statement contained in the settlement report. These suits are in respect of rent for a period before the 31st March 1918, when the revenue settlement in question came to an end. It may be that other steps have been taken since and that the position is now different.

In the circumstances I am of opinion that these appeals should be dismissed with costs in all the appeals except No 554.

Judgment,

10, April.

AMULYA CHANDRA

BANERJEA and ors.,

Appellants,

v.

THE CORPORATION

OF CALCUTTA,

Respondent.

Calcutta Municipal Act (III, B. C., of 1899), sec. 14 (xi), 357, 556—Acquisition of land by Municipality to provide dharmshala for pilgrims to Kalighat Temple—"Public purpose," acquisition, if for, and for carrying out a purpose of the Act—Discretion given by statute to Municipality, if may be questioned in Court.

The provision of suitable and decent accommodation for the large numbers of worshippers who at certain seasons crowd into and about the Temple of Kali in a part of the town is, in view of the general questions involved, of public convenience, proper sanitation and the prevention of danger and disease to the worshippers themselves and to the ordinary resident population, a "public purpose" and not the less so because the persons mainly interested would be the worshippers and dignitaries of the Temple.

By the construction and maintenance of a dharmshala, the corporation of Calcutta carries out a purpose of the Act within the meaning of cl. (xi) of sec. 14 of Act III, B. C., of 1899.

Sec. 556 of Act III, B. C., of 1899, plainly confers upon the Corporation of Calcutta power to acquire land and buildings which are, in the opinion of the Corporation, necessary for carrying out any of the purposes of the Act. The exercise by the Corporation of the discretion thus expressly placed with it by secs. 14 and 556 of the Act cannot be questioned in a Civil Court.

The facts in this case are fully set out in the judgment of the Board.

The Appellants were owners of the premises No. 92-92/4, Kalighat Road, which were scheduled for acquisition by the Respondent in connection with a road and general improvement scheme—which included the erection of a dharmshala provided by private endowment.

The suit was instituted by the Appellants for a declaration that the Corporation was not competent in law to acquire land for a dharmshala, and for an injunction.

The Subordinate Judge made a decree in their favour on the 13th December 1917, but that decree was reversed by the District Judge of the 24-Pargannas on the 12th March 1919 and his judgment was upheld by a decree of the High Court (N. R. Chatterjea and Panton, JJ.), on the 27th February 1920.

From this latter decree the Appellants appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellants.—The action of the Corporation is "ultra vires."

They ought not to have power to erect out of the rates a dharmshala over which they could exercise no control. If everything that tends to the public convenience is within their powers irrespective of the chapters in the Act dealing with "health, safety and convenience" the Corporation's powers would be unlimited. The words "health, safety and convenience" are intended to be in the nature of a limitation and no evidence has been produced to show that the dharmshala was intended for the purposes of health, safety and convenience.

Mr. Dunne, K. C. (with him Mr. S. Hyam) for the Respondent.—Apart from other specific sections of the Act, sec. 14 (xi) is sufficient to give me power.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal from a decree, dated the 27th February 1920, of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal in its Appellate Civil Jurisdiction affirming a decree of the District Judge of 24-Pargannas, dated the 12th March 1919, which reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of that District, dated the 13th December 1917.

The suit was brought by the present Appellants for a declaration that the Municipality of Calcutta "is not competent, according to law, to acquire" certain property, and for a permanent order of injunction against their doing so.

The duties and powers of the Corporation as far as this case is concerned are contained in the Calcutta Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1899). The piece of land which is the subject of this suit is said by the Corporation to lie in "the very congested and insanitary area surrounding the ancient and famous Temple of the Goddess Kali of Kalighat." The area was added to and incorporated in Calcutta by the Bengal Act II of 1888. The condition and development of this area have been under the consideration of the Corporation for several years past. From the plans produced before the Board, it is clear that a system, inter alia, of widening of roads, involving the acquisition, and thereafter, the demolition of various buildings is in process of being carried out there.

On the 12th August 1914, the Corporation passed the following resolution:—

"(1) That the proposed 20-foot road on the north of the passage leading to the gate of the Temple be constructed in the place of the 40-foot road originally proposed over the site of Sham Roy's Temple and that the rest of the road be made 40 feet wide as proposed

"(2) That surplus land be acquired as shown on the plan.

"(3) That the estimate amounting to Rs 77,330 be sanctioned.

"(4) That in addition to the surplus lands included in the estimate amounting to Rs 77,330, the whole of the premises Nos 92 to 92 (4) Kalighat Road be also acquired, and that the additional sum required for the purpose be reported to the Corporation at their next meeting."

On the 26th May 1915, the following further resolution was passed:—

"(1) That the scheme for the construction of a colonnaded Dharamshala at a cost of Rs 28,000 on the land to be acquired at Nos 92 to 92 (4) Kalighat Road, and a Dispensary at a cost of Rs 15,000 on the land acquired on the north of the 60-foot road near the Kalighat Police Out-post, be sanctioned."

To these resolutions this explanation may be added. In the area there stands the Temple referred to—viz, that of Kali, the Goddess of Destruction. There resort to it at certain seasons of the year large numbers of worshippers, who crowd into this part of the City. They come from various parts of India, and their presence in such large numbers involves the provision of suitable and decent accommodation, and the avoidance of inconvenience or of danger to life or health. These inconveniences and dangers, to themselves and to the ordinary resident population, have required and obtained consideration at the hands of the Municipality.

The scheme which was formulated and is disclosed in these proceedings included the construction of roads adjoining the Temple of Kali. The property of the Appellants is in the neighbourhood of that Temple and consists of a square block of land with buildings upon it. The scheme involved the construction of a 20-foot road running north and south, cutting off a large eastern slice from the Appellants' land adjoining the Temple, which lies to the east. Another 20-foot road cut off a considerable slice of its western side, and was added for the widening of an existing narrow road. It cannot be denied that these slices, in so far as the scheme was a road construction or widening scheme, fell within the powers of the Municipality Sec 357, after quoted, covers that case.

The remainder of the Appellants' block thus forms a central plot within the two roads referred to. It was surplus land, and the Corporation had over it such powers of acquisition as the statute conferred.

As it turned out, a philanthropist was willing, out of his own private resources, to pay the expenses of constructing upon the plot a dharmshala, being a hostel or rest-house with proper sanitary and other suitable accommodation, so that the needs of pilgrims and visitors, and particularly the worshippers of Kali, during the period of overcrowding and danger already mentioned should so far be met. There can be no doubt that the principal object of the acquisition by the Corporation of this land was to enable the City of Calcutta to become the possessor of this great public addition to its municipal resources and advantages.

The Appellants, however, challenge the right of the Corporation to acquire the land compulsorily. The challenge was successful before the Subordinate Judge. Before the statutes are cited it is necessary to say that their Lordships fundamentally disagree with the proposition upon which his judgment is rested, viz., that the dharmshala is excluded from the term "public purpose" because the persons mainly interested would have been the worshippers' and dignitaries of the Temple. What the Municipality had to consider was not the religious beliefs and purposes of those assembling in such numbers, but what was the situation of the City in respect to this assemblage and to the citizens at large in view of the general questions of public convenience, proper sanitation, and the prevention of danger and disease. Any enlightened Municipality would carefully attend to these questions and endeavour to avoid the evils referred to. This is not to be ruled out by a consideration as to the particular form of belief or practice of those who would primarily benefit by the improvements made.

But, of course, the question of powers under the statute remains.

The following sections of the Act are material.—

"Sec' 14 In addition to the other duties and powers conferred or imposed on them by or under this Act or any other Act for the time being in force, the Corporation may, in their discretion, provide from time to time, either wholly or partly, for all or any of the following matters.—

(u) The construction, alteration, maintenance and adornment of public halls, offices and other buildings under the control of the Corporation or required for municipal purposes;

(v) The construction and maintenance of hospitals and almshouses;

(x) Any other matter which is likely to promote the public health, safety, or convenience or the carrying out of this Act."

By sec. 357 it is provided :—

"(1) The Chairman, with the approval of the Corporation, may acquire any land required for the purpose of opening, widening, extending or otherwise improving any public street, or of making any new public street, and the buildings (if any), standing upon such land.

"(2) The Chairman, with the approval of the Corporation and the sanction of the local Government, may acquire, in addition to land and buildings acquired under sub-sec. (1), any land outside the proposed street alignment, with the buildings, if any, standing thereupon, which the Corporation may, in the exercise of any of the powers conferred by sub-sec (1), consider it expedient to acquire;

"Provided that, in any case in which it is decided to acquire any land under this sub-section, the owner of such land may retain it by paying to the Corporation an annual sum to be fixed by the General Committee in that behalf, or a lump sum to be fixed by the General Committee, not being less than twenty-five times such annual sum."

It was stated that the Appellants, as owners of the land, were desirous of exercising any power of retention by payment as provided for in this section, although they had not yet taken any steps for that purpose.

By sec. 556 it is provided:—

"Sec. 556—In addition to the powers expressly conferred on any municipal authority by any other Chapter of this Act for acquisition and disposal of land or buildings, the Corporation may—

"(1) Acquire, or pay rent for, or take on lease under such conditions as they may think fit, any land and buildings, whether situated in Calcutta or not, which may in their opinion be needed for carrying out any of the purposes of this Act"

It is unnecessary to enter into the various points which are raised upon the statutes, and commented on in the judgments of the Court below, other than the one now to be mentioned. Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that the judgment of the High Court is right in one matter which is fundamental, and is entirely sufficient to dispose of the case.

In their Lordships' opinion, sec. 556 of the statute plainly confers upon the Corporation power to acquire land and buildings which are, in their opinion, necessary for carrying out any of the purposes of the Act. This refers back to, inter alia, the various cases in sec. 14. Those cited in argument are three in number, viz.—
(ii) the construction and maintenance of buildings under the control of the Corporation or required for municipal purposes, (v) the construction and maintenance of hospitals and almshouses; but there further remains, after a large category of no fewer than ten different items with much variety, sub-sec. (xi): "any other matter which is likely to promote the public health, safety or convenience, or the carrying out of this Act."

It may be true that the acquisition of this block of land for a dharmshala would not fall under (ii) as being for a building under the control of the Corporation, or even under the general denomination of hospitals or almshouses in (v); but upon these nothing need be said, for their Lordships are clearly of opinion that the construction and maintenance of a dharmshala cannot be said to be ruled out of (xi), which covers "any other matter which is likely to promote the public health, safety or convenience, or the carrying out of this Act." This being so, their Lordships would be the last to question the opinion of, or the exercise of discretion by, the Municipality of Calcutta, even if they differed from it, which they certainly do not. The Act by sec. 14 and sec. 556 has expressly placed the discretion, not with this Board or with a Court of Law, but with the Municipality itself. The Corporation has the power of acquisition of land which may in their opinion be needed for carrying out any of the purposes of the Act. The resolutions come to clearly enough express that opinion. And the matter is thus at an end.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

Judgment, 12, May.]

Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), sec. 23—Succession to taluqdari estate in List 4—"Ordinary law," if includes sanad—Crown Grants Act (XV of 1895), sec. 3—Family custom, proof of, antecedent to sanad, if admissible—Instance of subsequent date, value of.

The "ordinary law" by which, under sec. 23 of the Oudh Estates Act, the succession on intestacy to a taluqdari estate entered in List 4 is to be regulated is the law which would govern the parties apart from the statute and includes any sanad giving title to the property in dispute.

NARENDRA BAHADUR SINGH v. ACHAL RAM (1), DEBI BAKSH SINGH v. CHANDRA-BHAN SINGH (3) and SITLA BAKSH SINGH v. SITAL SINGH (4) relied on.

BRIJ INDAR BAHADUR SINGH v. RANEE JANKI KOER (5) and PARBATI KUAR v. CHANDRAPAL KUAR (2) explained.

Instances of succession in the family which occurred before the forfeiture of the estate in 1856 and the grant of a new title upon the conditions laid down in a sanad of 1863 cannot be used to set up a rule of succession directly contrary to the terms of the sanad, and a single instance, unexplained, of a subsequent date which occurred in one branch of the family was wholly insufficient to establish a custom binding on another branch.

THAKUR SHEO SINGH v. RANI RAGHUBANS KUNWAR (6) referred to.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Oudh, dated the 2nd January 1907, affirming a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh, dated the 25th February 1915.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought by the Appellant to recover possession of a taluqdari estate in Oudh. The estate in question was held by Lal Ram Kinkar who died without issue in 1907 and his widow the first Respondent entered into possession. The Appellant as the nearest male relative of Lal Ram Kinkar claimed to be entitled to his estate (1) under the terms of a sanad granted jointly to the representatives of four branches of the family (including Chattarpal mentioned below), (2) by an alleged family custom of lineal primogeniture, (3) and under the Will of Chattarpal who was the Appellant's paternal uncle and father of the first Respondent's late husband.

The Subordinate Judge held that the alleged custom was not proved, and that the succession as provided in the sanad was not applicable owing to the entry of Chattarpal's name in List IV under Act I of 1869 and he dismissed the suit. On appeal to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Kanhaiya Lal, J. C., held that the rule of succession provided by the sanad had not been superseded by Act I of 1869; Kendall, J. C., however, took the view that for the purposes of succession reference must be made to the Act and not to the sanad. Both the learned Judicial Commissioners, however, agreed that no custom had been established which prevented the widow from succeeding and they made a decree dismissing the appeal.

From that decree the Plaintiff appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellant—The sanad was in the common form and provided for succession to the estate by male lineal primogeniture. Subsequently the Oudh Estates Act, I of 1869, was passed and the owners of the estate, were in accordance with the provisions of sec. 8 entered in List IV—sec. 23 of the Act is therefore applicable, which provides that succession is to be “regulated by the ordinary law to which members of the intestate’s tribe and religion are ‘subject’” Where a sanad has already been given the “ordinary law” must include any limitations in the sanad as to succession.

Debi Bakhsh Singh v Chandrabhan Singh (3) and Sitla Baksh Singh v. Sital Singh (4).

The case of Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Rancee Janki Koer (5) has been cited as an authority for the proposition that the Act overrides the sanad, but that case was distinguished in Debi Bakhsh Singh v Chandrabhan Singh (3).

It was a case under List 2 and was governed by the provisions of sec. 22 of the Act and not sec. 23.

The provisions of the sanad are rules of “ordinary law” which are to be taken into consideration in conformity with sec. 23.

family were joint and undivided, on his death the succession would be by survivorship and the Appellant under the Mitakshara is the heir.

• Bajnath Prasad Singh v. Tej Bali Singh (7).

[LORD PHILLIMORE.—There is evidence on the record that even if this is an undivided family, the widow could succeed by custom.]

Mr. Dunne, K. C.—There was a grant to each separate branch by Government and a new stock arises with Chattarpal. There is no custom of female inheritance in his line.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dubé for the Respondents.—After the confiscation, the titles granted by Government in 1858 were of self-acquired property. This estate was split up into four partible and not four impartible estates and succession to it could not be by survivorship.

Sec. 23 of Act I of 1869 is the controlling section and by that section the sanad is not to be considered.

List 4 is a list of persons who do not hold impartible estates and includes, e.g., Mahomedans. The effect of putting this estate in List 4 was tantamount to a declaration that the succession should be governed by ordinary law and not by the sanad.

The ordinary law must mean the custom by which the intestate is ordinarily governed without the incorporation of the sanad.

Debi Bakhsh Singh v Chandrabhan Singh (3) specifically states that you may only refer to the sanad in case of ambiguity. Here there is no ambiguity and reference to the sanad is not justified.

'Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

VISCOUNT CAVE.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiff in the suit from a decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh affirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh by which the Plaintiff's suit was dismissed. The question raised is as to the title to an estate in Oudh of considerable value known as the Mahal Tajpur.

Lal Ajodhia Bakhsh, the ancestor of the Plaintiff, belonged to a family of Bisen Thakurs long settled in the District of Partabgarh, and was the owner of an estate called Kundrajit or Shamspur. At the time of the Mutiny, this family had four branches representing the descendants of the four sons of Lal Ajodhia Bakhsh; the first branch being represented by Thakurain Baijnath (a widow), the second by Lal Chhatarpal, the third by Lal Surajpal and the fourth by Lal Chandrapal. On the annexation of Oudh in 1856, this estate, with the remainder of the soil of the province, was confiscated by the British Government, which assumed the right (as stated in Lord Canning's Proclamation of the 15th March 1858), to dispose of it in such manner as it thought fitting. Lal Chhatarpal had taken action against the British Government, but Thakurain Baijnath had been loyal; and ultimately by a sanad, which is undated but which appears from other documents to have been executed in the year 1863, the Chief Commissioner of Oudh under the authority of the Governor-General granted the estate of Kundrajit to the above-named four persons, Thakurain Baijnath, Lal Chhatarpal, Lal Surajpal and Lal Chandrapal, and their heirs, subject to the usual conditions as to the surrender of arms and loyalty to the British Government. The sanad was in the form then commonly adopted and contained the following clause:—

"It is another condition of this grant that, in the event of your dying intestate or of any of your successors dying intestate, the estate shall descend to the nearest male heir according to the rule of primogeniture, but you and all your successors shall have full power to alienate the estate, either in whole or in part by sale, mortgage, gift, bequest, or adoption to whomsoever you please."

Chhatarpal appears to have objected to the sanad on the ground that he was alone entitled to the whole estate, but it was ultimately accepted by him and by the other grantees.

On the passing of the Oudh Estates Act (Act I of 1869), the four grantees above-named (bracketed together), were entered as owners of Kundrajit in List 1 and List 4, as prepared under sec. 8 of the Act. There appears to have been no reason why they should not have been entered in List 3 as owners of an estate regulated by the rule of primogeniture; but they may have preferred not to be subject to the special rules of succession which, under sec. 22 (cls. 1 to 10) of the Act, apply to estates entered in that List. In any case, this is now immaterial, as the estate must be dealt with according to the rules regulating estates entered in List 4.

In or about the year 1872, Kundrajit was divided into four Mahals, which were allotted to the four branches of the family, Mahal Tajpur being allotted to Chhatarpal. The effect of this partition was that this Mahal was held by Chhatarpal alone as an impartible taluq on the terms of the sanad and of the Act of 1869.

Chhatarpal died on the 19th October 1899, and was succeeded by his son Lal Ram Kinkar. On the death of the latter without issue on the 6th October 1907, his widow, the first Respondent, Thakurain Harnam Kuar, took possession of Tajpur and the lands then held with it. Thereupon, the Appellant, Babu Badri Naram Singh, who was the son of Chhatarpal's eldest brother and was the nearest male heir in line and degree, claimed to be entitled to the succession: and on his right being disputed he commenced, in 1913, the present suit against Thakurain Harnam Kuar and other members of the family for possession of Tajpur and other lands. By his plaint, he claimed possession (a) under the terms of the sanad, (b) by an alleged family custom of succession by male lineal primogeniture, and (c) under a Will executed by Chhatarpal on the 6th September 1899. This Will, having been executed less than 3 months before the death of Chhatarpal, is now admitted to have been inoperative (under sec. 13 of the Act of 1869), to pass the estate, and it need not be further referred to.

Judge of Partabgarh, who held that the alleged custom was not proved, and that having regard to sec. 23 of the Act of 1869, under which the succession on intestacy to a taluqdari estate entered in List 4 is to be "regulated by the ordinary law to which the members of the intestate's tribe and religion are subject," the succession in this case was to be regulated not by the sanad but by the law of the Mitakshara. He accordingly held that the widow of Lal Ram Kinkar was entitled to succeed, and dismissed the suit.

On appeal the Judicial Commissioners differed on the question whether the sanad applied; but they agreed in holding that there was an established custom in the family that the widow should succeed, and that this custom continued notwithstanding the forfeiture and re-grant of the estate, and they accordingly affirmed the decision of the Subordinate Judge. Against this decision the present appeal was brought.

It is not and cannot be disputed that, if the rule of succession laid down in the sanad of 1863 is to have effect, the Appellant as the nearest male heir is entitled to the succession; and in the argument for the Respondents, the principal stress was laid upon the contention which prevailed with the Subordinate Judge, namely, that the effect of sec. 23 of Act I of 1869 was wholly to displace the rule of succession prescribed by the sanad and to substitute for it the ordinary rules of succession prevailing among Hindus who are subject to the law of the Mitakshara. This contention was disposed of by the First Judicial Commissioner in manner appearing by the following extract from his judgment:—

"The meaning of the words 'ordinary law' has been the subject of much discussion in this case. It could not merely imply the personal law of the intestate's tribe and religion, because the personal law applicable to Hindus and Muhammadans has, in many instances, been modified and is controlled by the Indian Statutes. In the case of Hindus, for instance, the personal law of Hindus is controlled and governed in some respects by the Caste Disabilities Removal Act (XXI of 1850), the Hindu Widows Re-marriage Act (XV of 1856), the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) and the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) and the Crown Grants Act (XV of 1895), wherever they are applicable. In the case of Muhammadans, the provisions of the Muhammadan Law are similarly controlled and governed in some respects by the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), wherever they are applicable. It cannot, therefore, be said that a reference to the 'ordinary law' in sec 23 is merely meant to imply the personal law uncontrolled by custom or Acts of the Indian Legislature. As pointed out by Lord Hobhouse in a case of List 2, the effect of the 11th sub-sec. of sec 22 is simply to refer the parties to the law which would govern the descent of the property when the special provisions of the Act are exhausted, and such ordinary law would include custom [Bhai Narendra Bahadur Singh v. Achal Ram (1)]. In Purbati Kunwar v. Chandrapal Kunwar (2), Lord Collins applied the same rule to a case of List 4, governed by sec. 23. In other words, when the special rules of succession laid down in sec 22 are exhausted and sec. 22, cl (11) is reached, or when sec 23 is applicable, the situation governing the succession has to be found apart from the Statute, that is, in the ordinary law applicable as if Act I of 1869 had not been passed. That ordinary law would include not only custom but also a sanad, where the sanad contains a rule of succession which is enforceable by Statute."

Their Lordships agree with the reasoning and conclusion of the First Judicial Commissioner; and indeed no other conclusion is consistent with the decisions of this Board in Narendra Bahadur Singh v. Achal Ram (1), Debi Bakhsh Singh v. Chandrabhan Singh (3) and Sitla Baksh Singh v. Sital Singh (4). These decisions clearly establish that the "ordinary law" referred to in the Act is the law which would govern the parties apart from the statute and includes any sanad giving title to the property in dispute. It is true that these decisions were rendered with reference to cl. 11 of sec. 22, and not with reference to sec 23 of the Act; but the terms of the latter section are precisely similar to those of sec. 22 (11), and their Lordships see no sufficient reason for giving to them a different construction. It may be added that the Oudh Estates (Amendment) Act, 1910, has no application to this case, which arose before that Act was passed.

An argument was founded, as in the cases cited, upon the dictum of Sir Barnes Peacock in Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ranee Janki Koer (5), that in that case "the limitation in the sanad was wholly superseded by Act I of 1869, and that the rights of the parties claiming by descent must be governed by the provisions of sec. 22 of that Act." But it must be remembered that in that case (which arose under List 2) the contest was between the female heir of the grantee (a widow) and the heir of her late husband, neither of whom could claim under the sanad; and this being so, the case is no authority for the view that the effect of sec. 22 (11) or of sec. 23 of the Act was wholly to destroy the rules of succession laid down under sanads which had been so recently granted. Probably the dictum means no more than this, that the Act supersedes the sanad where the two are in conflict. Reliance was also placed on the case of Musammat Parbati Kunwar v. Rani Chandrapal Kunwar (2), which arose under List 4; but that case was argued (doubtless for good reasons) without any reference whatever to the sanad, and cannot, therefore, be taken as an authority on the question now under discussion.

In their Lordships' opinion, this argument fails.

With regard to the question of custom, the decision of the Judicial Commissioners appears to have been founded on certain instances in which the members of the family of Lal Ajodhia Bakhsh were succeeded by their widows; but all these instances, with one exception, occurred before the forfeiture of the estate in 1856 and the grant of a new title upon the conditions laid down in the sanad; and they cannot be used to set up a rule of succession directly contrary to the terms of the sanad under which the estate is now held. The Crown Grants Act of 1895, sec. 3, enacts that all provisions, etc., contained in a grant "shall be valid and take effect according to their tenor, any rule of law, statute or enactment of the Legislature to the contrary notwithstanding," and full effect was given to this enactment in Thakur Sheo Singh v. Rani Raghubans Kunwar (6). The exception was in the case of the widow of Surajpal, one of the grantees under the sanad of 1863, who appears to have been allowed to take possession of his estate to the exclusion of his male heirs; but this single instance, which is unexplained, is wholly insufficient to establish a custom binding on another branch of the family. This argument, therefore, also fails, and the Appellant's title prevails.

For the above reasons their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed; that the decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner and the decree of the Subordinate Judge should be set aside; and that the Appellant should be held entitled to possession of Mahal Tajpur with any accretions thereto and to an account and payment of mesne profits. The Respondents will pay the costs of the Appellant in both Courts and his costs of this appeal.

Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 68, imperative character of—Exceptions other than those laid down by secs. 69, 70 and 71, if admissible—Evidences admitted without objection in the trial Court, when can be challenged in appeal.

Where two mortgage bonds were, in the Court of first instance, proved in the ordinary way and admitted in evidence without any objection from the Opposite Party, although the provisions of sec. 68 of the Indian Evidence Act were not complied with and no proof was given that no attesting witness to the documents was alive or available:

SHIB CHANDRA SINGHA v. GOUR CHANDRA PAL.

Held—That sec. 68 of the Indian Evidence Act is imperative and does not on the face of it admit of any relaxation except in the cases provided by secs. 69, 70 and 71 of the Act and that the mortgage bonds were improperly admitted.

Taylor on Evidence, 11th Ed., p. 1230, sec. 1843 and MANNERS v. POSTAN (2) referred to.

SHAMU PATTAR v. ABDUL KADIR (4) referred to.

The contention that the strict mode of proof prescribed in sec. 68 of the Indian Evidence Act applies only to cases where the document is attempted to be enforced to prove the legal right or relation it creates and not in cases where such document is sought to be proved for a collateral purpose is not sound.

Held, further—That where evidence has been received without objection in direct contravention of an imperative provision of the law, the principle on which unobjected evidence is admitted, be it acquiescence, waiver or estoppel, none of which is available against a positive legislative enactment, does not apply.

HARAK CHAND v. BISHNU CHANDRA (6) referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 17th November 1919 against a decree of the Additional District Judge of Noakhali (Amrita Lal Mukerjee, Esq.), dated the 13th August 1919, affirming a decree of the Munsif at Sudharam (Babu Tribhubaneshwar Roy), dated the 19th November 1917.

The facts of the case appear from the following extracts from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court.

(6) 8 C. W. N. 101 (1908).

This appeal arose out of a suit for khas possession of the disputed properties after establishment of Plaintiff's title thereto.

The Plaintiff's case was that one Ram Sunder Pal had eight sons of whom Madan Chandra Mohan who died leaving a son Nagendra, Defendant No. 8. Sambhu, deceased father of Plaintiff No. 3, Kasinath, Gour Chandra (Plaintiff No. 1), Raj Chandra (Plaintiff No. 2), Joy Chandra, Kali Chandra and Haris Chandra were his other seven surviving sons at his death. Kasinath died leaving two widows, Nabatara and Janaki (Defendant No. 4). Nabatara died Defendants Nos 9 and 10 were sons of Joy Chandra deceased. Kali and Haris died unmarried and their mother Joytara inherited their shares.

Ram Sunder took howla settlement of 4 kanis 2 karas 2 kags land of Taluk Emamuddin in 1279 in the name of his able and intelligent son Kasinath. At that time Kasi and Sambhu only were majors and some of the other sons were not born and others were minors including Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2. Ram Sunder then acquired one-third share of the taluk, in which partitioned share the said howla lands were included, exclusively in Kasinath's name in 1285 B. S. The howla merged into the taluki right and that land was property No. 1 of the plaint. Ram Sunder was joint in mess with all his sons and grandsons till his death in 1300 B. S. Then there was dispute among his heirs and by amicable settlement Kasinath got the said taluki share exclusively but it was arranged that Kasinath would possess six annas of the taluk in khas and grant jote rights to the brothers in respect of the remaining ten annas share. In this way five jotes were created. Four jotes were at Rs. 2-8-0 per annum, each in the names of Gour Chandra, Raj Chandra, Joy Chandra and Sambhu Chandra and one in the names of their step-brothers Kali and Haris at Rs. 5.

In 1311, Kasinath in order to defray his expenses of pilgrimage to Gaya sold his six annas khas taluki lands to Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 and Joy Chandra. Kali and Haris having died, their mother Joytara took respectively Rs. 40 and Rs. 25 from Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 on occasions of their sraddhs and sold their jotes to Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2. Previously to their death Haris and Kali and Sambhu joined their jotes and were in joint possession. After purchase by Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2, they and Sambhu similarly possessed jointly the jotes of Haris and Kali.

In 1319, Sambhu died and his son Bepin, Plaintiff No. 3, remained in joint possession of the jotes with Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 dispossessed Plaintiffs from the jotes of Kali, Haris and Sambhu alleging that they had purchased ten annas of the taluk from Defendant No. 4 and that they were entitled to khas possession. Defendant No. 3, the maternal uncle of Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, was one of the dispossessors. Defendants Nos. 5 to 7 took a kat-kabala of these properties from Defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

Property No. 2 was Ram Sunder Pal's osat raiyati. After Ram Sunder's death Plaintiffs became 16 annas owners by inheritance and by virtue of surrenders by other heirs of Ram Sunder.

Property No. 3 was Ram Sunder's osat raiyati at Rs. 29 and property No. 4 was his osat raiyati at Rs. 13. 13 gandas land of property No. 3 and 15 gandas land of property No. 4 were disputed. They fell to the 2 annas 16 gandas share of Kasinath. On his death and on the death of his widow Nabatara, Defendant No. 4

(the other widow) granted barga settlement of 13 gandas of property No. 3 to Plaintiffs and Kunja, and osat raiyati settlement of 15 gandas lands of property Nos. 3 and 4 to Plaintiffs by accepting a kabuliyat.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 having taken a kabala from Defendant No. 4 in respect of 10 annas taluki property, 8 annas of property No. 2 and 2 annas 16 gandas of properties Nos. 3 and 4 dispossessed Plaintiffs from these properties. There was a case under sec. 145, Cr P C., and it was decided against the Plaintiffs. Hence the suit.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were the real contesting Defendants. Defendants Nos. 3, 4, 5 to 7 and 9 and 10 supported Plaintiffs. Defendant No. 8 did not file any defence.

The main contentions of Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were that the howla and the taluk belonged to Kasinath as he acquired the same; that six sons of Ram Sunder separated from him during his life-time; that there was no amicable settlement or creation of jotes or division of the taluk as alleged in the plaint; that only nal lands were transferred to Plaintiffs by Kasinath out of his 6 annas taluki right excluding tanks, banks, gars and gardens, etc., that Joytara never sold Kali's and Haris's shares to Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2; that Ram Sunder had no osat raiyati right in property No. 2, but that it was the osat raiyati of Sambhu and Kasinath in equal shares; that 8 annas of it was possessed by Plaintiff No. 3 and 8 annas by Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 by purchase; that the story of surrender was false; that properties Nos. 3 and 4 belonged to Ram Sunder and 2 annas 16 gandas share belonged to Kasinath but there was no barga or osat raiyati settlement by Defendant No. 4 with Plaintiffs and the Plaintiffs' alleged kabuliyat was never accepted by Defendant No. 4; that Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had purchased all the properties of Kasinath from Defendant No. 4 and then mortgaged the same to Defendants Nos. 5 to 7.

The learned Munsif decreed the Plaintiff's suit in part declaring 4 annas right to property No. 1 of Plaintiffs Nos 1 and 2 and 11 annas 4 gandas share of the Plaintiffs in property No. 2. He rejected their other prayers and granted possession of the shares declared as Plaintiffs' properties.

Upon appeal, the lower Appellate Court modified that decree, and in the course of his judgment observed:—

“As to the dispute and amicable arrangement the Plaintiff (P. W. No. 5) and P. W. No. 10, the only surviving witness, prove the fact. P. W. No. 8 was not present then. Much has been said against P. W. No. 10. He is financing the Plaintiffs for conducting this litigation. So, he is styled by the learned Pleader for the Respondents as master of Plaintiff No. 1. But this man has been styled by the lower Court as a jail bird. He was once convicted for inflicting grievous hurt to a man. That does not make him a felon. At a moment of excitement for some reason or other every man good or bad may inflict some injuries to a person which may turn out to be grievous. I cannot agree with the lower Court or with the learned Vakil for the Respondent that this man's evidence is to be discarded on the above grounds. This very man attested many of Defendants' documents, Exs. A and B. He is an important old witness and so he is expected to know all these old matters. I am not inclined to disbelieve him. Thus I find that Ram Sunder Pal acquired this taluk in his son Kasinath's name. Kasinath was the ablest man then. His other sons were either not born or minors. Gour, Plaintiff No. 1, was a minor then. P. W. No. 8 says that Gour became competent afterwards and then looked after the affairs of the family. But he being a minor at the time of the creation of the howla and the taluk the same were acquired in Kasinath's name. There was nothing unusual in it. In these circumstances the story of the Baithak and the amicable settlement as alleged by Plaintiffs and proved by P. W. Nos. 5 and 10 is in my opinion true. If it had not been so, then there would not have been the division of the taluk in 6 annas and 10 annas as alleged by the Plaintiffs.

Then it is attempted by Defendants to prove that Kasinath made these fictitious jotes only to reduce the cesses in the cess return in consultation with Bhuia Gazi, father of D. W. No. 4, who had similarly submitted his return making a jote in the name of his brother-in-law Laku Miya. This story of Defendant No. 1 and D. W. No. 4 cannot at all be believed. I cannot place any reliance on their evidence to the effect that Kasi took Defendant No. 1 in his confidence although he was 18 years old then and that Bhuia Gazi took his son in confidence on such a fraudulent transaction. I asked the learned Vakil for the Respondents whether by that means Kasinath succeeded in reducing the cesses.* He answered in the affirmative. But subsequently he said that he was not aware of it. However that may be, it can be said that Kasinath or his widow or her vendees cannot take advantage of a completed fraud practised upon the Government, by such a nefarious and fraudulent act. I have already observed that this story is quite false. Ex. 5 does not at all rebut the presumption raised by the Ex. 4 cess return as I have already shown.

It dealt with one the 6 annas khas taluki lands and not with the jotes and the recitals that no jote existed therein did not qualify the 10 annas jote share of the taluk in any way. In my opinion Exs. A and B though unopposed in the lower Court were not proved by any attesting witness and were inadmissible in evidence. Ex. B shows that all the brothers of Kasinath were made liable for the debts incurred thereby. The entire taluk was mortgaged and thus Kasinath made his brothers liable for the debt incurred on the occasion of their father's sradh. His statement would not have bound his brothers, if they were not interested in the property as alleged by Plaintiffs."

In the result the lower Appellate Court ordered the judgment and decree of the Court of first instance to be modified and decreed the suit in part with proportionate costs and interest at 6 per cent. per annum; the Plaintiffs' title to 10 annas share of the taluk standing in Kasinath Pal's name was declared in their jote right under Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and 4 and it was ordered that Plaintiffs do get khas possession of the lands of property No. 1 of the plaint in that 10 annas jote share; in other respects the lower Court's judgment and decree were confirmed.

Hence this second appeal.

* Babu Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta for the Appellants.

Babu Aswiranjan Chatterjee for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal arises out of a suit for the recovery of possession of certain properties described in the plaint and establishment of the Plaintiffs' title thereto. The facts of the case which are rather complicated are fully set out in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. The Court of first instance gave the Plaintiffs a partial decree by declaring the taluki right of Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 in four annas share of the lands described as property No. 1 in the plaint and the osat raiyat title of the Plaintiffs to eleven annas four gondas share of property No. 2 and dismissed the Plaintiffs' claim with regard to the rest of the properties in suit. On appeal the lower Appellate Court modified the decree of the first Court by declaring Plaintiffs' jote right under Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 in property No. 1 and granting them a decree for khas possession of that property and in other respects upheld the decree of the first Court. Several objections have been taken to the findings of the lower Appellate Court, some of which in our opinion do not stand scrutiny. The points that require serious consideration are, (1) That the Court of appeal below has erred in holding that the family being joint and Ram Sunder with his seven surviving sons including Kasinath living in joint mess, the property must be said to be the joint properties of all, that the Defendants must show that Kasinath had a separate fund of his own from which he acquired this property and that hence the presumption is that it was joint property of the joint Hindu family of Ram Sunder and his sons. It is argued that as the family was one governed by the Dayabhaga School of the Hindu law, such presumption ought not to have been raised and the burden cast upon the Defendants to prove that the property was purchased with the funds of Kasinath in whose name it stood. It is clear from the perusal of the judgment that the learned District Judge on an examination of the oral evidence has found that the property was purchased in the name of Kasinath as he was the ablest and most intelligent of Ram Sunder's sons, and in consideration of the fact and circumstances of the case he has demanded proof from the Defendants that the property was purchased by Kasinath out of his personal fund. The question of onus loses its importance when both parties have adduced evidence in support of their respective cases, and the Court on an examination of such evidence shifts the burden of proof from one party to the other. This must be more so at the Appellate stage. Krishna Kisore De v. Nagendra Bala (1). The finding of the learned Judge is based on a consideration of the evidence in the case and is unassailable in second appeal.

The second point is of some importance. The Court of first instance admitted in evidence two mortgage bonds Exs. A and B without objection by the Plaintiffs. These documents were executed by Kasinath and his widow, Defendant No. 4, in which it is stated that the mortgagors had not created any subordinate interest or encumbered the property in suit which they mortgaged by those deeds. The documents were proved not by any attesting witness to them, but by evidence of persons who identified the signature of the executants. The Plaintiffs claim in this suit jotes created by Kasinath under his taluki right in property No. 1. It was attempted to show by these documents that some time ago, i.e., in 1900 and 1912 Kasinath and his widow made statements to the effect that they had not created any such subordinate interest in the property. Considering the circumstances under which these statements were made, it is doubtful if these admissions are admissible in evidence under sec. 13 of the Evidence Act in favour of the persons who made them or those claiming under such persons. But in view of our decision as to the documents having been legally proved, it is not necessary to discuss the matter further.

Sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act requires a mortgage deed to be attested by two witnesses and sec. 68 of the Indian Evidence Act enacts as follows :—

"If a document is required by law to be attested, it shall not be used as evidence until one attesting witness at least has been called for the purpose of proving its execution, if there be an attesting witness alive and subject to the process of the Court and capable of giving evidence." The only exception to this imperative rule is laid down in sec. 70 of the Evidence Act to the effect that the admission of a party to an attested document of its execution by himself shall be sufficient proof of its execution as against him. In the present case there is no proof that there is no attesting witness to these documents alive or available. In the circumstances it is evident that the provisions of sec. 68 of the Evidence Act has not been complied with and the documents not legally proved. It is contended for the Appellant that the strict mode of proof prescribed in sec. 68 of the Evidence Act applies only to cases where the document is attempted to be enforced to prove the legal right or relation it creates. But in cases where such document is sought to be proved for a collateral purpose, it may be proved by the ordinary law laid down for proof of a document as a piece of evidence. We do not think we should give effect to this contention. The law as laid down in sec. 68 is imperative and does not on the face of it admit of any relaxation except in the cases provided in secs. 69, 70 and 71 of the Evidence Act. Sec. 68 of the Evidence Act is based on the English Law on the point which is thus stated in Taylor on

SHIB CHANDRA SINGHA v. GOUR CHANDRA PAL.

Evidence, 11th Ed., p 1230, sec. 1843. "The general rule which requires the production of an attesting witness, when the validity of an instrument depends upon its formal attestation, is so inexorable that it applies even to a cancelled or a burnt deed, as also to one, the execution of which is admitted by the party to it and that too, though such admission be deliberately made, either in open Court or in a subsequent agreement or even in a sworn answer to interrogatories delivered to the party in the cause. A party in a cause, who is called as a witness by his opponent cannot be required to prove the execution by himself of any instrument, to the validity of which attestation is requisite, so long as the attesting witness is capable of being called. So also the attesting witness must be called, though subsequently to the execution of the deed, he has become blind, and the Court will not dispense with his presence on account of illness, however severe. If the indisposition of the witness be of long-standing, the party, requiring his evidence, should have applied for power to examine him before a Commissioner or Examiner, and if he be taken suddenly ill, a motion must be made to postpone the trial."

Sec. 1844, p. 1231. "The rule is equally applicable, whatever be the purpose for which the instrument is produced"

This statement of the law found judicial recognition in the case of Manners v Postan (2) in which Lord Alvanley clearly laid down that the rule of law (as codified in sec. 68 of the Indian Evidence Act) is not confined to cases where the attested instrument was the ground of action but that it applied also to cases where it was used in evidence for collateral purposes. This view is also supported by the imperative and stringent wording of sec. 68 which does not permit the use of the instrument as evidence for any purpose whatsoever unless and until it is proved in strict accordance with the provisions of the section. The rigour of the English Law on which the present section is founded has been to a certain extent lessened by the proviso as contained in sec 70 of the Evidence Act. The enactment of this proviso, to our mind, clearly, indicates that the Indian Legislature intended to provide only one exception to this inflexible rule and no other.

It has been argued on the authority of Tofaluddi Peada v Mahar Ali (3) and other cases of this and other High Courts that a mortgage deed though not enforceable as such has been used as evidence and proved in the ordinary way to enforce a personal covenant to pay. In all these cases the bond was not attested in accordance with sec 59 of the Transfer of Property Act and hence it was not treated as a mortgage bond, but given effect to as a simple money bond. These cases therefore do not support the position taken by the Appellants. We have not been referred to any case where a mortgage bond properly attested, though not proved in conformity with sec. 68 of the Evidence Act, was received in evidence to prove the personal obligation created thereby. For the contrary view we have the authority of the case of Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir (4). The case was taken to the Privy Council which affirmed the decision of the Madras High Court in Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir (5). The point whether such a document could be used as a bond was negatived by the Madras High Court; it was urged by Counsel for the Appellant at the bar of the Privy Council but was presumably not pressed and there is no direct finding of the Judicial Committee on this question, though the dismissal of the suit indicates that in their Lordship's opinion there was no ground on which the Plaintiff in that case was entitled to any relief. It is further noticeable that in that case the deed in suit was admitted by the executants and the contesting Defendants in the pleadings, which fact assumes importance with reference to the next question raised before us by the Appellants.

It is further argued in this connection that the Plaintiffs were not competent to object to the admissibility of the mortgage bonds in the Court of appeal below as they were admitted without objection in the first Court. It is not clear from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court whether the documents were rejected by it suo motu or on the objection of the Respondents. We are not unmindful of the cases in which it has been laid down that where a piece of evidence not proved in the proper manner has been admitted without objection, it is not open to the opposite party to challenge it at a later stage of the litigation. But where evidence has been received without objection in direct contravention of an imperative provision of the law, the principle on which unobjected evidence is admitted, be it acquiescence, waiver or estoppel, none of which is available against a positive legislative enactment, does not apply. See Harak Chand v. Bishun Chandra (6). In the present case, the law has laid down an inflexible rule of proof which cannot be deviated from except as provided in the Act. If the Legislature had intended to modify the stringency of the English Law so far as to make an instrument not proved in accordance with the provisions of sec. 68 of the Evidence Act admissible when not objected to by the other party, one would have expected a proviso to that effect similar to sec. 70 of the Evidence Act. In our opinion, the enactment of sec. 70 lends considerable colour to the supposition that the legislature desired to add no further exception to the law laying down the special method of proof of instruments required by law to be attested. We accordingly hold that the mortgage bonds were rightly rejected by the learned Judge.

We may observe that the bond, even if admitted, would have apparently afforded evidence of the weakest character, and the Munsif who decided the case in favour of the Defendants did not even refer to them in his elaborate judgment.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court requires slight modification in that it has decreed to the Plaintiffs "khas possession of the lands of property No. 1 in their 10 annas jote share." The Plaintiffs claimed their jote right in Plots Nos. 1, 2 and 3 of property No. 1 and not in the whole of that property. The Plaintiffs' jote right will therefore be declared in, and khas possession granted to them of, Plots Nos. 1, 2 and 3 only of property No. 1. With this variation, the decree of the Court of appeal below is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

No. 1473 of 1919.

abusive language, tried together upon same evidence and disposed of by separate judgments—Appeal in one only—Decision in the other suit, if operates as res judicata in the appeal.

P. instituted a suit for damages for malicious prosecution against G., and the latter brought a counter suit for damages against P. for using abusive language to him. The question at issue common to both the suits was whether P. did use abusive language towards G. The suits were tried together upon the same evidence and were disposed of by separate judgments. G.'s suit was first dismissed and subsequently P.'s suit was decreed. G. appealed against the decree in P.'s suit but did not appeal against the decree in the suit instituted by him:

Held—That the earlier decision in the suit brought by G. not having been appealed against operated as res judicata in the other suit as regards the issue which was common to both the suits, and that issue was not further open for decision in the other suit.

This was an appeal against the decree of G. C. Sankey, Esq., Additional District Judge of Zillah Assam Valley at District

Sibsagar, dated the 24th of March 1919, affirming the decree of Moulvi Mahamed Chowdhury, Munsif of Jorhat, dated the 18th of August 1917.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment.

Babu Dwijendra Nath Mukherjee for the Appellant.

M. A. S. M. Akram for the Respondents.

This appeal arises out of a suit for damages for malicious prosecution.

It appears that the Defendant (Gangadhar) brought a criminal case under sec. 504, I. P. C., against the Plaintiffs who are the mother, wife and brother's wife respectively of one Janaki Teli against whom he had obtained a decree and taken out attachment of his homestead. The criminal case was dismissed and thereupon this suit for damages for malicious prosecution was instituted by the Plaintiffs. The Defendant (Gangadhar) also brought a suit for damages against the Plaintiffs for having used abusive language to him (the Defendant).

The suits were tried together upon the same evidence but two separate judgments were pronounced. The suit instituted by the present Defendant for damages against the Plaintiffs for having used abusive language was dismissed and then the Plaintiffs' suit for damages for malicious prosecution was decreed. The Defendant appealed to the lower Appellate Court in the suit for damages for malicious prosecution and did not appeal against the decree in the suit instituted by him. The learned District Judge held that the decision in the latter case operated as res judicata. He was also of opinion that if there was no abuse there could have been no reasonable cause and upon that finding dismissed the appeal without coming to any finding upon the question of malice.

The Defendant has appealed to this Court.

Two contentions have been raised before us. The first is that the decision in the first suit does not operate as res judicata.

There is some divergence of judicial opinion upon the question whether the decree in one of two suits tried together and governed by the same judgment, in which the same question is in controversy, operates as res judicata in the other suit if no appeal is preferred in the one suit, although an appeal is preferred in the other. [See the cases of Abdul Mand v. Joy Narain Mahato (1), Mariamnissa Bibi v. Joyrab Bibi (2) and Panchananda Velan v. Vaithinatha Sastrial (3)]. In all these cases it was held that the decision in one of the suits does not operate as res judicata in the other.

A contrary view was taken in certain decisions of the Allahabad High Court. See the cases of Chhajju v. Sheo Sahai (4) and Zaharia v. Debi (5) (where the cases on the point are collected), Dakhu Din v. Ali Aagar (6) and Lal Muhammad v. Shakuran (7).

In the case of Midnapore Zamindari Co., Ltd. v. Nityakali Das (8) (a decision of this Court), the two suits were tried separately and the evidence also appears to have been different.

It is unnecessary to discuss the other cases on the point because in the present case there were two separate judgments though the evidence was the same, and the decision in the suit brought by the Defendant Gangadhar was the earlier one. We think that in these circumstances the earlier decision in Gangadhar's suit not having been appealed against operates as res judicata in the other suit.

The question at issue which was common to both the suits was whether the Plaintiffs did use abusive language towards Gangadhar. The onus of proving the affirmative of that issue was upon Gangadhar who was the Plaintiff in the suit for damages, and the onus of proving that there was no abusive language used was upon the ladies who were the Plaintiffs in the suit for malicious prosecution. But the finding is that the Plaintiffs (the ladies) did not use any abusive language at all to the Defendant (Gangadhar) and that the case that the Plaintiffs used abusive language was false. That being so, we do not see how upon the face of that finding in the suit brought by Gangadhar the question is still open for decision in the other suit. So far as that issue is concerned, we must hold that the decision in the suit instituted by Gangadhar not having been appealed against, operated as res judicata.

The second contention is that the learned Judge was wrong in dismissing the appeal without deciding the question whether the Defendant in bringing the criminal case was actuated by malice. The Court of first instance considered that question also, but the learned Judge merely held that if there was no abuse, there could have been no reasonable cause.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court must accordingly be set aside and the case sent back to that Court in order that the question of malice may be considered and the case disposed of according to law.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 155—Suit for ejectment and compensation—Misuse of tenancy—Notice, validity of—Where misuse capable of remedy, notice without requiring the tenant to remedy the same, effect of—Suit, if maintainable.

Where a notice under sec. 155 of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not require the tenant to remedy the misuse, though upon evidence it was found that it was capable of remedy, but only asked for compensation to remedy the misuse:

Held—That the notice was not valid according to the requirements of sec. 155 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the suit was not maintainable, and a claim for compensation was not sustainable.

This was an appeal preferred on the 30th of January 1920, against the decree of Babu Rajendra Lal Sadhu, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Jessore, dated the 4th of November 1919, reversing the decree of Babu Basanta Behari Mukherjee, Additional Munsif of Narail, dated the 20th of August 1918.

The facts material to this report are as follows:—

This appeal arose out of a suit brought in 1912 by the Plaintiff against the Defendants for recovery of khas possession of a certain plot of land by ejecting the Defendants therefrom and for recovery of Rs. 300 as compensation for misuse of the lands. Plaintiff's case was that the Defendants held the lands as occupancy rayats under him, that the Defendants were using Plot No. 1 of the holding for preparing bricks by making an excavation therein and also for burning bricks by making a kiln there, and thus rendered the lands unfit for the purpose of the tenancy, that the Defendants had been served with a notice under sec. 155 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but in spite of that they had been using the land as aforesaid. Plaintiff further prayed for a perpetual injunction restraining the Defendants from making excavations on the land and preparing bricks thereon. Defendant No. 1 contested the suit. The defence, inter alia, was that no notice was served, that the notice was bad in law, that the Plaintiff was neither entitled to get khas possession nor compensation.

The notice under sec. 155, Bengal Tenancy Act was in these terms:—

“ . . . Recently you prepared a brick field by digging pits on the land of dag No. 1 comprised therein and have thus rendered the land unfit for the purpose for which it is used, and the jamai right which you had, has accordingly been extinguished by your aforesaid act; you are, therefore, hereby informed that within 15 days from the date of receipt of this notice, you shall pay as damages Rs. 300 for filling up the pits on the said land and for causing depreciation of the value thereof and shall give up possession of the lands, otherwise on the expiry of the term a suit will be brought against you for getting khas possession of the said land and for damages.”

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, on the 19th September 1918, on a preliminary ground, and held as follows:—“ . . . From the notice Ex. 2, it appears that the Plaintiff in this case simply asked for the compensation for the misuse and for filling up the excavation without requiring the tenant to remedy the misuse of the land. It is admitted in the notice that the misuse is capable of remedy. It was, therefore, the duty of the Plaintiff to require the Defendants to fill up the excavation within a certain time. Plaintiff's cause of action would have arisen if the Defendants failed to comply within that time with that request. I must therefore hold that the notice is defective under sec. 155 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in not asking the Defendants to fill up the excavation. As such a suit is not to be entertained unless the notice is found to have been served in strict compliance with sec. 155 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and as the notice has been found to be defective, Plaintiff is entitled to no relief. The suit, therefore, must fail. The other issues do not require decision as the suit fails on the important law point."

On appeal by the Plaintiff, the Court of Appeal below, on the 11th January 1915, reversed the decision of the Munsif and sent back the case for trial on the merits. The following portion of the judgment of the Subordinate Judge will be found material to this report:—

" . . . The lower Court found fault with the notice as the Plaintiff did not ask the Defendant to remedy the misuse or breach holding that the Plaintiff admitted in the notice that the misuse is capable of remedy. But the notice does not shew any such admission of the Plaintiff and the admission that it would cost Rs. 300 to fill up the excavation would not be construed that the misuse is capable of remedy. It is optional with a Plaintiff to admit a misuse being capable of remedy or not and that point requires adjudication by a Court, so the mere fact that the Plaintiff did not call upon the Defendants to fill up the excavation by that notice should not stand in his way and so I find that this suit shall go back to the lower Court for a decision on the merits."

Against this order of remand, the Defendants preferred an appeal (M. A. No. 52 of 1915) to the High Court. Teunon and Newbould, JJ., dismissed the appeal on the 30th November 1917 and passed the following judgment:—

" This is an appeal against an order of remand by the Subordinate Judge of Jessore. The suit, it appears, was one brought under the provisions of sec. 155 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It was dismissed by the trial Court on the ground that the notice served under that section was defective. The defect alleged was that the notice did not require the tenant to remedy the misuse complained of. The decision of the Munsif proceeded on the ground that in the notice itself there was an admission that the misuse was in fact capable of remedy. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge took the view that in fact in the notice there was no such admission and that the Plaintiff in giving his notice proceeded on the view that the misuse was in fact incapable of remedy. We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge in the view he has taken of the notice, and that being so, it is clear that the notice was sufficient and that the Subordinate Judge's order in remanding the case for trial on the merits was a proper one. This appeal is accordingly dismissed."

After the case went back on remand from the lower Appellate Court, the Munsif tried it on the merits and found that the notice was served, and that the misuse was capable of remedy, but without deciding as to the legality of the notice, held that the question was concluded by the earlier decision of the lower Appellate Court which was affirmed by the High Court on appeal. The Munsif decreed the suit, on the 20th August 1918, allowing khas possession, and Rs. 10 as compensation. On appeal by the Defendants, the lower Appellate Court reversed the decision of the Munsif, and dismissed the suit on the 4th November 1919. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the former decision did not stand in the way of the Defendants raising the objection as to the legality of the notice as that question had not been decided previously by the lower Appellate Court or the High Court. As to the legality of the notice he held as follows :—

“Upon the evidence, I find that the misuse is capable of remedy and that when the notice was issued the Plaintiff knew it well that the misuse complained of was capable of remedy. The notice shews that the Plaintiff did not ask the Defendants to remedy the misuse though it was capable of remedy. That being the case I must hold that the notice is bad in law. The principle laid down in Kali Chandra v. Kali Kumar (1) supports the view taken by me. Accordingly I find that the notice is bad in law and the suit is not maintainable.”

Against this decision of the Subordinate Judge, the Plaintiff preferred the present second appeal to the High Court.

Dr. Judunath Kanjilal for the Appellant.—My submissions are two-fold. Firstly, I submit that the notice was previously found by the lower Appellate Court and the High Court as legal and sufficient. The judgment of the High Court is conclusive on the point. It was not competent for the lower Appellate Court after remand to re-open the said question and come to a contrary decision. It is not open to the Defendants to raise the same question again. Reads the previous judgments. Their Lordships say in that judgment that the notice was sufficient. Secondly, my submission is that the notice that was served upon the Defendants is legal and complies with the requirements of sec. 155 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the notice a demand has been made for compensation for filling up the pits. I submit that this implies a demand for remedying the misuse.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen) for the Respondents.—I submit that the contentions of the Appellant are not well-founded. The Munsif dismissed the suit in the first instance on a preliminary ground that in the notice itself there was an admission that the misuse was in fact capable of remedy, and as the notice did not require the Defendant to remedy the misuse complained of, it was defective. The Munsif did not enter into the evidence but based his decision on the ground that there was an admission in the notice. On appeal the Subordinate Judge took the view that in fact there was no such admission in the notice and hence remanded the case for trial on the merits. On appeal against this order of remand the High Court agreed with the Subordinate Judge in the view he had taken of the notice and held that the Subordinate Judge's order in remanding the case for trial on the merits was a proper one, and dismissed the appeal. The observation by their Lordships in that judgment that the notice was sufficient must be read in reference to the context. Upon the view that there was no admission in the notice, their Lordships said that the notice was sufficient, so that the suit could not be dismissed on the preliminary ground that there was an admission without deciding the question on the merits as to whether upon the evidence the misuse complained of was in fact capable of remedy. On the merits it has been found now after remand that the misuse is in fact capable of remedy. That being so, the question arises whether upon that state of things the notice served upon the Defendants is valid according to the requirements of sec. 155 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. This is a new question which was not decided in the previous appeal. The lower Appellate Court after remand was competent to decide this question and has held in favour of the Defendants.

I submit that the notice served is bad in law as it does not fulfil the requirements of sec. 155 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Under that section a suit is not maintainable unless the landlord, in the case where the misuse is capable of remedy, serves a notice requiring the tenant to remedy the same. In the notice served upon the Defendants there is no demand requiring them to remedy the misuse complained of. Hence the notice is not legal and as such the suit is not maintainable.

As to the claim for compensation my submission is that it is not sustainable inasmuch as that claim can only arise when the suit under sec. 155 is held to be maintainable. Here the notice being invalid the suit is not maintainable. Further, I may point out that no ground of appeal has been taken on the question of compensation. I submit that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal in reply.

WOODROFFE, J.—This appeal has taken some time but the point is very simple. It arises out of a suit brought by the Plaintiff against the Defendants for recovery of khas possession of certain plot of land by ejecting the Defendants therefrom and for recovery of a certain sum of money claimed by way of compensation for misuse of the land. The defence is that no notice was served and that if it was served it was invalid. The point which comes before us for decision is this: whether the decision of the High Court when it made a remand in this matter is conclusive. I am of opinion that it is not conclusive in the sense in which it has been urged before us by the Appellant to-day. The question then is, that being so and there being no bar to the decision by the Subordinate Judge, whether his decision on that particular point with regard to the notice is correct. He finds on the evidence as a question of fact that "the misuse is capable of remedy and that when the notice was issued the Plaintiff knew it well that the misuse complained of was capable of remedy." Then, after referring to the notice, he says that "the notice shows that the Plaintiff did not ask the Defendants to remedy the misuse though it was capable of remedy." Accordingly he holds that the notice was not good in law. As regards the claim for compensation there is no ground of appeal nor is it sustainable, the notice having been held to be bad.

In my opinion, the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs and in addition one gold mohur for further hearing on the 29th March 1922.*

GHOSH, J.—I agree.

H. C. S. Appeal dismissed with costs.

* On the case being mentioned by the learned Valid for the Appellant, the Appeal was again heard on 29-3-22. Their Lordships allowed additional costs to the Respondents for this hearing.

REF. No. 27 OF 1921.

TEUNON, J.	}	CHANDRA MOHAN DAS
GHOSE, J.		MANDAL and anr.,
1921,		Accused, Petitioners,
4, April.		v.
		KING-EMPEROR,
		Opposite Party.

Summary trial—Complaint disclosing facts constituting offences not triable summarily—Process, issue of, and trial for minor offence, if legal—Procedure—Jurisdiction of Magistrate.

Where the petition of complaint disclosed the commission of an offence under sec. 144, I. P. C., not triable summarily, and there was nothing in the examination of the complainant to reduce the offence to one less serious, and the accused was tried by the summary procedure and convicted under sec. 447, I. P. C.:

Held—That the case was not triable summarily, and the conviction and sentence were set aside, and a retrial under the regular procedure was directed.

This was a Reference under sec. 438, Cr. P. C., made on the 21st February 1921, by H. C. Maitland, Esq., Sessions Judge of Rangpur, recommending that the order of Babu Mohit Chandra Ghosh, Deputy Magistrate of Rangpur, Sadar, dated the 3rd November 1921, convicting the accused under sec. 447, I. P. C., and sentencing them to pay fine of Rs. 40 each, in default, three weeks' rigorous imprisonment, and directing each of them to execute a bond of Rs. 200 to keep the peace for a year, in default, to simple imprisonment for a year under sec. 106, Cr. P. C., be revised.

The facts material to this report appear from the order of the learned Sessions Judge, dated the 18th February 1921, and the letter of Reference, which are given below:—

"The Appellants have been summarily tried under sec. 147, I. P. C., convicted under that section, fined and bound down to keep the peace under sec. 106, Cr. P. C.

Two points are pressed before me. The fact is that the petition of complaint clearly discloses an offence under sec. 144, I. P. C., and that there is nothing in the complainant's examination on S. A. to reduce the offence to one less serious and that therefore the trial by the summary procedure under sec. 447 was illegal. The petition of complaint in fact asserts that seven persons entered the complainant's bari and behaved in such a manner as to shew clearly that they formed an unlawful assembly, one of them being armed with a gun. There is, further, nothing in the examination on S. A. to shew any of the allegations to be untrue. Kailash Ch. Pal v Joynuddin (1) is referred to. For the present purpose that case would appear to be essentially the same as the present case. It is true 17 or 18 persons were there referred to in the complaint, whereas here only seven are referred to, and it might be said that making allowance for such exaggeration as complainants frequently indulge in there might be a doubt whether so many as five persons took part in the occurrence. There is, however, nothing to indicate exaggeration in this case. The complainant has throughout said there were seven persons and most of his witnesses supported him at this trial on this point.

It appears to me therefore that I am bound by the authority to which I have referred to make a reference in the case.

The next point is that the order under sec. 106, Cr. P. C., is improper, there being no express finding of facts justifying such an order, and this conviction being only under sec. 447, I. P. C., which does not of itself import a breach of the peace. Here Baidya, Nath Majumdar v. Nibaran

CHANDRA MOHAN DAS MANDAL v. KING-EMPEROR.

Ch. Gope (2) is relied on, and here again the Magistrate's order appears to be in conflict with the law as laid down in that authority.

For these reasons I submit this case to the High Court with the suggestion that the conviction on summary trial and the order under sec. 106, Cr. P. C. be set aside.

I should like to add a reference to the case of Abdul Ali v. King-Emperor (3) according to which such a finding as is required by the authority last cited might be dispensed with where the evidence is so clear that without such a finding a superior Court such as a Court of revision should be satisfied that the offence committed does involve a breach of the peace. In the present case, it would appear that in so far as it is found that there is such evidence it must also the more clearly be found that the summary trial was inappropriate."

Holding as above, the learned Sessions Judge made the Reference to the High Court as follows:—

"Under sec 438, Cr. P. C. I herewith transmit the record of the case noted in the margin, to be laid before the High Court, with the following report."

1. A brief analysis of the case.

The two accused, one of them armed with a gun, and five other persons are alleged to have entered the complainant's house and behaved in a highly menacing manner. He went inside a hut and shouted. Then neighbours came and the assailants went away. Summonses were issued under sec 417, I. P. C. only and the accused were tried summarily under that section, convicted and bound down under sec. 106, Cr. P. C.

2. The order complained for revision.

(2) I. L. R. 30 Cal. 93 (1903).

(3) 20 C. W. N. 197 (1915).

The summons under sec. 447 rather than under sec. 144, I. P. C., and the summary trial and conviction under the former section, and also the order under sec. 106, Cr. P. C.

3. In what particular portion of that order the Court making the Reference considers an error on a point of law to exist.

The summonses under sec 417 and summary trial under that section when the complaint clearly discloses an offence not summarily triable appear illegal and also probably the order under sec. 106, Cr. P. C.

4. The grounds upon which in the opinion of the Court the order should be revised

The grounds are set forth in full in the order-sheet Kailash Ch. Pal v Jagnuddin (1) is relied on.

The explanation of the lower Court is submitted herewith "

Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen for the accused.

No one opposed the Reference.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is a Reference made by the learned Sessions Judge of Rangpur under the provisions of sec. 438, Cr. P. C. As is pointed out by the learned Judge, the complaint discloses or alleges the commission of an offence, in the case of at least one of the accused, punishable under sec 144, I. P. C. There is nothing, it is further pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge, to indicate that in so far as the number of persons was concerned the case was in any way exaggerated. It follows that the case now before us was not triable summarily.

We must therefore set aside the conviction and sentence against which this Reference has been made and direct that the two accused before us be now retried under the regular procedure. The retrial will take place in the Court of a Magistrate other than the Magistrate in whose Court the conviction now set aside was had, such Magistrate to be nominated by the District Magistrate.

The fine, if paid, will now be refunded.

Hindu law—Mitakshara—Mortgage of ancestral property, when binds descendants in absence of necessity and consent—"Antecedent debt," what is—Mortgage "illegally" effected, if may support subsequent sale, as for "antecedent debt,"—"Pious obligation" to pay, if arises in father's life-time.

The antecedent debt for which in the absence of justifying necessity a Mitakshara Hindu can mortgage ancestral property without the consent, express or implied, of his descendants who are his co-parceners in the property must be quite distinct from the debt incurred in the mortgage in fact as well as in time. It must, as laid down in SAHU RAM CHANDRA v. BHUP SINGH (1), be incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate.

JOGI DAS v. GANGA RAM (4) referred to

(4) 21 O. W. N. 957 (P. C.) (1917).

A mortgage of ancestral property effected by the ancestor without necessity and without such consent and not for an antecedent debt in the above sense cannot, on the principle of "antecedent debt," form the consideration for a sale of such property subsequent to the mortgage.

The doctrine of "pious obligation" cannot be invoked in the life-time of the father of the person sought to be charged.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court, Allahabad, dated the 11th March 1919, which varied a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Meerut, dated the 31st March 1916

The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by three grandsons of Amar Singh to recover possession of property transferred by him in 1907. In 1904 Amar Singh who was the karta of the joint family executed a usufructuary mortgage of the property in suit for Rs. 8,000 in favour of Chet Ram and Himmat, and in 1907 he sold his equity of redemption to the mortgagees for Rs. 13,500. Rs. 8,000, part of the sale proceeds, was retained by the mortgagees in satisfaction of their mortgage and the balance Rs. 5,500 was paid over to Amar Singh.

Amar Singh died in 1909, and in 1915 the Plaintiffs instituted this suit and urged that the said mortgage and sale were not binding on the family.

They impleaded their fathers as pro forma Defendants.

The suit came before the Subordinate Judge of Meerut who found that the sum of Rs. 8,000 was an antecedent debt for which Amar Singh could make a binding alienation of the joint family property. In regard to the Rs. 5,500 he decided that there was no proof that it had been borrowed for immoral purposes, nor to meet any valid legal necessity, and he held that the "sons cannot, unless the money was obtained for illegal or immoral purposes, set it aside without refunding the amount of the purchase money as the purchase money would be a debt which on account of their pious duty as Hindu sons they would be liable to pay." In the event he decreed the claim in respect of a 11/27th share of the property sold, the Plaintiffs to recover possession of such share on payment within three months of the sum of Rs. 5,500 to the Defendant vendees.

From this decree the Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court of Allahabad

The learned Judges of the High Court (Rafique and Lindsay, JJ.) were of opinion that :—

(1) The mortgage of 1904 could not be considered to be an antecedent debt, and they say :—

"In appeal to this Court it is contended on behalf of the Plaintiffs that in view of the pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) the mortgage of 1904 does not fall within the definition of an antecedent debt.

It is apparent that the obligation incurred by a father which would be binding upon his sons must have two attributes, namely, first that it must have been incurred antecedently to the transaction in suit, and secondly it must have been incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate. In the present case the sum of Rs. 8,000 was borrowed by Amar Singh on the security of the joint estate. There is nothing to show that the money was advanced to him on his personal credit. In fact on the contrary it appears that the mortgage was a usufructuary mortgage under which Amar Singh the mortgagor incurred no personal liability. Applying, therefore, the test laid down in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1), we find that the mortgage of 1904 cannot be considered to be an antecedent debt as defined in the said case. The point was again considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Jogi Das v. Ganga Ram (4), where Lord Haldane interpreted the judgment in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) as follows :— 'In that case it was laid down in effect that joint property could not be alienated as against co-sharers by way of mortgage or otherwise, except for necessity, or for payment of an actual antecedent debt, quite distinct from the debt incurred in the mortgage itself, and that in consequence the transaction in that case could not stand, and it was added that the mere circumstance of a pious obligation does not validate the mortgage.' A similar point arose in the case of Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad (6) decided by a Bench of this Court to which one of us was a party. It was held in that case 'that the mortgage in suit having been ostensibly created in order to pay off two prior mortgages, that is, debts which had been incurred prima facie on the security of the joint family property, would not in view of the decision in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) be one created to pay off antecedent debts ' "

(2) That the doctrine of pious obligation did not operate as against the grandsons in the life-time of their father.

"The pious obligation to pay the debts of Amar Singh lies upon his sons and not upon his grandsons. . . . We therefore find that there is no pious obligation on the Plaintiffs to pay the sum of Rs. 5,500 before recovering the property "

Messrs DeGruyther, K C and S Hyam for the Appellants—I accept the principle laid down in Sahu Ram Chandra v Bhup Singh (1) and the sale as such cannot stand but the sons are not entitled to recover the property without paying the father's debt. It has been decided that a creditor can bring to sale the whole ancestral property it is immaterial who are the actual owners or whether sons or grandsons are interested in it.

Vyavastha (Chandrika (S. C. Sirkar) (1878), Vol I, pp 238-240

Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Proshad Singh (12).

There is no evidence that the debt was contracted for immoral purposes; and where a debt is contracted by a father for satisfying his own antecedent debt he binds the shares of sons and grandsons even though the transaction is not for the benefit of the family.

Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1) was only intended to exclude cases in which the alienation unpeached was made as security for the debt alleged as antecedent, and merely decided that a debt practically contemporaneous with an alienation was not antecedent. The Courts in India have so interpreted this decision.—

Narain Prasad v Sarnam Singh (5) and Jogi Das v Ganga Ram (4).

Further, in equity the grandsons who must be presumed to have got the benefit of the transaction cannot set it aside without refunding the money obtained.

CHET RAM v. RAM SINGH.

Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Proshad Singh (12).

The High Court have said there was no debt because the mortgage was usufructuary.

This view is erroneous because although there is no personal debt for interest yet there is an obligation to repay in order to recover the property and in this respect the Rs. 8,000 and the Rs. 5,500 stand on the same footing.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Dubé for the Respondents.—This case is concluded by Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1).

It must be shown that the transaction put forward as antecedent is really and entirely dissociated with the mortgage or sale. There could be no pious obligation on the grandsons to meet the debt when their father is still alive.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal from a decree, dated the 11th March 1919, of the High Court of Judicature at Allahabad, which varied a decree, dated the 31st March 1916.

The suit was brought on the 24th July 1915, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Meerut. The Plaintiffs were minors and sued through their guardian, Ram Singh.

No pedigree need be given. It is sufficient to bear in mind that Amar Singh succeeded on the death of his father, Nawal Singh, to a half of Nawal's property. This half, thus ancestral family property, was, at the date of the mortgage and sale after mentioned, the joint family property of Amar, of his two sons, Bharat and Kehar, and of Ram, son of Bharat, and Mahabir and Gajraj, the two sons of Kehar. This ancestral joint undivided estate was thus owned by two sons and three grandsons. The two sons as well as the three grandsons, the Plaintiffs, were all alive at the date of the mortgage and sale after mentioned, and they are still alive. Amar, the grandfather, died in 1909.

On 23rd March 1901, Amar executed a mortgage over this family property for Rs. 8,000. It is a fact beyond dispute that Amar, whom the Subordinate Judge finds to have been a man of extravagant habits, not leading a moral life and addicted to drink, incurred this debt for his own personal purposes. It was, with the doubtful exception of Rs. 1,000 to be presently referred to, neither incurred nor used for family purposes or necessity, nor was it an antecedent debt. It was scheduled upon the mortgage as "Received in cash at the village before registration, Rs. 1,000. Cash at the time of registration, Rs. 7,000." (As to the Rs. 1,000, the High Court has allowed it with certain interest as a good charge, and the Respondents do not present any cross-appeal. The item may accordingly be dismissed from further consideration).

In short, Amar treated the property as his own and violated the well-known rule of the Mitakshara, under which, as clearly laid down in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1), joint family property "cannot be the subject of a gift, sale or mortgage by one co-parcener except with the consent, express or implied, of all the other co-parceners. Any deed of gift, sale or mortgage granted by one co-parcener on his own account of or over the joint family property is invalid, the estate is wholly unaffected by it, and it stands entirely free of it." This law has been, in substance, repeated again and again. It is in entire accord with the ancient texts. It was accepted law long prior to Sahu Ram Chandra's case (1)—a convenient instance being Lord Watson's judgment in Madhoo Parshad v. Mehrban Singh (2), and it has been followed by the cases after referred to.

The exception to this rule is where the consideration for the transaction is an antecedent debt of the vendor or mortgagor. And the judgment of Sir John Stanley on this part of the law in Chandra-deo Singh v. Mala Prasad (3) and expressly affirmed by this Board in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (1), appears to this Board exactly to cover the present case.

Before passing from the mortgage, however, their Lordships desire to note that it was, by its terms, a usufructuary mortgage, and was for the period of ten years running from its date—that is, from 1907-1917. It is stipulated that, possession and occupation being given to the mortgagee—

"The profits of the mortgaged land will be equal to the interest of the amount of mortgage until redemption of the mortgage.

Whenever, after the expiry of ten years, I, the executant shall have paid the entire amount of mortgage in a lump sum to the mortgagee, I shall get the property mortgaged by me redeemed. I shall not have power to the redemption of the mortgage before the expiry of ten years."

Apparently, however, the profuse scale of the father's personal expenditure continued, and he was again willing to put, or attempt to put, in jeopardy the joint family property. Notwithstanding the ten years' provision of the usufructuary mortgage, he (Amar Singh) within three years from its date—namely, on the 16th July 1907—sold his equity of redemption in the property to the mortgagees for Rs. 13,500. In the specification of the consideration he "allowed credit" to the vendees for the Rs. 8,000 obtained from the mortgage, and the balance was put down "Received in cash at the time of the registration."

Beyond all question with regard to this latter sum, here was a sale in flat defiance of the law. For what is not pretended to be any family purpose or necessity, he had improperly and illegally sold the family property, and such a sale cannot stand.

This case is singularly clear because it is not affected by other considerations such as the property having been publicly sold: there are no rights of execution-creditors or auction-purchasers to be considered.

But an argument was submitted, supported by the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, to the effect that although by the rules of the Mitakshara law a mortgage is at its date an invalid deed in so far as purporting to encumber the joint family property, yet when it purports to become the consideration for a sale it then becomes a just and a legal consideration on the principle of "antecedent debt." The family property could not be affected by such an invalid mortgage, but it could be sold next year or next day to the mortgagee for an "antecedent" debt—namely, the mortgage debt itself! Thus by turning the "antecedent debt" simply into a debt "antecedent" to the sale, the whole doctrine of antecedent debt is reduced ad absurdum, the principle of the Mitakshara law is circumvented, and the rights of the junior members of a Hindu family are no longer protected but can be easily destroyed. Their Lordships cannot hold that this is in accordance with law. The views of the Board have been expressed quite recently in Sahu Ram Chandra's case (1) and in Jogi Das (4) about to be referred to.

As to the matter of the antecedency of debts, it is clear beyond question that the antecedency is antecedency to the mortgage itself. And it is more than that—it is disconnection with the mortgage in fact as well as in time. In no other way can the law of Indian joint family property protect itself against being undermined.

These sentences from Sahu Ram Chandra's case (1) may be quoted as particularly applicable to the circumstances of this appeal.

"In their Lordships' opinion these expressions, which have been the subject of so much difference of legal opinion, do not give any countenance to the idea that the joint family estate can be effectively sold or charged in such a manner as to bind the issue of the father, except where the sale or charge has been made in order to discharge an obligation not only antecedently incurred, but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate. The exception being allowed, as in the state of the authorities it must be, it appears to their Lordships to apply, and to apply only, to the case where the father's debts have been incurred irrespective of the credit obtainable from immovable assets which do not personally belong to him, but are joint family property. In their view of the rights of a father and his creditors, if the principle were extended further, then the exception would be made so wide as in effect to extinguish the sound and wholesome principle itself, namely, that no manager, guardian or trustee can be entitled for his own purposes to dispose of the estate which is under his charge."

The law thus laid down was followed in Narain Prasad v. Sarnam Singh (5). Further, to employ the résumé made by the learned Judges of the High Court—

"The point was again considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Jogi Das v. Ganqa Ram (4) where Lord Haldane interpreted the judgment in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhun Singh (1) as follows—"In that case it was laid down in effect that joint property could not be alienated as against co-sharers by way of mortgage or otherwise, except for necessity, or for payment of an actual antecedent debt, quite distinct from the debt incurred in the mortgage itself, and that in consequence the transaction in that case could not stand, and it was added that the mere circumstance of a pious obligation does not validate the mortgage."

This body of law is rightly followed and applied by the High Court, and their Lordships fully approve of the judgment delivered.

A separate and protracted argument was laid before the Board to the effect that the Respondents, the grandsons of Amar Singh, are not entitled to have their property without payment against his invalid proceedings by reason of "pious obligation." It is sufficient to say that no such doctrine can be invoked in the circumstances of the present case. In Sahu Ram Chandra's case (1) a similar appeal to the "pious obligation" doctrine was made during the father's life-time, and the point was thus dealt with:—

While, the father, however, remains in life, the attempt to affect the sons' and grandsons' shares in the property in respect merely of their pious obligation to pay off their father's debts, and not in respect of the debt having been truly incurred for the interest of the estate itself, which they with their father jointly own, must fail, and the simplest of all reasons may be assigned for this—namely, that before the father's death he may pay off the debt, or after his death there may be ample personal estate belonging to the father himself out of which the debt may be discharged. In short, responsibility to meet the father's debts is one thing, and the validity of a mortgage over the joint estate is quite another thing."

In the present case the doctrine is invoked against grandsons and in the lifetime of sons.

Nothing more need be said. The invocation of the doctrine entirely fails.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be refused with costs.

PRAMATHA NATH
ROY, Appellant,

v.

THE HON. WILLIAM ARTHUR LEE,
Respondent.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 12—Judgment of Judge on Original Side, appeal from—Delay on the part of Appellant in having the order drawn up—Whether entire time taken in obtaining the order to be deducted—Practice, not amounting to a Rule of Court.

In determining what is the requisite time referred to in sec 12 of the Limitation Act, the conduct of the Appellant must be considered. No period can be regarded as requisite under the Act which need not have elapsed if the Appellant had taken reasonable and proper steps to obtain the order appealed against.

The decision in BANI MADHUB MITTER v MATUNGINI DASSI (1) does not support the proposition that in determining what period is to be deducted in any case, the time actually consumed in obtaining the decree is to be regarded.

On the question whether this was the practice, the Judicial Committee on being referred to a well-known book on practice observed that it did not appear to be laid down in terms so plain and unhesitating that their Lordships could rely upon it for the purpose of saying that it had become established as the equivalent of a Rule of Court.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Calcutta in its Appellate Jurisdiction, dated the 29th January 1919, dismissing an appeal from the same Court in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, dated the 26th July 1918.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was instituted by the Respondent as Plaintiff for the recovery of rather more than Rs. 27,000.

Owing to the Defendant's failure to give inspection of documents his defence was struck out, and on the 14th February 1918, the suit was decided ex parte (Greaves, J), in favour of the Plaintiff for the amount claimed.

On the 23rd March 1918 upon the application of the Defendant an order was made that the ex parte decree be set aside and the suit restored for hearing provided the Defendant gave security to the satisfaction of the Registrar for Rs. 27,000 and paid the Plaintiffs costs on or before the 10th April 1918.

The period within which such security should be furnished was extended from time to time until the 10th May 1918.

(1) I. L. R. 13 Cal. 104 (F. B.) (1886).

PRAMATHA NATH ROY v. THE HON. WILLIAM ARTHUR LEE.

On the 1st July 1918 an application was made by the Defendant for an order directing the Registrar to accept the security offered, and directing the ex parte decree to be set aside.

On the 26th July 1918 the application was heard by Greaves, J., and refused as time barred.

Against this order of the 26th July 1918 the Appellant filed a memorandum of appeal on the 30th August 1918, and the appeal was heard by Sanderson, C. J. and Chitty, J. and dismissed on the 29th January 1919 on the ground that it was barred by limitation under Art. 151 of the 1st Schedule to the Limitation Act (IX of 1908).

In their judgments the learned Judges stated that the Appellant claimed the benefit of sec. 12 (2) of the Limitation Act which provides that in computing the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the order appealed from should be excluded. They held, however, that he was not entitled to claim any time under that provision inasmuch as he had not presented a copy of the order with his memorandum of appeal but had obtained leave to file it without a copy of the order, and also because he did not apply for a copy of the order until the 9th of September 1918. They disallowed a contention of the Appellant that, as the Respondent had applied on the 5th or 6th of August 1918 to have the order drawn up, and as the draft of the order had been served on the Appellant on the 7th August and approved by him on the 16th August, and signed by the master on the 28th August, and filed on September 3rd by the Respondent, he was entitled to deduct that time. They saw no cause for granting an extension of time for the appeal for which the Appellant had also asked.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Macaskie for the Appellant contended that the appeal was within time. Sec. 12 (2) of the Limitation Act provides for the exclusion of time occupied in obtaining a copy of the decree.

The Appellant was not competent to apply to have the order drawn up for four days. (Chap. XVI, r. 27, Rules and Orders of the Supreme Court).

He was actually unable for one reason or another to obtain a copy of the order until the 3rd September. The period between 7th August and 3rd September must therefore be excluded.

This is an invariable Rule of practice in Calcutta and is supported by judicial authority.

THEIR LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD BUCKMASTER—The Appellant in this case is the Defendant in a suit which the Respondent instituted by a plaint filed on the 24th June 1916. The various stages in the litigation are set out in detail in the judgment of the Chief Justice in the Appeal Court at Calcutta*, and it is unnecessary that they should be repeated. Among these there was a decree made on the 14th February 1918, decreeing in favour of the Respondent and against the Appellant the sum of Rs. 27,443. Application made by the Appellant to Mr. Justice Greaves to set that decree aside was refused on the 26th July 1918. The Appellant desired to appeal from that refusal, and he produced his memorandum of appeal before the Court on the 30th August of that year, on the eve of the Court rising for the vacation.

By r. 3 of Chap XXXII of the Rules of the High Court of 1914, it is provided that every memorandum of appeal shall be accompanied by a copy of the decree or order appealed from, and with this rule the Appellant did not comply. The memorandum of appeal was, however, admitted without the order, subject to all objections that might be raised on the hearing which took place on the 29th of January 1919. It was then decided by the High Court that the appeal was out of time, and it is from that judgment that the present appeal has been brought. That the notice of appeal was out of time, in fact, is beyond dispute, for the period of appeal is twenty days from the date of the decree or order which it is sought to impeach and that period expired on the 15th August 1918. But there is a provision contained in sec. 12, sub-sec 2, of the Limitation Act of 1908, which provides that in computing the time for appeal there shall be excluded the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree. The Appellant's contention is that the time "requisite" within the meaning of that sub-section is the time which, in the circumstances of the case, is actually occupied in obtaining the decree, and that, so regarded, the time that ought to be deducted here is more than sufficient to rectify the delay.

The facts with regard to that matter are these—After the order had been made on the 26th July no steps were immediately taken by the Plaintiff to have the order drawn up, but after the lapse of four days it was competent to the Defendant to apply for that purpose. Th four days elapsed and nothing was done. On the 6th August application was made by the Plaintiff to have the order drawn up, and on the 7th August the draft of the order was sent to the Appellant. The order was simplicity itself, but the Appellant only returned the draft on the 16th August. On the 28th August it was signed, and on the 3rd September it was filed by the Plaintiff.

Now the learned Judges in the Appeal Court have held that in determining what is the requisite time referred to in sec 1 of the Limitation Act the conduct of the Appellant must be considered, and their Lordships think that in so determining they have rightly regarded the statutory provision. In their Lordships' opinion no period can be regarded as requisite under the Act which need not have elapsed if the Appellant had taken reasonable and proper steps to obtain the order. In the present case he took none, and the periods between the 30th July and the 6th August, and again between the 7th August and the 16th August, which were within the Appellant's control, are sufficiently great to prevent the Appellant saying that the time that did elapse must have elapsed even if he had acted with reasonable promptitude.

It is then urged that there is an authority, decided in 1886, which has been the origin of a practice undeviatingly followed by the Courts in Calcutta in the interpretation of the statute, and that practice said to be that in determining what is the time requisite which may be deducted you are, in all cases, to look at the time that has actually elapsed in obtaining the order. Their Lordships are unable to see how this decision, Bani Madhub Mitter v

PRAMATHA NATH ROY v. THE HON. WILLIAM ARTHUR LEE.

Matungini Dassi (1), can have been so misunderstood. In that case judgment was pronounced on the 17th July 1883, and the decree was signed on the 23rd July, so that only six days elapsed between the pronouncing of the judgment and the signing of the decree. It would be impossible for anybody to suggest that that was an unreasonable time. Again, the application for the copy was made on the 3rd August, and it was obtained on the 11th August; another eight days elapsed there for which the Appellant need not be held responsible. All that that case decided was that those two periods of time, one of which was prompt and effective and the other of which the Appellant might not have been able to control, ought to be deducted from the length of time between the decree and the lodging of the memorandum. It certainly does not support the proposition that in determining what period is to be deducted in any case the time actually consumed in obtaining the decree is to be regarded. Their Lordships have been referred to a well-known book on practice which, it is said, shows that that is the practice, notwithstanding the limited character of the judgment, but even there it is impossible to find this practice laid down in terms so plain and so unhesitating that their Lordships could rely upon that authority for the purpose of saying that it has become established as the equivalent of a Rule of Court.

Their Lordships think that the Appellant here is wrong, for the reason stated, which they regard as forming the foundation of the judgment appealed from.

For these reasons their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE

No. 86 OF 1920.

MOOKERJEE, J.

Judgment,

GAJENDRA NATH DEY, Appellant,

v.

MOULVI ASHRAF

HOSSAIN, Respondent

Lease of wakf property for ten years by mutwalli, with a covenant for perpetual renewal for similar periods, validity of—Lessee holding over after expiry of such lease, status of—Acquisition of the status of perpetual tenant at a fixed rent to the detriment of wakf estate—Adverse possession against a religious endowment—Tenant holding over under a covenant for renewal but without actual renewal of lease, when in the same position as if the lease had been renewed.

A mutwalli granted a lease of some wakf property for ten years with a covenant for perpetual renewal, after the expiry of the term, for additional terms of ten years at a time. After the expiry of the term the tenant held over but no fresh lease was executed, and when the land came to be acquired by Government, the lessee claimed that, by virtue of the covenant for perpetual renewal, he must be deemed to hold under a permanent lease at a fixed rent, so that the landlord was not entitled to anything beyond the capitalised value of the rent:

Held—That under the Mahomedan law the lease for a term of ten years was prima facie in excess of the authority of the mutwalli and was liable to be annulled as unlawful, unless established to be for the benefit of the wakf which had not been done in this case.

That when in pursuance of an agreement to transfer property, the intended transferee has taken possession, though the requisite legal documents had not been executed, the position is the same as if the documents had been executed, subject to the all important proviso that specific performance can be obtained between the parties to the agreement, in the same Court and at the same time as the subsequent legal question falls to be determined.

But no Court of equity will grant specific performance where a trustee has entered into a contract for a lease which is in excess of his power, or has entered into a covenant for renewal which is ultra vires. In the present case, as the covenant for renewal could not be specifically enforced, the lessee on the expiry of the lease, held over, under sec 116 of the Transfer of Property Act read with sec. 106, as a tenant from month to month.

This was an appeal preferred on the 1st of May 1920, against the decree of S. C. Banerjee, Esq., President in the Court of Calcutta Improvement Tribunal, Calcutta, dated the 24th of January 1920.

The facts of the case out of which the present appeal arose are as follows:—One Rakhal Chandra in 1880 took a lease of some wakf land for ten years from the mutwalli and executed a kabulyat, in which was embodied a covenant for the renewal of the lease for a period of ten years after the expiration of the term granted by the lease, and which also contained a stipulation that if the land should be acquired by the Government the lessor alone would get the compensation for the land and the lessee would take the compensation for the brick-built structure. The lease was renewed in 1891 by the same mutwalli, and in 1901 by his successor-in-office, on substantially the same terms. The term of the last lease expired in 1911, and though the tenant continued in occupation, no fresh lease was granted up to the time when the land was notified for acquisition by Government. When the land was acquired the lessor claimed the entire compensation for the land under the terms of the lease and the lessee contended that, by virtue of the covenant for perpetual renewal, he must be deemed to hold under a permanent lease at a fixed rent, so that the landlord was not entitled to anything beyond the capitalised value of the rent. The President of the Improvement Tribunal held that the lease was not operative as a permanent lease of the wakf land and that, at the date of the acquisition, the lessee had no higher status than that of a tenant from month to month and that he did not by lapse of time acquire the status of a permanent tenant at a fixed rent to the detriment of the wakf estate. The lessee thereupon preferred the present appeal to the High Court.

MOOKERJEE, J —This appeal is directed against the decision of the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal in a case for apportionment of compensation in respect of the land acquired for the Calcutta Improvement Trust under a declaration published on the 27th March 1918. The rival claimants are the lessor and the lessee of the disputed property. The President has decided that the lessor is entitled to the entire compensation money awarded for the land. The lessee has consequently appealed to this Court.

The President has found that the land in question was valid wakf and that the lessor was the mutwalli. No serious attempt has been made in this Court to controvert this conclusion. The evidence shows that the rents and profits have been for many years appropriated to defray the expense of a mosque, and the property is described throughout as wakf in all the relevant documents. The case must consequently be decided on the footing that the land acquired was a valid wakf.

On the 14th April 1880, Rakhal Chandra De, the father of the present lessee, who had already been a tenant in occupation on a rent of Rs. 22 monthly, took a lease of the land from Abdul Ali mutwalli and executed a kabuliyat in his favour. A premium of Rs. 50 was paid, the rent was fixed at Rs. 23 monthly, and the tenancy, it was provided, would last for a term of ten years from the 12th April 1880 to the 12th April 1890. The kabuliyat embodied a covenant for the renewal of the lease for a period of ten years after the expiration of the term granted by the lease, and stated expressly that if the land should be acquired by the Government the lessor alone would get the compensation for the land and the lessee would take the compensation for the brick-built structure. The term of the lease expired and the lessee held over. On the 27th January 1891, Abdul Ali mutwalli, the landlord, again granted a lease to Rakhal Chandra De, on a rental of Rs. 23 a month and for a term of ten years from the 13th January 1891 to the 13th January 1901. The patta reproduced the provision of the earlier lease for distribution of compensation money in the event of acquisition, and further contained a covenant that on the expiry of the term a fresh settlement would be made at a proportionate rent. The term expired and the tenant again held over. On the 9th March 1901, a fresh patta was granted by mutwalli Ashraf Hossain (who had meanwhile succeeded to the office) to Rakhal Chandra De on a monthly rent of Rs. 23 and for a term of ten years from the 14th March 1901 to the 14th March 1911. The patta stated that if it should be necessary for the Government to acquire the land, the lessor would take the compensation for the land in accordance with the rules, while the lessee alone would get the compensation paid for the building. There was further a covenant that the lessee would be entitled, on the expiry of the term, to get fresh pattas for ten years at a time on a rent of Rs. 23 monthly and thus remain in possession with heirs in succession. The term of this lease expired on the 14th March 1911 and though the tenant continued in occupation, no fresh lease had been granted up to the time of the acquisition. The lessor now claims the entire compensation under the terms of the lease; the lessee, on the other hand, contends that by virtue of the covenant for perpetual renewal, he must be deemed to hold under a permanent lease at a fixed rent, so that the landlord is not entitled to anything beyond the capitalised value of the rent. In reply, the lessor urges that if the legal effect of the covenant for renewal be to transform the lease into a perpetual grant at a fixed rent, the lease does not bind the wakf estate because created by the mutwalli in excess of his authority. The President has held that the lease is not operative as a permanent lease of the wakf estate and that, at the date of the acquisition, the lessee had no higher status than that of a tenant from month to month. He has further held that the lessee did not by lapse of time acquire the status of a perpetual tenant at a fixed rent to the detriment of the wakf estate.

It is well settled that a mutwalli should not lease wakf property, if it be agricultural, for a term exceeding three years, and, if non-agricultural for a term exceeding one year, unless he is expressly authorised by the deed of wakf to do so, or, where he has no such authority, unless he has obtained the leave of the Court to do so Tyabji (Mahomedan Law, sec. 502) states that where the wakf property consists of a house dedicated to the poor or other charitable object the mutwalli may validly grant a lease of it for a year, and where it consists of lands, he may validly grant a lease for three years, provided that where the mutwalli purports to grant a lease for a longer term than a year or three years respectively, it is not void but voidable. This is in accord with the statement in Baillie (Mahomedan Law, Vol. I, p. 606): "When the Superintendent of a wakf has let a mansion appropriated for the poor for more than a year, the lease is unlawful. In the absence of any condition, the approved doctrine is that the lease of estate in land may be decreed to be lawful for three years, unless it be for the benefit of the wakf to annul them, and that with regard to leases of other property, they should be decreed to be unlawful when they exceed one year, unless it be for the benefit of the wakf to sustain them. But this varies with the change of places and times. This is approved for the fatwa." Substantially to the same effect is the statement by Sir Ronald Wilson (Anglo-Mahomedan Law, sec. 337). The original authorities collected by Ameer Ali (Mahomedan Law, Vol I) show that the limitation with regard to the duration of a lease, imposed by the earlier jurists in respect of wakf property, has been gradually modified, and the rule now stands in a much more elastic form than when it was first enunciated.

In the Fatawai Kazikha which is one of the earlier authorities, it is stated in substance that "where the wakf has made no provision in the document of wakf (about the grant of leases in respect of the wakf property) the mutwalli has a discretion to do what is proper and to the advantage of the poor (in other words, the beneficiaries), subject to the condition that he should not lease a house for a longer term than one year, for a long lease is apt to give rise to the idea that the lessee is the owner. And he may not give a longer lease of land than is necessary for purpose of cultivation. Should the wakf have imposed a condition that the land shall not be leased for more than one year, and people are not willing to take such a short lease, and it is to the advantage of the beneficiaries to lease the property for a longer period, the Kyyum (the mutwalli) cannot act contrary to the condition in the wakf and give a longer lease, unless he submits the matter before the kazi who can sanction a longer lease on the ground that it is to the advantage of the wakf, for the kazi is the supervisor over (the interests of) the poor, the absent and deceased persons."

"And should the wakf have provided in the document of wakf that the mutwalli shall not grant a lease for more than a year unless it is for the advantage of the poor (the beneficiaries), in which case he (the mutwalli) may do so himself (i.e., of his own authority) if he considers it expedient, and it does not require being taken to the Court of the kazi, for the wakf has (already) given him the power."

"In case the mutwalli has created a lease for five years, Sheikh Abdul Kassim of Balkh has declared that it would not be valid over a year, unless some need has arisen for expediting the rent; but says the jurist Abu Baker Mahommed-bil-al-Fazl that he does not consider such a lease should be held to be void, but the Hakim (Judge) should take note of it, and if it is to the injury of the wakf he should cancel it."

"Abu'l Hassan alias Sugdi has expressed the same view. And it is stated from the jurist Abu Lais that where the wakif had imposed no condition against a lease being granted for more than a year he permitted it to be given for three years, irrespective of the question whether the property was house or land. It is reported from Imam Abu Hais Bokhari that he permitted the lease of land for three years. But there is a difference of opinion regarding (the effect of) a lease for more than three years; the majority of the jurists of Balkh have held that such a lease is not valid, whilst others have declared that it is to be submitted to the kazi, so that he may cancel it, this doctrine the jurist Abu Lais has adopted."

In the Durr-ul-Mukhtar, the rule is given in a more compendious form. "Any condition imposed by the wakf regarding the leasing of wakf property must be followed, and the Kyyum (mutwalli) cannot act contrary to it, but the kazi may, for to him appertains the supervision over the interests of the poor, the absent and deceased people. So, where the wakf has left indeterminate the period for which a wakf property may be leased, some (jurists) have said, the Kyyum has a general discretion as to the length of the term, whilst others have said, the limit should be one year in all cases. And the fatwa is with regard to a year for (the lease of) houses and three years in respect of land, unless expediency is opposed to this, and expediency varies according to time and locality."

The author of the Radd-ul-Mukhtar in commenting on the above passage makes an important statement on the authority of the Fatawal Kari-ul-Hedaya: "When the repairs of the wakf premises cannot be effected without letting (some portion of) it, the matter must be placed before the Judge who can direct the grant of a lease long enough for that purpose."

GAJENDRA NATH DEY v. MOULVI ASHRAF HOSSAIN.

The view thus indicated was adopted by this Court in Sujat Ali v. Zumeerooddeen (1), where a lease in perpetuity at a fixed rent, granted by a mutwalli in respect of wakf property, was declared void, even on the supposition that the office of the mutwalli was hereditary, and the contrary view adopted in Dalrymple v. Khoondekar (2) was pronounced to be unsupported by any authority and unsound in principle.

In the case before us, each of the three successive leases for a term of ten years was prima facie in excess of the authority of the mutwalli and was liable to be annulled as unlawful, unless established to be for the benefit of the wakf which has not been done in this case. The contention that the lease granted on the 9th March 1901 for a term of ten years with a perpetual covenant for renewal should be interpreted as a permanent lease at a fixed rent and should be deemed operative against the wakf is manifestly untenable. The lease has not in fact been renewed; but the lessee invokes the aid of Walsh v. Lonsdale (3) and urges that this is immaterial for, in equity, he is precisely in the same position as if the lease had been renewed. This argument is fallacious. No doubt, it is well-settled, as the result of a long series of decisions in this Court, that when in pursuance of an agreement to transfer property, the intended transferee has taken possession, though the requisite legal documents had not been executed and registered, the position is the same as if the documents had been executed, subject to the all important proviso that specific performance can be obtained between the parties to the agreement, in the same Court and at the same time as the subsequent legal question falls to be determined. We need not here emphasise the circumstance that specific performance could not be obtained before the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal; cf. Foster v. Reeves (4) and Angel v. Jay (5). Apart from this, reference may be made to the decision in Shyam Kishore v. Dinesh Chandra (6), which reviews the earlier decisions from Bibi Jawahir Kumari v. Chhaterput Singh (7). As was pointed out in Haripada v. Nirod Krishna (8), the result of these cases may be reached either by the application of the doctrine of part performance enunciated in Maddison v. Alderson (9), which was followed by the Judicial Committee in Mahommed Musa v. Aghore Kumar (10), or by the application of the rule in Walsh v. Lonsdale (3). The doctrine of part performance is clearly of no avail to the Appellant. For, assuming with Baggallay, L. J., Alderson v. Maddison (11), that mere retention of possession is not in itself sufficient to constitute part performance, though the contrary view has been sometimes favoured, Lanyon v. Martin (12), and assuming further that special circumstances must be established to show that it is necessarily referable to an agreement for a lease or contract for renewal, Dowell v. Dew (13), such contract for renewal must be enforceable in a Court of equity. Nor is the rule in Walsh v. Lonsdale (3) of greater efficacy to the Appellant, unless the contract for renewal is valid and operative. For, though on the assumption made in Secretary of State v. Forbes (14), Lani Mia v. Mahomed Yaseen (15), Secretary of State v. Digamber (16) and Secretary of State v. Siba Prosad (17), the position of a lessee, who has always been ready and willing to accept a renewal on proper terms, is the same in equity, as if a proper lease has been granted, it is essential that the covenant for renewal should be such as may be specifically enforced. In the case before us, the lessor was not competent to grant a lease of this description. It cannot be disputed that no Court of equity will grant specific performance where a trustee has entered into a contract for a lease which is in excess of his power or has entered into a covenant for renewal which is ultra vires. In Harnett v. Yeilding (18), Lord Redesdale, L. C., said that the party who comes into equity for a specific performance, must show that in seeking the performance, he does not call upon the other party to do an act which he is not lawfully competent to do, for if he does, a consequence is produced that quite passes by the object of the Court in exercising the jurisdiction, which is to do more complete justice, if a party is compelled to do an act which he is not lawfully authorised to do, he is exposed to a new action for damages at the suit of the person injured by such act. To the same effect is the decision of the House of Lords in Byrne v. Acton (19), where it was held that a tenant for life, who had agreed to grant a lease for thirty-one years, in excess of his power which was limited to the grant of leases for twenty years or three lives, was bound to grant such a lease as was warranted by the power. Again, in Bellringer v. Belgrave (20), Knight Bruce, V. C., referred to Mortlock v. Buller (21) and Ord v. Noel (22) and ruled that the Court would not interfere for the purpose of performance of a covenant for renewal such as would enable or assist parties to commit a breach of trust. This view has been repeatedly followed in this Court, see, for instance, Baikuntha v. Sibdas (23), Sarbesh Chandra v. Kshetrapal (24), Moti Das v. Madhusudhan (25), Narayan v. Akshoy (26), Mahommed Esmat v. Nanda Dulal (27) and Khulna Loan Company v. Jahir Goldar (28). The conclusion follows that in this case the covenant for renewal could not be specifically enforced. Consequently, when upon the expiry of the lease, granted on the 9th March 1901, the lessee held over, the lease was, under sec. 116 of the Transfer of Property Act, read with sec. 106, renewed from month to month. Trailakhya v. Sarat (29), Manilal v. Nandlal (30), see also Clayton v. Blakey (31).

As a last resort, the Appellant has contended that as he always professed to hold as a permanent lessee, he acquired such status by adverse possession for twelve years from the date of the last lease. This contention is clearly opposed to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Vidya

Varuthi v. Valusami (32), which shows that where the manager of a religious endowment had granted a permanent lease in excess of his authority, the possession of the lessee was not adverse to the endowment during the life of the head who granted the lease. The case before us has no analogy to the decision of the House of Lords in Magdalen College v. Attorney-General (33), which was applied in Attorney-General v. Davey (34), it rather falls within the rule recognised by the House of Lords in Magdalen Hospital v. Knotts (35), namely, that if any rent has been reserved and received, however small, the legal relation of a tenancy from year to year has been created, and the statute of limitations cannot have run. We hold accordingly that the President has correctly concluded that at the time of the acquisition, the lessee was a tenant from month to month and that his claim to appropriate what is in substance the corpus of the wakf estate has no legal foundation.

The result is that the decree of the lower Court is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at one hundred rupees. The costs will be paid by the Receiver out of the estate in his hands.

Abatement of rent, in respect of leased out land of which tenant got no possession—Limitation—Acquiescence—Presumption

A tenant is entitled to abatement of rent in respect of leased out land of which he did not obtain possession.

Although the question of limitation does not arise in connection with the plea of abatement, the question of acquiescence and the presumption arising from such acquiescence may arise.

RAM NARAIN CHAKRABARTY v. POOLIN BEHARI LALL SINGH (1) referred to.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Narendra Nath Lahiri, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah Bakergunj, dated the 20th of August 1919, affirming the decree of Babu Upendra Lal Das Gupta, Munsif, 3rd Court at Perojpur, dated the 24th of June 1918.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit for rent. The defence was that the Defendant was dispossessed of three out of seven villages which form the subject-matter of the tenancy and that therefore there should be suspension of rent.

The Courts below have found that the Defendants failed to prove any dispossession and have disallowed the plea of suspension of rent.

The Defendant has appealed to this Court.

The learned Subordinate Judge observes as follows :—"The two pottas by which the two tenancies were created no doubt show that lands of seven mauzas were let out. Defendant also files some dakhilas to show that they were granted by the landlord for seven mauzas. But in the settlement khewats one under-tenancy in Baishari, and one under-tenancy in Uttarkul and two under-tenancies in Iluhar had not been recorded under the tenancies in arrears. The settlement authorities refused to record these under-tenancies under the Defendant's tenancies notwithstanding the prayer on Defendant's behalf."

The mere fact that the settlement authorities did not record the under-tenancies as being included in the Defendant's tenancies cannot affect the right of the latter if as a matter of fact they formed the subject-matter of the lease.

Then again, the learned Subordinate Judge says : "In order to entitle the Defendant to suspension of rent, she must first prove that she was in possession and secondly that the Plaintiff had dispossessed her."

So far as the question of possession and dispossession is concerned, it must be taken now after the findings of the Courts below that the Defendant had never been in possession nor had been dispossessed. If, however, all the seven mauzas were included in the lease as the pottas and dakhilas go to show, there does not appear to be any sufficient reason why the Defendant should not be entitled to claim abatement of rent in respect of the mauzas of which she did not obtain possession.

It is contended by the learned Pleader for the Respondent that it is not a fact that the seven mauzas in their entirety were let out to the Defendant, though portions thereof might have been let out, that only three mauzas out of the seven claimed by the Defendant were let out in their entirety, that in any case the Plaintiff was not in possession of any land covered by the lease to the Defendant and that the Plaintiff himself (or through his tenants) was in possession of other lands in his own right, which were not covered by the lease.

The questions, therefore, for determination are whether the three mauzas in question in their entirety were let out to the Defendant. If not, whether any lands of the said mauzas were so let out; and if so, whether the Plaintiff himself, or through his tenants, was in possession of such lands; in other words, whether the Plaintiff was in possession of any land let out to the Defendant. These questions do not appear to have been gone into by either of the Courts below.

It appears from the record that the leases were granted so far back as 1260, i.e., more than 60 years before the suit; and although the question of limitation does not arise in connection with the plea of abatement, the question of acquiescence and the presumption arising from such acquiescence may arise [see the case of Ram Nardin Chakrabarty v. Poolin Behari Lall Singh (1)].

It is contended, however, by the learned Pleader for the Appellant that even if such a presumption could be drawn from the fact of acquiescence for a long period, no such presumption can arise in the present case because the landlord has been all along granting dakhilas for rent, in which all the seven mauzas are expressly mentioned and this has continued up to the year 1311 which was within 12 years of the suit, and that in these circumstances, it was open to the Defendant to maintain a suit for recovery of possession of those mauzas on the strength of the acknowledgment in the dakhilas, even assuming that the Defendant had never been in possession before. These matters have not been considered by the Court below and in fact, neither of the Courts below has even referred to the fact that the leases were granted so far back as 1260.

We think, in these circumstances, that the case should go back to the lower Appellate Court in order that the Court may consider all the questions mentioned above and dispose of the case according to law.

Costs will abide the result

v.

RABBANI MONDAL

and ors., Accused,

Opposite Party

NEWBOULD, J.

Compounding of offences—Hurt caused to one person, and wrongful confinement of the same and another—Complaint by one of them—Charges framed under sec. 323, I. P. C., in respect of hurt to the complainant, and under sec. 342, for wrongful confinement of both—Compromise by complainant only on appeal—Legality of acquittal of offence committed against the other—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 345.

When several persons are hurt or wrongfully confined, each of them can compound only the offences committed against himself, and not those committed against the others.

Where a complaint was lodged by one of the persons confined, and charges were framed, under sec. 323, I. P. C., of hurt caused to him, and also under sec. 342, of wrongful confinement of himself and the Petitioner, a witness in the case, and the accused were convicted and appealed, and on the appeal, the complainant alone compounded the offences charged.

Held—That the Petitioner, not having been a party to the compromise, the acquittal, so far as it related to an offence committed against him, was illegal, and that the appeal must be re-heard on the merits in respect of such offence only.

This was a Rule against an order of the District Magistrate of Jessore (Mr C. Sell), dated the 26th day of June 1922, acquitting, on appeal, under sec. 345, Cr P C, the Opposite Party who were convicted under secs. 323 and 342, I. P. C. and sentenced to suffer two months' rigorous imprisonment under the former section, and four months' rigorous imprisonment under the latter section (sentences to run concurrently) by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Bongaon (Babu Surendra Nath Banerjee), on the 25th May 1922.

The Opposite Party, Rabbani Mondal, was the tehsildar of the Alampore Zemindari Syndicate Company at their Nahatta cutchery in Bongaon, in the District of Jessore. Rabbani was dismissed in January 1922, and directed to make over charge to the naib, Harinath Bose. On the 20th instant, Harinath, accompanied by the Petitioner, Shib Chandra Chakravarty, went to the cutchery and took possession: and the next day he sent for

Rabbani to hand over charge. Rabbani, it was alleged, went to the cutchery with a body of men, assaulted Harinath and turned him out, and thereafter kept him and the Petitioner confined in the house of a neighbour till they were released by the police. Harinath filed a complaint on the 27th instant, and Rabbani and two others were summoned. The case was then transferred to Babu Surendra Nath Banerjee for trial. The Petitioner was examined as a witness in the case. Two charges were framed against the accused: (i) under sec. 323, I P C., for hurt caused to Harinath; and (ii) under sec. 342 for wrongful confinement of Harinath and the Petitioner. The Magistrate convicted the accused, on the 25th May, of both the charges, and sentenced them under each section. They appealed to the District Magistrate, and on the appeal, a joint petition, signed by Harinath and the accused, was filed, whereupon the Court, after considering the application on the merits, accepted it and acquitted them. The Petitioner then obtained the present Rule to set aside the order of acquittal, so far as his interest was concerned. The Rule was first heard by Walmsley and Pearson, JJ and judgment reserved, but their Lordships directed the case to be placed before Newbould and Suhrawardy, JJ. for a re-hearing.

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal (with Babus Manmatha Nath Mukerjee, Upendra Kumar Roy and Lalit Mohan Sanyal) for the Petitioner.—The offence under sec. 342, I. P. C., committed against the Petitioner could be compounded only by him under sec. 345, Criminal Procedure Code. The complaint filed by Harinath was on behalf of both, and could be compounded by both, but not by Harinath alone. The complainant is not a party under sec. 423 of the Code.

Mr. Monnier (with Babu Sarat Chandra Mukerjee) for the Opposite Party — The wrongful confinement of two persons amounts to two offences, see I P C., sec. 71, Illust. (b); and each can file a separate complaint. The present complaint was, on the face of it, made by Harinath on his own behalf. The Petitioner was a witness at the trial. The position of the complainant and a witness is different under the Code. The prosecutor in a criminal case is, in theory, the Crown, and a private prosecutor, though he represents the Crown, pro tanto, has, as a general rule, no control over the prosecution. Queen v. Madhub Chunder Giri (1), Stephen Hist. Crim. Law, Ed. 1883, Vol. I, p. 496.

But sec. 495 allows him to conduct the prosecution, and a distinct status is given him by secs. 252, 259 and 250 (3). He is a party to the trial, see sec. 526 (3) (8). The power of withdrawing prosecutions is conferred on a prosecutor under sec. 240, the Advocate-General under sec. 333, and certain public prosecutors under sec. 494. A similar power is given to the complainant in cases falling under secs. 240 and 248. The Petitioner, on the other hand, was a witness, and not a party. If a complainant has no no general control over the prosecution, neither has one who is not a party. No section of the Code confers power on an outsider to withdraw a case. In fact the Code does not allow any outsider to intervene in any proceeding thereunder, except in one case, viz., under sec. 145 (5). The Petitioner, could not, therefore, compound the offence against himself at the trial. As to the position on appeal, sec. 423 relates only to the hearing of an appeal on the merits. The complainant is not a party for such purpose, but the section does not affect his power to compound which he derives from his status as a party at the trial. A person not a party to the prosecution, who had no locus standi at the trial, has none on the appeal. He could not compound an offence committed against himself on the trial, on a complaint instituted by another person, and cannot do so on the appeal. Sec. 345 gives the right to compound to all persons injured, but does not prescribe the mode of its exercise. It does not give the Petitioner power to compound any offence against himself on the complaint of another person injured. The right must be exercised according to the general scheme of the Code, that is, by filing a complaint of his own, when he acquires the powers of a complainant. Harinath compounded only the offences committed against himself: his petition of compromise relates only to such offences, and not to the wrongful confinement of the Petitioner. The District Magistrate in this case acquitted the accused only with respect to the offences against the complainant, and his order is legal. His order does not bar a fresh complaint by the Petitioner.

The charge, no doubt, mentions wrongful confinement of both persons, but the Magistrate had to frame it with respect to the whole occurrence, and to include all offences committed on the occasion. The fact of the charge being so framed does not give the Petitioner a locus standi which he has not otherwise under the Code. It would make no difference if the offence against the Petitioner was put in a separate head of charge in obedience to sec. 233.

Three persons who are the Opposite Parties before us were tried by Babu Surendra Nath Banerjee, Magistrate, 2nd Class, at Bongaon, who framed charges against them for having committed offences punishable under secs. 323 and 342, I. P. C. In the first charge they were alleged to have caused hurt to one Harinath Bose, and in the second charge they were alleged to have wrongfully confined Harinath Bose and Shib Chandra Chakravarty. They were convicted on both these charges, and they appealed to the District Magistrate. At the hearing of the appeal an application was made by Harinath Bose to compound the case under sec. 345, Cr. P. C. The District Magistrate allowed the compromise, and acquitted all the Appellants under that section.

This Rule has been obtained by Shib Chandra Chakravarty on the ground that he was no party to the compromise, and that, therefore, the acquittal, so far as the offence committed against him was concerned, was illegal. We hold that this Rule must be made absolute on this ground. Though Harinath Bose was the complainant in the case, that gave him no power to compound the offences under sec. 345, Cr. P. C. Under that section the persons by whom an offence may be compounded are set out in the third column of the statement which forms part of that section. Harinath Bose could compound the offences of hurt and wrongful confinement committed against him. But the only person, who could compound the offence of wrongfully confining Shib Chandra Chakravarty, was Shib Chandra Chakravarty himself. As he was no party to the compromise, the acquittal of the accused, on this part of the charge, was illegal.

We accordingly make this Rule absolute. We set aside the order of acquittal so far as it relates to the conviction for the offence of wrongfully confining Shib Chandra Chakravarty. The appeal, so far as it relates to this offence, must be heard on the merits.

The three accused will appear before the Magistrate, and execute fresh bail bonds for their appearance when called on.

Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 145, order in favour of one party in proceedings under, if can be interfered with by subsequent proceedings, before the order is set aside by a Civil Court—Magistrate's jurisdiction to attach the subject-matter of the previous order on the ground of a bonâ fide dispute as to its possession—Government of India Act, sec. 107—High Court's jurisdiction to revise the attachment order in the second proceeding—Temporary change of character of the subject-matter of the previous order, if can nullify the effect of the said order.

In a certain proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., the Magistrate passed an order in favour of the first party. A subsequent assignee of the interest of the second party, however, began to disturb the possession of the first party with respect to a portion of the lands and in a subsequent proceeding instituted at his instance, the Magistrate held that there was evidence of a bonâ fide dispute as to actual possession at that time. He therefore attached the lands under sec. 145 (4) and drew up proceedings under sec. 145 to maintain peace:

Held—That it was clearly the duty of the Magistrate to see that the possession of the first party adjudged under the previous order, was not disturbed. That order was binding on the parties and the unsuccessful party could not be allowed to disregard it. It was not proper for the Magistrate to initiate fresh proceedings under sec. 145 for maintaining the peace. Another effect of the fresh proceedings would be to give the unsuccessful party a fresh start of limitation in order to bring a suit for recovery of possession. The result of allowing such fresh proceedings would be that the binding effect of an order under sec. 145 would be disregarded and any number of proceedings may be initiated by any disappointed party.

A temporary change in the character of the land cannot nullify the effect of the previous order passed with regard to it.

When legal proceedings are taken under the Criminal Procedure Code which amounts to an abuse of process of the Court, the High Court has ample jurisdiction to interfere and ought to interfere under sec. 107 of the Government of India Act.

This was a Rule granted on the 12th June 1922 against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Manikgunge (Mr. R. H. Hutchings), dated the 18th May 1922, instituting fresh proceedings under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., with regard to the lands in dispute.

The facts of the case are briefly as follows.—There was a proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., between the first party and the predecessor-in-interest of the principal person of the second party, which resulted in an order in favour of the first party in August 1919. The said person of the second party, after acquiring interest in a portion of the lands, began to disturb the possession of the first party which was maintained by the order of August 1919. On the application of the said second party, the Magistrate held that the eastern boundary of the lands at present in dispute was not identical with that of the lands in dispute in the former sec. 145 proceedings, that the lands at present in dispute form part of the lands adjudged under the previous sec. 145 proceedings, but that there was evidence of a bonâ fide dispute as to actual possession at the present time. He therefore ordered that, a breach of the peace being imminent, the lands should be attached under sec. 145 (4), and proceedings drawn up under sec. 145, Cr. P. C.

Against the said order the first party obtained the present Rule under sec. 107 of the Government of India Act.

Babus Manmatha Nath Mukherjee and Hira Lal Sanyal for the Petitioners.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal and Debendra Narain Bhattacharji for the Opposite Parties Nos. 1, 3, 6 to 9.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows .—

We are invited in this Rule which was obtained under sec. 107 of the Government of India Act to quash certain proceedings initiated by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Manikgunge under sec. 145, Cr. P. C.

The question in controversy lies within a very narrow compass. There was a proceeding, under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., between the first party and persons now represented by the second party which resulted in an order being made in favour of the first party on the 29th of August 1919, declaring such party to be entitled to retain possession until evicted in due course of law and forbidding all disturbance of such possession until such eviction. The principal person of the second party then was one U. N. Roy. The interest of U. N. Roy has now passed to one Hara Sundar Mazumdar and he is now the principal person among the second party. It appears that after Hara Sundar acquired his interest, he began to disturb the possession of the first party which was maintained by the order of the 29th of August 1919. There is no dispute as to the identity of the parties. There was a question whether the present dispute related to the same land which was the subject-matter of dispute in the proceedings mentioned before and the Magistrate deputed a Kanungoe to make a local enquiry. The result of the enquiry, shortly stated, was that the lands in the present dispute were included within the lands which formed the subject-matter of the previous dispute. The learned Magistrate thereupon made an order on the 18th May 1922 which runs as follows.—“I am satisfied from the Kanungoe’s report that the eastern boundary of the lands at present in dispute is not identical with that which was the boundary of the lands in the former sec. 145, Cr. P. C. Nevertheless the lands at present in dispute form part of the lands adjudged under the sec. 145 proceeding, but there is evidence of a bonâ fide dispute as to actual possession now. Therefore, as I consider a breach of the peace to be imminent, I hereby attach the whole of the lands included in Sheet No. 1, Purulia, under sec. 145, Cr. P. C. (4). Draw up new proceedings under sec. 145, parties to produce evidence as to possession on 6th June 1922.”

The identity of the parties and the lands being established it was clearly the duty of the Magistrate to see that the possession of the first party adjudged under the previous order was not disturbed. That order is binding on the parties and the unsuccessful party cannot be allowed to disregard it and disturb the possession of the other party without having recourse to law. It is not the proper course for the Magistrate to initiate fresh proceedings under sec. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code for maintaining the peace.

It has been contended on behalf of the Opposite Party that this Court has no jurisdiction to quash the proceedings at this stage. We are of opinion, however, that when legal proceedings are taken under the Code of Criminal Procedure which amounts to an abuse of process of the Court and the object of which is only to harass the party who has got a previous order of the Magistrate in his favour, this Court has ample jurisdiction to interfere and ought to interfere under sec. 107 of the Government of India Act. The object of the second party is quite apparent in instituting these proceedings. It is to get an order in his favour, if possible, contrary to the order which was passed in August 1919 and if not, even an adverse order, which may also be of advantage to him. If the proceedings are allowed to continue and terminate in a fresh order under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., it would affect the first party in another way. As is well-known the previous order of the 29th of August 1919 is binding upon the parties to the proceedings and a suit for recovery of possession by a person against whom that order was made can only be brought within three years of the order under Art. 47 of the Limitation Act. If the proceedings terminate in a fresh order it would be really giving the second party, assuming that the new order is made against him, a fresh start of limitation in order to bring a suit for recovery of possession. That is a proceeding which, appears to us, can hardly be justified.

It has further been argued on behalf of the Opposite Party that we should not interfere with the discretion of the Magistrate to proceed either under sec. 107, Cr.

P. C., or under sec. 145 of that Code as he thought fit, and the learned Vakil has cited a number of cases in support of his contention. It is no doubt true, if things stood alone, it was perfectly competent to the Magistrate to initiate such proceedings as he thought proper and the High Court would not interfere with his discretion in starting proceedings according to his judgment. In this case, however, it was duty of the Magistrate, as already pointed out, to maintain the first party in possession under the order passed previously under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., and not to start fresh proceedings under that section. The Magistrate has ample powers under the law to maintain peace and to see that the order made in August 1919 is obeyed. In this case, therefore, in our opinion, the Magistrate did not exercise proper judicial discretion in starting proceedings under sec. 145 afresh. The result of such a course would be that the binding effect of an order under sec. 145, Cr. P. Code, would be disregarded and any number of proceedings may be initiated by any disappointed party leading to no result whatsoever, a position which would surely be intolerable.

One other argument which was addressed on behalf of the Opposite Party is that the character of the property has been changed. This we consider does not require any serious consideration; because even assuming that part of the land was submerged and has re-appeared, there was no difficulty with regard to the identification of the lands; and the mere fact that there was temporary submergence would not nullify the effect of the previous order passed with regard to them on the 29th of August 1919.

We therefore set aside the order of the Magistrate, dated the 18th May 1922, instituting fresh proceedings under sec. 145, ARAN SARDAR c. HARA SUNDAR MAJUMDAR.

Cr. P. C., with regard to the lands in dispute. This order will not preclude the Magistrate from taking such other proceedings as he may consider necessary for the purpose of maintaining the first party in possession of the property and for the preservation of the peace.

J. N. R. Rule made absolute.

Hindu law—Trust—Debutter—Property whether given absolutely to idols or to individuals charged with their maintenance—Trust, private—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 92, scheme of management, if may be framed under—Administration suit, order in, based on particular construction of Will—Construction, if res judicata.

The question was whether the testatrix by her Will intended to make a gift of certain properties to idols or to any person or persons charged with the maintenance of the idols.

Held—That according to the true construction of the Will the properties were given absolutely to her grandson, U charged with the performance of the worship of the deities.

That no heritable shebaitship was established by the Will, U having been appointed shebait during his life-time; and that after his death, there being no express provision made for the worship, the necessary duties would have to be performed by persons properly appointed for that purpose.

That the gift in question was in effect a private trust to which the provisions of sec. 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure did not apply, and consequently a scheme for its administration was inappropriate.

A direction given in an administration suit has the effect of an order binding all parties and determines the construction of the Will to which it gives effect, so that after the lapse of time necessary for appeal it becomes final and conclusive.

PEARRETH v. MARRIOTT (1) referred to.

These were consolidated first appeals from a decree, dated the 10th January 1908, passed by a Special Divisional Bench of the High Court of Calcutta, consisting of Brett and Mookerjee, JJ.

The suit out of which these appeals arose was instituted by Purna Chandra Basak for the construction of the Will, dated 29th May 1841, of Bhaggobati Dasi, deceased and for a declaration that he was entitled to the shebaitship of certain Thakurs and also to the enjoyment of the surplus income of certain property comprised in the said Will.

The testatrix Bhaggobati Dasi who died in 1841 was the widow of Gobinda Chand Basak, a Hindu governed by the Bengal School of Hindu law.

His other wife who predeceased him was Kanakmoni Dasi and her descendants, of whom the Plaintiff was one, were referred to during the hearing as the Basak branch of the family.

The Special Division Bench (Brett and Mookerjee, JJ.), which tried the case held that the Basak branch were not heirs of Bhaggobati Dasi, that Uday Chand Basak the grandson of the testatrix was the sole shebait appointed under her Will, and that his right was personal and not heritable, that the succession of the shebaitship opened on the death of Uday Chand, and that under the Bengal School of Hindu law Radha Kanta Sett was then heir to Bhaggobati and his descendants were entitled to the shebaitship and to her property.

They further held that the testatrix disposed of all her stridhan properties by her Will and that they were in their entirety dedicated to the idols named therein.

In their opinion Joy Krishna Basak was at the date of Bhaggobati's death a lunatic and as such permanently excluded from the succession, and they made a decree accordingly and directed certain accounts to be taken, and a scheme to be framed for carrying out the trusts of the Will.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., Dunne, K. C., Ramsay and S. C. Chaudhuri for the Appellant Gopal Lal Sett and other descendants of Uday Chand.

The real question is the construction of Bhaggobati's Will. The estate passed under it either to Uday Chand, or to the idols of which Uday Chand was shebait.

In either case Uday Chand's descendants are entitled to any surplus profits.

Mayne's Hindu law, paras 437-439.

The estate cannot be in abeyance and on the death of Bhaggobati it must have vested in Uday Chand who was her next heir.

Sir George Lowndes, K. C. and Messrs. E. B. Raikes and B. Dubé for the Basak branch of the family.

This is a Basak endowment, of Basak idols, in a Basak house, and the proper persons to attend to that endowment are the Basak branch of the family. Bhaggobati was not the founder of the endowment and the Courts have decided frequently in applications during the past 50 years that a Basak should be shebait. It has never before been suggested that Uday Chand's title was heritable.

• The whole of the property belongs to the idols and a scheme should be framed for carrying out the endowment of which the Basaks are the only fit and proper persons to be trustees.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for named beneficiaries under the Will of Bhaggobati.—On the true construction of the Will there was no gift of property to the idols and no dedication of the corpus but the income was to be used for the upkeep of the idols, although that need not exhaust the income.

The personal rights of the parties have been decided by the Court in 1857 and have been covered by directions and orders of the Court ever since that date. No appeal has been lodged against that decision and the parties are now bound by it.

Mr J. M. Parikh, on behalf of Khoka, a minor and one of the Respondents, adopted the argument of Sir George Lowndes and urged that all Basaks should be represented in the framing of a scheme for the carrying out of the trusts.

Sir George Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. A. M. Dunne, K. C., replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD BUCKMASTER.—The history of the litigation of which these appeals form part, extending over a period of sixty-five years, has been carefully and minutely examined in the judgment of the learned Judges of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, from which these appeals have been brought. Their Lordships therefore do not propose to attempt a repetition of the facts, except so far only as may be necessary to explain the reasons for the opinion they have formed.

GOPAL LAL SETT v PURNA CHANDRA BASAK.

Several questions of interest and of importance have indeed been raised and argued upon these appeals, but the true construction of the Will of the testatrix, Bhaggobati Dasi, lies at the threshold of the dispute, and on the view taken by their Lordships of the true meaning of this document these larger questions do not arise.

The testatrix, who died on the 29th May 1841, was the second wife, and at her death had been for thirty years the widow, of one Gobind Chand Basak, a Hindu governed by the Bengal School of Hindu law. By him she had had three sons and two daughters. The eldest of these sons was Purn Krishna Basak, who predeceased his mother and left two children, Monmohini Dasi and Udoy Chand Basak. The second son, Joy Krishna, was found to be a person of unsound mind in 1838, but he was not a congenital lunatic. The third son, Raj Krishna, died in 1821, leaving no children. The eldest daughter, Tripura Sundari Dasi, died before her mother, leaving a son, Radha Kanta, and the second, Golap Dasi, or, as she is sometimes called, Golapmoni, survived. By the first marriage of Gobind Chand Basak there had been two sons, Radha Krishna Basak and Sri Krishna Basak, both of whom survived the widow, from them there have been numerous descendants, who will be referred to merely by way of description as the Basak Branch of the family. In truth the real quarrel in the present case lies between the two branches of the same family descending from the two wives. Bhaggobati's Will was executed on the day of her death. Some question has arisen as to the true translation of the Will. The differences do not seem vital, but in any case their Lordships accept the official translation Ex. A in the suit

No 711 of 1907. It is addressed to Udoy Chand Basak, her grandson, and contains on the face of it the following statement:—

“Reliance on the feet of Sri Sri Hariji.
Joy Gopal. Shiba Thakur's
Anandamoyi Thakuran's Gopal Lal Ji's”

This fact that it is addressed to Udoy Chand is important to bear in mind in construing the provisions of the Will, for the duties that it imposes are clearly placed on him. It relates first to certain property which is referred to as the Company's Paper standing in the name of the testatrix, and directs that out of the income “‘you’” (that is Udoy Chand) “shall perform the sheba (worship, &c.) of Sri Sri Iswar and the sheba of the ancestral Sri Sri Iswar, ‘you’ shall perform the sheba of the said Iswarjew out of the income of the ancestral garden called Iswar Gopal Lal Ji's garden, purchased in his name ‘You’ shall be the person in charge of the sheba of all the deities.” There is then introduced a separate and definite gift with regard to two houses, namely, a house at Chowringhee and a house at Pathumaghata, out of which was directed there should be performed the sheba of Sri Sri Iswarjew “as it is at present,” and that the remainder of the income should be divided between three people, namely, Monmohini, Radha Kanta, the son of Tripura, and Golapmoni, thus making provision for each one of the surviving branches of her own family except Joy Krishna, who was insane. The testatrix then refers again to the balance of the interest accruing from the Company's Paper, and directs how that is to be dealt with in connection with religious services. There is no definite gift of the residue.

The first question that arises is whether the gift is a gift to the Idols, or whether there was a gift to any other person or persons charged with the maintenance of the Idols. The Will is most obscure, but their Lordships think that there is certainly no direct gift of the whole property to the Idols, nor in the circumstances ought one to be implied. It is consequently necessary to see in what capacity and by virtue of what right the worship of the Idols is to be carried out. The person on whom the duty was cast was undoubtedly Uday Chand, and the conclusion which their Lordships have reached is, that if, as they think, there is no gift to the Idols, it is only possible to give effect to the provisions of the Will by treating it as conferring the property upon Uday Chand. The Will is addressed to him, upon him throughout all the burdens of performing different duties are cast, and this necessarily involves the ownership of the property.

Their Lordships agree with the High Court in thinking that no heritable shebaitship was established by the Will. Uday Chand was to be shebait during his life-time, and so far as the sheba of Iswar Thakurani was concerned, he was directed to perform the ceremonies "according to the existing arrangements of the sheba" in concert with his step-mother Shiba Sundari, but after his death no express provision was made for the worship, and the necessary duties will have to be performed by persons properly appointed for that purpose.

Although this has never been declared the true interpretation of the Will, it is the construction that has in effect been acted upon for a considerable period of time, for Uday Chand died on the 8th July 1842, and upon his death administration proceedings were instituted by Golap Dasi asking for the usual administration relief. It is unnecessary to pursue the whole course of this suit. Shiba Sundari was, on the 14th December 1857, appointed, jointly with the executors of Uday Chand, to take charge of the Idols, and on her death on the 14th August 1858, members of the branch of the family known as the Basak Branch were introduced into the suit, and from that time down to now, some of them have been associated with the performance of the duties.

The result of litigation and other expenses, however, has, as the Board is informed, completely exhausted the greater part of the moneys derived from the Company's Paper set apart for the worship of the Idols, and the claim has consequently been put forward for the balance of the rents from the two houses, on the ground that the whole of the property was dedicated for the worship of the gods. It is unnecessary for their Lordships to determine whether the effect of the gift in the Will which gave the income of this specially appropriated property to the three named beneficiaries without any limitation of time would be sufficient to create an absolute gift, for on the 14th December 1857, by an order made in the administration proceedings, the Court declared that out of the produce of the houses belonging to the estate of the testatrix, situate at Chowringhee and Pathuriaghata, the worship of Sri Joy Gopal should be performed, and that the surplus of the said produce should be paid as follows, namely, to the representatives of Radha Kanta Sett, deceased, one equal third part; to the representatives of Srimati Gopal Dasi, deceased, one equal third part, and to Srimati Monmohini during her life-time and to her representatives after her death the remaining one equal third part or share. This order, although it contains no express words to that effect, amounts to a clear and effective declaration by the Court as to the absolute interests taken by each of the three named beneficiaries in the Will, for the payment to the representatives of the named beneficiaries admits of no other explanation, but to this order the Basak Branch of the family were not parties. They were, however, parties to a suit instituted in 1881, upon which an order was made on the 15th March 1888, when it was directed that the sum of Rs 6,849 should be regarded as the surplus income derived from the property set apart for Sri Joy Gopal, and it was ordered that the trustees should divide and pay the same between the parties entitled in the proportions mentioned in the decree of the 14th December 1857, that is, to the representatives of the three named beneficiaries in equal shares. There has consequently been an order binding all parties, based upon the view that the property in which the three beneficiaries mentioned were interested was segregated from the rest of the estate and set apart for the upkeep of the named Idol (Sri Joy Gopal Jee), the surplus belonging to them absolutely in equal shares. This disposes of the whole matter in dispute upon appeal. The learned Judges of the High Court who carefully examined all these proceedings, thought that the question as to the absolute interests of the three named beneficiaries had never been definitely raised and decided, and that the directions already mentioned were only made pending the administration suit. But there is no such limitation in the terms of the order, and such a direction given in an administration suit has the effect of an order binding all parties and determines the construction to which it gives effect, so that after the lapse of time necessary for appeal it becomes final and conclusive [See Peareth v. Marriott (1)].

The questions raised as to whether Joy Krishna was prevented from inheriting by virtue of his lunacy, and the point decided by the High Court as to the true reading of the Dayabhaga do not arise, and their Lordships make no pronouncement upon these points. It is only necessary to add that both from the terms of the Will of Bhaggobati herself and from the information afforded by the documents, it would appear that one at least of the Idols mentioned in the Will was ancestral, but even if that were the case their Lordships agree with the High Court in thinking that there is not sufficient evidence to prove any endowment prior to her death. Their Lordships see no reason to doubt that the Court executing the duty of appointing trustees would pay due regard to the claims of that branch of the family with whom the worship was established and by whom the services performed, but they regard the gift as in effect a private trust to which the provisions of sec 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure would not apply, and consequently the establishment of a scheme for its administration, as provided by the decree of the High Court, is inappropriate.

There remains nothing but the question of costs. The Appellants have to a certain extent succeeded, but they have gained a barren victory; they have moreover taken 14 years to bring this matter before the Board since the judgment of the High Court. Their Lordships will therefore make no order as to their costs. The cross-Appellants, represented by Sir George Lowndes, have failed. Mr Parikh's client appears in the same interest. The only persons who have succeeded at all are the reprerepresentatives of the three original beneficiaries; but although the point on which they succeed was undoubtedly raised and argued in the High Court, for reasons that it is not easy to understand, the point was never clearly and definitely raised before this Board, and no complaint was made by them against the judgment of the High Court, although it was adverse upon the point. There was, however, sufficient mention of the matter in the Respondents' case to permit of its argument, and when argued no answer to it could be found. Their Lordships are not prepared in the circumstances to allow them any costs.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty (1) that the appeal No. 169 of 1919 should be allowed in part and the cross-appeal No. 170 of 1919 dismissed; (2) that the decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated the 10th day of January 1908, should be varied by (a) discharging so much thereof as directs a scheme to be submitted for carrying out the trusts created by the Will of Srimati Bhaggo-bati Dasī, deceased, (b) by declaring that according to the true construction of the said Will the whole of the property of the testatrix, with the exception of the houses at Chowringhee and Pathuriaghata, was given absolutely to her grandson Uday Chand Basak, charged with the performance of the worship of the deities mentioned in the said Will except the deity Sri Sri Iswarjew, and (c) by further declaring that it appearing that by virtue of two decrees, dated the 14th day of December 1857, and the 15th day of March 1888, the residue of the income arising from the said houses has been directed to be paid in proportions to the three named beneficiaries, Monmohini, Radha Kanta, and Golapmoni and their respective representatives, the question as to the absolute interests taken by the said beneficiaries under the said Will is res judicata between the parties to these appeals; and (3) that there should be no order as to the costs of these appeals.

Hindu law—Mitakshara—Joint family property —Claim by a member of a share and reference by all to arbitrator for partition, if effects severance in interest—Sale by co-sharer, if may be attacked by other co-sharers on the ground of want of consideration.

*It is settled law that in the case of a joint Hindu family subject to the law of the Mitakshara, a severance of estate is effected by an unequivocal declaration on the part of one of the joint holders of his intention to hold his share separately,

property, and after discussion all the joint holders signed an agreement appointing one G to partition the property agreeing to accept whatever partition he might make:

Held—That this claim and agreement were sufficient to effect a severance in interest and to prevent the share of N from passing by survivorship

That the subsequent division of the property between the co-owners which was accepted by all parties and was not alleged to be unfair could not be disturbed, and a sale by N of his share to the Plaintiff could not be set aside on the alleged ground of want of consideration at the instance of joint owners, but only (if at all) at that of the vendor's representatives, but that any proceeding for that purpose was statute barred at the date of the suit.

This was an appeal against a judgment and decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces, dated the 6th September 1917, reversing a judgment and decree of the Court of the Additional District Judge of East Berar, dated the 18th July 1916.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was instituted by the Plaintiffs as members of the family of Nain Singh for possession of the suit properties alleged by them to be their ancestral family property.

The Defendants claim title under a sale deed executed in 1902 by Nain Singh in favour of Syed Kasam. The validity of this sale was impeached by the Plaintiffs.

The District Judge held that the sale was not fictitious, that Nain Singh had not separated at the date of the sale, that the vendee had been in possession, and had enjoyed separately the profits of his vendor's share since the date of the sale and he passed a decree accordingly.

The Plaintiffs appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner (J. Mittra, A. J. C.) which set aside the decree of the lower Court and directed the Defendants to put the Plaintiffs in possession of the property in suit on payment by the Plaintiffs of the sum of Rs 5,000.

From the decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner the Defendants (the representatives of Syed Kasam) appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Mr DeGruyther, K. C. and Mr. Parikh for the Appellants.—Nain Singh was governed by the Mitakshara which in Berar is interpreted according to the Bombay School. According to the Bombay School an undivided co-parcener can sell his undivided share for value.

over the Berar Courts lean towards the decisions of the Allahabad High Court.

Ramkishore Kedar Nath v. Jainarayan Ramrachhpal (9).

The pure Mitakshara is applicable and the deed of sale was a nullity.

If there is a fixed declaration of separation by a co-parcener, it effects a separation, but it must be certain, unequivocal and intended to be operative

The evidence does not support any such intention. Moreover the argument that the agreement in 1905 effected a severance was a new case in the Judicial Commissioner's Court and the Court rightly used its discretion in refusing to admit it

There was no clear intention in the present case that separation should take place at once and this is laid down as essential in Appovier v. Rama Subba Ayyan (1) and Suraj Narain v. Ikbal Narain (10).

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

VISCOUNT CAVE.—This is an appeal by the Defendant in the suit against the decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces, reversing a decree of the Additional District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, and giving judgment for the Plaintiffs Nain Singh and the Plaintiffs, who were the issue of his brother Khannu Singh, formed at one time a joint Hindu family, resident in Berar and subject to the law of the Mitakshara as there interpreted. Before the date of the deed next mentioned, Nain Singh and the Plaintiffs had become separate in mess and residence, but not in estate

By registered sale-deed, dated the 29th September 1902, Nain Singh sold his half share of the ancestral property of the family (with some moveable property) to Syed Kasam for 20,000 rupees, of which 15,000 rupees were admitted by the vendor to have been received in advance, and the remaining 5,000 rupees were paid to him in the presence of the registering officer. No partition was then effected, but the purchaser was allowed to hold and cultivate certain parts of the property corresponding in value to a half share. On the 4th December 1905, all the members of the family signed a kararnama appointing one Ghasi Ram as arbitrator to partition the property and agreeing to accept whatever partition he might make. The arbitrator divided the property into two lists, one (representing a moiety in value) containing the property to be allotted to Nain Singh, and the other (representing the remaining moiety in value) containing the property to be allotted to the Plaintiffs. The latter list was apparently divided into three sub-lists, one for each of the Plaintiffs. These lists were handed to Nain Singh. The formal division was not at once carried out, as Nain Singh died on the 26th March 1906; but after his death the lists appear to have been acted upon by all the persons interested, as the purchaser was put into possession of the property allotted by the arbitrator to Nain Singh, and the Plaintiffs from time to time dealt with various parts of the lands contained in their lists.

On the 23rd July 1914, the Plaintiffs brought the present suit against Syed Kasam, claiming possession of the lands of which he had been so put into possession on the ground that the family had continued joint in estate down to the death of Nain Singh, and that on the death of Nain Singh's widow (which occurred on the 10th July 1910) the property had passed to them. They also alleged that the half share had been sold by Nain Singh to the Defendant "for a bogus consideration of 20,000 rupees"—an expression which has no legal signification, but which apparently meant that the consideration of 20,000 rupees had not in fact been paid.

The suit was heard by the Additional District Judge, East Berar, who dismissed it, holding that there had been an effective agreement for partition, and that the 20,000 rupees had been paid. On appeal, the Additional Judicial Commissioner held that there had been no partition, and that although 5,000 rupees, part of the purchase money, had been paid before the registering officer, the balance of 15,000 rupees had not been paid, or if paid, had been at once returned. He declined to admit the plea that the karar-nama effected a severance of the joint-tenancy on the ground that this had not been specifically pleaded. He therefore set aside the decree of the lower Court, and directed the Defendant to put the Plaintiffs in possession of the property in suit on payment by the Plaintiffs of 5,000 rupees. Against this decree the present appeal was brought. The original Appellant, Syed Kasam, has died pending the appeal, and is represented by the present Appellants.

Two points are taken on behalf of the Appellants. First, it is said that the law of the Mitakshara is to be interpreted in Berar in the same manner as in Bombay, and that according to that law as so interpreted, Nain Singh had power to sell his undivided share in the joint family property without the consent of his co-owners, and their Lordships do not doubt that this statement is correct. But to this point it was answered by the Judicial Commissioner that the sale by Nain Singh in 1902 only gave to the purchaser an equity to enforce a partition, and that such equity was displaced by the fact that the purchase money was not fully paid. In view of their Lordships' opinion on the second question, to be hereafter stated, and of the fact that the evidence on the question of the payment of 15,000 rupees was not fully brought to their notice, they do not think it necessary to deal with this point, nor do they express any opinion on the question whether, even if it was proved that part only of the purchase money was paid, the form of decree adopted by the Judicial Commissioner was appropriate to the case.

But, secondly, it is argued on behalf of the Appellants that the transactions which took place in the year 1905 effected a severance of the joint estate, and accordingly the Plaintiffs have no right to sue; and in their Lordships' opinion this argument should prevail.

It is settled law that in the case of a joint Hindu family subject to the law of the Mitakshara, a severance of estate is effected by an unequivocal declaration on the part of one of the joint holders of his intention to hold his share separately, even though no actual division takes place; and the commencement of a suit for partition has been held to be sufficient to effect a severance in interest even before decree [see Appovier v. Rama Subba Aiyar (1), Joy Narian Gira v. Grish Chunder Mytee (2), Girja Bai v. Sadashiv

(1) 11 M. T. A. 75 (1896).

SYED KASAM v. JORAWAR SINGH.

Dhundiraj (3) and Kawal Nain v. Prabhu Lal (4)].

In the present case, it was proved by the evidence of one of the Plaintiffs (Jorawar Singh) and of Ghasi Ram that Nain Singh claimed his half share of the ancestral property, and that after discussion all the joint holders signed the agreement of the 4th December 1905, appointing Ghasi Ram to partition the property and agreeing to accept whatever partition he might make; and this claim and agreement were quite sufficient to effect a severance in interest and to prevent the share of Nain Singh from passing by survivorship. It is true that the agreement was not specifically pleaded by the Defendant Syed Kasam; but he pleaded that Nain Singh was separate in estate, and relied in his written statement on the division of the property which resulted from the agreement, and then Lordships do not think that the agreement leading up to that division can be put out of account. The subsequent division of the property between the co-owners was accepted by all parties and is not said to have been unfair; and there appears to be no reason why it should be disturbed. In these circumstances the sale to Syed Kasam could not be set aside at the instance of the joint owners, but only (if at all) at that of the vendor or his representatives; and any proceedings for that purpose were statute barred before the commencement of the suit. This is sufficient to dispose of the Plaintiffs' claim.

For these reasons their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, that the decree of the Judicial Commissioner should be set aside and the decree of the District Judge restored, and that the Respondents should pay the costs in both the Courts below and the costs of the present appeal.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

Nq. 1630 of 1920.

MOOKERJEE, J. MAKARATI, Plaintiff,
CHOTZNER, J. Appellant,
1922, v.

Heard, 19, May. SARFADDIN and ors., Judgment, Defendants,
13, June. Respondents

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. s. 312, 313, 314 and 315—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, rr. 91 and 93—Auction-purchaser's right to refund of purchase-money if the sale is set aside on the ground that judgment-debtor had no saleable interest, to be enforced, if by suit or application under the Code—Right to bring a suit for refund, accrued under the Code of 1882, if extinguished by the promulgation of the Code of 1908.

The Plaintiff purchased certain immoveable property at a sale held in execution of a mortgage decree. The sale was confirmed and the sale-certificate granted on the 11th of December 1908. Being unable to obtain possession, the Plaintiff instituted the present suit, on the 16th April 1917, against several persons, among others, the mortgagees who had received the purchase-money, for recovery of possession and in the alternative, for recovery of the purchase-money. The claim for possession being negatived, the question arose whether the Plaintiff was competent to maintain the suit for the recovery of the purchase-money or whether the only remedy left to him was an application under Or 21, r. 93 read with r. 91 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908:

Held—That under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, the Plaintiff, on the 11th of December 1908, acquired a right to obtain a refund of the purchase-money either by application or by suit within the period prescribed by law in one contingency, namely, if it should be discovered that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest at all in the property sold, and that this right could not be deemed to have been extinguished by the promulgation of the Code of 1908 which came into operation on the first day of January 1909; and that accordingly the Plaintiff was competent to maintain the present suit for the recovery of his purchase-money

MUNNA SINGH v. GAJADHAR SINGH (1) followed

COLONIAL SUGAR REFINING Co. v. IRVING (28) referred to.

This was an appeal from a decision of O. M. Martin, Esq., Additional District Judge, Chittagong, dated the 10th March 1920, affirming that of Babu Sachindra Kumar Sen, Munsif, Raozan, dated the 31st August 1918.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Narendra Kumar Das for the Appellant.

Babus Birajmohan Mojumdar and Chandra Sekhar Sen for the Respondents.

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiff in a suit for recovery of possession of immoveable property purchased by him at an execution sale, or, in the alternative, for recovery of the money paid by him as purchaser at such sale. The trial Court dismissed the suit, and that decree has been affirmed by the District Judge on appeal. The facts material for the determination of the questions of law raised before us are no longer in controversy and may be briefly recited.

On the 18th September 1904, the fifth Defendant mortgaged the disputed property to the sixth and seventh Defendants to secure a loan of Rs. 100 which was made repayable on the 12th February 1905. On the 14th June 1907, the mortgagees sued the mortgagor to enforce the security. The claim was contested by the mortgagor in his written statement, but, ultimately, a decree was made by consent on the 13th November 1907. The decree was executed in due course, and at the sale which followed, the Plaintiff, a stranger to the suit, became the purchaser for a sum of Rs. 190. The sale was confirmed and the sale-certificate was granted on the 11th December 1908. Symbolical possession was thereafter delivered to the purchaser on the 28th March 1909. She was unable, however, to obtain actual possession and was thus constrained to commence the present litigation on the 16th April 1917. The claim for possession was controverted by the first Defendant, who urged that neither the fifth Defendant nor his mortgagees nor the Plaintiff ever had any title to the disputed land, and in this defence he was supported by some of the other Defendants. The Courts below have concurrently found that the fifth Defendant had no title to the land at any time, and that, consequently, the mortgage as also the execution sale based thereon had passed no title to the Plaintiff. In this view, the claim for possession put forward by the Plaintiff has been negatived. The alternative claim for recovery of the purchase-money from the sixth and seventh Defendants has been dismissed on the ground that the only remedy of the Plaintiff is by an application under Or. 21, r. 93 read with r. 91 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, and that a regular suit is not maintainable for the purpose. The Plaintiff has now appealed to this Court and has argued that the decision of the District Judge is erroneous on two grounds, namely, first, that under the Code of 1908, as under the Code of 1882, a regular suit may be maintained by an execution-purchaser to recover the purchase-money on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold, and secondly, that, if under the Code of 1908 the law be deemed to be different from what it was under the Code of 1882, the provisions of the latter Code should be applied to the present case, as they were in force on the date when his purchase became absolute under sec. 312 and sec. 314 of that Code.

(28) [1905] App. Cas. 389.

MAKAR ALI v. SARFADDIN.

For the determination of the first question, a comparison between the relevant provisions of the Codes of 1882 and 1908 is essential. Secs. 313 and 315 of the Code of 1882 were as follows:—

“313. The purchaser at any such sale may apply to the Court to set aside the sale, on the ground that the person whose property purported to be sold had no saleable interest therein, and the Court may make such order as it thinks fit:

Provided that no order to set aside a sale shall be made unless the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder have had opportunity of being heard against such order.”

perty is set aside under secs. 310A, 312 or 313,

Or when it is found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property which purported to be sold and the purchaser is for that reason deprived of it,—The purchaser shall be entitled to receive back his purchase-money (with or without interest as the Court may direct) from any person to whom the purchase-money has been paid.

The repayment of the said purchase-money and of the interest (if any) allowed by the Court, may be enforced against such person under the rules provided by this Code for the execution of a decree for money.”

Rr. 91 and 93 of Or. 21 of the Code of 1908 are as follows:—

“91 The purchaser at any such sale in execution of a decree may apply to the Court to set aside the sale, on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold.”

“93 Where a sale of immoveable property is set aside under r. 92, the purchaser shall be entitled to an order for repayment of his purchase-money, with or without interest as the Court may direct, against any person to whom it has been paid.”

It will be observed that the second and fourth paragraphs of sec. 315 are not reproduced in r. 93, while the words “shall be entitled to receive back” which occurred in the third paragraph of sec. 315 are replaced by the words “shall be entitled to an order for repayment” in r. 93. The Defendants-Respondents have contended that these changes indicate a substantial alteration in the pre-existing law.

Under the Code of 1882, it had been held that a purchaser could not only obtain repayment of his purchase-money when the sale was set aside upon his application under sec. 313, but that he might also maintain a suit against the decree-holder for recovery of his purchase-money, if it should so happen that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest whatever in the property sold. The existence of the alternative remedy by suit was inferred from the provision in the second paragraph of sec. 315 and from the use of the words "may be enforced" in the fourth paragraph of that section. The matter was elaborately examined by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Munna Singh v. Gajadhar Singh (1) where it was ruled that a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree was competent to maintain a suit against the decree-holder for recovery of his purchase-money when the judgment-debtor was found to have had no saleable interest in the property sold; the purchaser was not restricted to the special procedure in the execution department, mentioned in sec. 315. This view was followed in Kishunlal v. Muhammad Safdar Ali (2), Sidheswari v. Gossain Mayanand (3), Muhammad Najibulla v. Jaynarain (4) and Girdhar Das v. Siddheswari Prasad (5). A similar view was adopted by the Bombay High Court in Gurshidawa v. Gangaya (6). The identical principle was approved in this Court in Haridayal v. Sheikh Samsuddin (7), Nityananda v. Jagat Chandra (8) and Ram Kumar v. Ram Gour (9). The same construction was placed upon the Code by the Madras High Court in Pachayappan v. Narayana (10), Nula Kanta v. Imam Saheb (11), Mohideen v. Mahomed Mura (12) and Tirumalai Swami v. Subramanian (13). This then was the accepted interpretation of the provisions of the Code of 1882, though there might have been now and then a note of hesitation and even of dissent; Kishunlal v. Muhammad (2), Sidheswari v. Gossain (3), Muhammad v. Jaynarain (4) and Sundara Gopalan v. Venkata Varada (14). It was further held that an application under sec. 313 to set aside the sale was required to be made within sixty days from the date of the sale under Art. 172 of the second Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, Haji v. Atharaman (15). That Article, however, as pointed out in Sivarama v. Rama (16), would not apply to an application under sec. 315 for refund of the purchase-money, such an application was governed by Art. 178, which enacted that an application, for which no period of limitation was provided elsewhere in the Schedule, could be made within three years from the date when the right to apply accrued; Gurdhari v. Sital Prasad (17). On the other hand, a regular suit, instituted by the auction-purchaser under sec. 315, would be governed by Art. 120, which provided that a suit for which no period of limitation was provided elsewhere in the Schedule could be instituted within six years from the date when the right to sue accrued;

MAKAR ALI v. SARFADDIN.

Nilā Kanta v. Imam Saheb (11) and Sidheswari v. Gossain (3).

Under the Code of 1908, it has been urged before us, a substantial alteration has been effected in the law. The purchase-money cannot now be got back unless the sale is set aside; further, a suit does not lie for recovery of the purchase-money, as it did under the Code of 1882. This view has been adopted in Nannulal v. Bhagwandas (18), Parvathi v. Gobinda Swami (19), Mohideen v. Mahomed (12), Tirumalai Swami v. Subramanian (13), Subbu Ammal v. Ponnambala Reddi (20), Bhagabandas v. Allabaksh (21), Ram Sarup v. Dalpat Rai (22), Juraun Mahomed v. Mahomed Jathi (23), Manmohan v. Gopinath (24) and Prasanna Kumar v. Ibrahim Mirza (25). But it must be noted that the contrary view found favour with the Bombay High Court in Rustomji v. Vinayak (26), where without an examination of the changes introduced by the Code of 1908, it was ruled that the purchaser might now, as before, proceed by suit. It is not necessary, for our present purpose, to pronounce a final judgment upon the question of the exact extent of the alteration made in the pre-existing law by the Code of 1908. But this much is indisputable that if the law has been changed, the alteration has been of a substantial character, namely, first, the right to recover the purchase-money by a suit instituted within six years after the accrual of the right to sue has been taken away; and secondly, the purchaser is restricted to his remedy by an application under r. 91, which must be made within thirty days from the date of the sale under Art. 166 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, followed by an application under r. 93, which may be made within three years from the accrual of the right under Art. 181. This leads us on to a consideration of the second point.

For the determination of the second question, we must recall that when the execution sale took place in this case and was confirmed, the Code of 1882 was in force. The auction-purchaser, whose title accrued on the 11th December 1908, acquired on that date the right to obtain a refund of the purchase-money either by application or by suit, within the prescribed period, in one contingency, namely, if it should be discovered that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest at all in the property sold. This right cannot be deemed to have been extinguished by the promulgation of the Code of 1908, which came into operation on the first day of January 1909. This view is supported by the decision in Sidheswari v. Gossain (3), Mohideen v. Mahomed Mura (12), Parvathi Ammal v. Gobinda Swami Pillai (19), Tirumalai Swami v. Subramanian (13) and Alaji v. Vengu (27), where the provisions of the Code of 1882 were applied, though the suit had been instituted after the commencement of the Code of 1908; it may be observed parenthetically that, apparently through an oversight, in Muhammad v. Jaynarain (4), the provisions of the Code of 1882 were assumed to be applicable, though the sale had been held on the 26th November 1910 in execution of a mortgage decree made in 1892. Our conclusion is clearly supported by sec. 6, cls (c) and (e) of the General Clauses Act, 1897, which provide that a repeal shall not affect any right or privilege acquired or accrued under the enactment repealed. The right of the purchaser dates from the confirmation of his purchase, and is primarily to the property, and secondarily, in the alternative and contingently, to repayment; the latter branch becomes enforceable only in consequence of the discovery that the debtor had no saleable interest and that the title which the purchaser had imagined that he had acquired had no real existence. Such an alternative and contingent right is preserved by sec. 6, cl. (c) of the General Clauses Act, 1897. Reference may in this connection be made to the lucid exposition contained in the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving (28). In that case, the creation of the High Court of Australia took away the right of appeal from the supreme Court of Queensland direct to His Majesty in Council. It was ruled that the Australian Commonwealth Judiciary Act, 1903, whereby the High Court was established, could not be interpreted as retrospective in operation, and that a right of appeal to the King in Council in a suit pending when the Act was passed and decided by the Supreme Court afterwards, was not taken away. Lord Macnaghten observed as follows:—

versy. On the one hand, it was not disputed that if the matter in question be a matter of procedure only, the petition is well-founded. On the other hand, if it be more than a matter of procedure, if it touches a right in existence at the passing of the Act, it was conceded that, in accordance with a long line of authorities extending from the time of Lord Coke to the present day, the Appellants would be entitled to succeed. The Judiciary Act is not retrospective by express enactment or by necessary intendment. And therefore the only question is, was the appeal to His Majesty in Council a right vested in the Appellants at the date of the passing of the Act, or was it a mere matter of procedure? It seems to their Lordships that the question does not admit of doubt. To deprive a suitor in a pending action of an appeal to a superior tribunal which belonged to him as of right is a very different thing from regulating procedure. In principle, their Lordships see no difference between abolishing an appeal altogether and transferring the appeal to a new tribunal. In either case, there is an interference with existing rights, contrary to the well-known general principle that statutes are not to be held to act retrospectively, unless a clear intention to that effect is manifested.”

This opinion is not opposed to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Abbott v. Minister of Lands (29), where the right in controversy was neither definite nor enforceable from its origin. The principle of the decision in Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving (28) has been repeatedly followed; Kalinga v. Narasingha (30), Salimamma v. Valli (31), Madurai Pillai v.

Muthu Chetty (32), Raja of Pittapur v. Venkata (33) and Alaji v. Vengu (27). We must further bear in mind the important circumstance that if, in the class of cases now before us, the new Code were held applicable, the remedy of the purchaser, even by way of application, might be found barred by limitation at the date of the commencement of the new Code, as actually happened in Tirumalai Swami v. Subramanian (13). In such an event, the repealing enactment cannot be given retrospective operation, so as to impose an impossible condition on pain of forfeiture of a vested right; see Munghoori v. Akel Mahammad (34), Budhu Koer v. Hafiz (35), Gopeswar v. Jiban Chandra (36) and Raja of Pittapur v. Venkata Subba Row (33). We hold accordingly that the right of the Plaintiff to maintain the present suit must be determined with reference to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, when the sale took place, and his title as execution-purchaser accrued on confirmation.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the decree of dismissal made by the District Judge set aside. A decree will be made in favour of the Plaintiff against the sixth and seventh Defendants for a sum of rupees one hundred and ninety with interest at six per cent. per annum from the 11th December 1908 to the date of realisation. The Plaintiff will have his costs in all the Courts from the sixth and seventh Defendants. The other Defendants will pay their own costs in all the Courts.

Putni Regulation (VIII of 1819, B. C.), creation of one putni over the head of a previous putni, if legal—Assignment of the right of the zemindar to receive rent from the previous putnidar, if can be treated as a putni lease as contemplated by the Regulation—Sale under the Regulation of the interest of such assignee, if legal and if it passes any interest—Sec. 14, persons entitled to question such a sale—Creation of a fresh putni co-ordinate with a putni already in existence, if gives any legal right over the previous putni—Relationship of landlord and tenant between the new and old putnidars.

A, a zamindar, granted a putni lease of the entire 16 as. of the property to D. Subsequently B having acquired an interest in one anna share of the zamindary created a putni in respect of this one anna share in favour of F, but later on sold the interest of F under Reg. VIII of 1819 and it was purchased by P, who thereafter sued D for rent of the putni to the extent of one anna share.

Held—That the idea of a putni being created over another putni is absolutely foreign to the scheme of the Putni Regulation. The putnidar is therein described as a taluqdar of the first degree and it is difficult to imagine that a tenure can be created over a taluqdar of the first degree.

That assuming that F's interest was superior to that of D, then it could not be sold by the Collector under Reg. VIII of 1819, and P acquired no interest by such sale. The whole scheme of the Putni Regulation is that the putnidar is the only person whose interest can be sold under the Regulation and not the interest of a person in the position of F by whatever name it may be called. The mere giving of the name of putni to the interest of F would not make it a putni as contemplated by the Regulation so as to bring into play all the provisions of the law.

That there can be no objection to the assignment of the right of the zamindar to receive rent from the putnidar which he is entitled to get under the putni settlement and the assignee would be entitled to recover rent from the putnidar by virtue of the assignment

14th of June 1920 against the decree of Babu Hem Chandra Bose, Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Zillah Sylhet, dated the 6th of March 1920, affirming the decree of Babu Sirish Chandra Chakravarty, Munsif, 4th Court, Hafiganj, dated the 23rd of December 1918.

The facts of the case are briefly as follows —One Abdur Rahaman was the zamindar of a certain estate. He granted a putni lease of the entire 16 as property to the predecessor of the Defendants. Subsequently one Bhuban Babu acquired an interest in one anna share of the zamindary and created a putni in respect of this one anna in favour of a lady Fatima Banu. Some time after that Bhuban Babu sold the interest of Fatima under Reg. VIII of 1819 and it was purchased by the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff brought the present suit against the Defendants for rent of the putni to the extent of one anna share. Only the Defendant No. 3 contested Plaintiff's claim and denied the relationship of landlord and tenant, and contended that the Plaintiff had acquired no interest in the property by virtue of the sale and the purchase. The lower Courts gave the Plaintiff a decree for rent and the Defendant preferred the present second appeal to the High Court.

Babu Hemendra Coomar Das for the Appellant.

Babus Surendra Nath Guha and Brojendra Nath Palit for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

B. B. GHOSE, J.—This appeal is by the Defendant No. 3 and it arises out of a suit for rent brought by the Plaintiff under the following circumstances. One Abdur Rahaman was the zamindar of a certain estate. He granted a putni lease of the entire 16 annas of the property to the predecessor of the Defendants sometime in 1881. Subsequently, one Bhuban Babu acquired an interest in one anna share of the zemindary in 1895. After acquiring this interest, he created a putni in respect of this one anna share in favour of a lady Amatul Fatima Banu. Sometime after that, Bhuban Babu sold the interest of Amatul Fatima Banu under Reg. VIII of 1819 and it was purchased by the Plaintiff. The Plaintiff has now sued the Defendants for rent of the putni to the extent of one anna share.

The Defendant No 3 alone contests the Plaintiff's claim and he denied the relationship of landlord and tenant and contends that the Plaintiff has acquired no interest in the property entitling him to recover rent from him as putnidar.

Both the Courts below have given the Plaintiff a decree for rent. The learned Subordinate Judge relies upon the case of Raj Coomar v. Probhat Chunder (1) for the proposition that it was open to Bhuban Babu to create a putni tenure over the head of the putni of the Defendants.

It is contended before us by the Appellant, first, that Bhuban Babu had no authority to create a second putni intervening between the Defendant's putni and the zemindar's interest and, secondly, that assuming that the putni lease granted in favour of Fatima Banu, the Plaintiff's predecessor, amounted to an assignment of the right of the zemindar to recover rent from the Defendants, such interest created in favour of Fatima Banu was not a putni lease as contemplated by Reg. VIII of 1819 and the sale held by the Collector under that Regulation of the interest of Fatima Banu at which the Plaintiff purchased was without jurisdiction and the Plaintiff has acquired no interest whatever by virtue of it. The Appellant points out that there are certain other cases which deal with this question and he refers to the cases of Madhusudan v. Debendra Nath (2), Nilambar v. Mir Mahasunuddin (3) and Jaharmull v. Jatindra Nath (4) and Joras Kumari v. Hanifuddin (5).

With regard to the case of Raj Coomar v. Probhat Chunder (1) on which the Subordinate Judge relies, the learned Judges who decided that case speak very guardedly about the position of a person who accepts a putni over the head of another putni. They say this:—"The creation of two putnis, one above the other, no doubt introduces confusion into the ordinary grades and nomenclature of sub-infeudation, yet, for the purpose of this suit, all we hold is that the Plaintiff's putni lease constitutes an intermediate tenure between the zemindar and the Defendants and that, therefore, the Plaintiff is entitled to demand the rent which the Defendants are bound to pay to their superior landlord."

Apart from all authority, it would appear that the idea of a putni being created over another putni is absolutely foreign to the scheme of the Putni Regulation and any one familiar with the status of a putnidar would consider this position as anomalous. In the Putni Regulation, a putnidar has been given certain rights as against the zemindar. The putnidar is described as a taluqdar of the first degree and it is difficult to imagine that a tenure can be created over a taluqdar of the first degree. There can, however, be no objection to the assignment of the right of the zemindar to receive rent from the putnidar which he is entitled to get under the putni settlement; for example, he may create an ijara or he may execute a mortgage and make over possession to the mortgagee. In such cases, the assignee of the zemindar's interest would be entitled to recover rent from the putnidar by virtue of the assignment. This position seems to have been made clear in the case of Madhusudan v. Debendra (2), where Mr. Justice Caspersz says that the name given to the assignee of the zemindar's interest to recover rent is immaterial. The case of Jaharmull v. Jatindra (4) does not really touch the question. That is a case in which the Defendant claimed a mokurari interest and the Plaintiff sued for rent as a superior lessee under a lease creating a superior title over the mokurari-dar and it will be noticed that, in that case, the learned Judges are equally guarded in their language as to the creation of a putni interest over another putni. In those cases, however, the Plaintiff could recover rent on the basis of a title derived from the zemindar as assignee of the interest of the zemindar to recover rent from the putnidar. But in the present case, the position seems to be somewhat more complicated and one of the complications contemplated in the case of Raj Coomer v. Probhat Chunder (1) has taken place. The Subordinate Judge finds that Bhuban after his purchase ignored the putni of the Defendants and granted a new putni to Fatima Banu. Therefore, the interest which was created in favour of Fatima Banu by Bhuban was on the same plane as that of the Defendants. It would appear, therefore, that Fatima Banu's interest was not superior to that of the Defendants. Then, the question comes whether, assuming that it was a superior interest, this could be sold under Reg. VIII of 1819. The Collector assumed jurisdiction for the purpose of sale under that Regulation as the lease created in favour of Fatima Banu does not mention that the interest created in her favour was an interest between the putnidar and the zemindar. The Regulation does not contemplate the sale of such an interest under its provisions and if it had been brought to the notice of the Collector that Fatima's interest was not that of an ordinary putnidar but that of one above a putnidar, the Collector surely would not have put the provisions of the Regulation in force to effect the sale as the Revenue Authorities do not recognise such a putni. The question, therefore, is, whether the Plaintiff has acquired any interest by such sale. Reference has been made on behalf of the Respondent to the case of Ramsona v. Sonamulla (6) in support of the proposition that a sale under the Regulation can only be questioned by a person entitled to do so under sec. 14 of the Regulation and that the title of the purchaser under the Regulation sale cannot be questioned collaterally. But the learned Judges in that case observed that the sale must be held with jurisdiction and the sole question in the present case is whether the Collector had jurisdiction to sell the interest of Fatima Banu under Reg. VIII of 1819. As has been contended by the learned Vakil for the Appellant, the Defendants do not come under the category of persons who could sue under sec. 14 of the Putni Regulation for setting aside the putni sale. If they had brought such a suit, the obvious answer would have been that they were not affected by the alleged sale and that they had no right to dispute it nor could any person claiming under the Defendants as durputnidar or a taluqdar of the third degree known as seputnidar have questioned the sale. If it were held that the interest of Fatima Banu was such as could be sold under Reg. VIII of 1819, serious complications would arise in the relation between the putnidar and the zemindar on the one hand and the Subordinate tenure-holders on the other. It seems to me that the whole scheme of the Putni Regulation is that the putnidar is the only person whose interest can be sold under the Regulation and not the interest of a person in the position of Fatima Banu by whatever name it may be called. The mere giving of the name of putni to the interest of Fatima would not make it a putni as contemplated by the Regulation so as to bring into play all the provisions of the law. In my opinion, therefore, the sale under Reg. VIII of 1819 at which the Plaintiff purchased was without jurisdiction and the Plaintiff has acquired no title. Then again the intention of Bhuban Babu was to grant a new putni ignoring the putni of the Defendants, as found by the Subordinate Judge, and it would appear, that the interest created in favour of Fatima Banu was co-ordinate with that of the Defendants. In that view, Fatima Banu cannot be said to have acquired any interest as against the Defendants. In my opinion the Plaintiff has no right to recover rent from the Defendants and the relationship of landlord and tenant does not exist between the parties.

The appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs in all Courts.

Indian Soldiers (Litigation) Act (IX of 1918), sec. 10—Indian soldier serving under war conditions, application by, to set aside decree in partition suit upon petition of compromise not signed by all his attorneys to whom joint power was given—Decree set aside—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 47, r. 1—Review

Where an Indian soldier serving under war conditions, before his departure from India, executed a power of attorney in favour of his four brothers, and in a partition suit a decree was passed against him during his absence upon a petition of compromise signed on his behalf by three of his brothers and the attorney of his fourth brother, and on his return, upon an application being made by him, the Court set aside the decree:

Held—That in the circumstances of the case the Court was justified in setting aside the decree either under the latter part of sec 10 of the Indian Soldiers Litigation Act or under the general powers of review contained in Or. 47, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code; a joint power having been given to the four brothers there was no power given to them to act separately, and the signing of the petition of compromise by the attorney of the fourth brother did not bind the applicant.

This was an appeal against the order of Babu J. K. Mukherjee, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Nadia, dated the 29th of March 1921.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of an application under sec 10 of the Indian Soldiers (Litigation) Act (IX of 1918), and also for a review of a decree said to have been passed by consent.

It appears that the Plaintiff-Appellant brought a suit against a certain lady for partition and that on her death six persons were substituted in her place, one of them being Pran Krishna Banerjee. Pran Krishna left India to serve in Mesopotamia in August 1918 and returned to India towards the end of October 1919. The suit was disposed of on the 28th of July 1919 upon a petition of compromise filed on behalf of all the Defendants. Pran Krishna before his departure from India executed an ammukhtearnama in favour of his four brothers, three of whom signed this petition of compromise, the name of the fourth brother having been signed by the attorney of the latter. In November 1919 the present application was made by Pran Krishna on the ground, amongst others, that the compromise had been effected without his knowledge and authority and that the suit ought not to have been proceeded with in his absence, that his interests were not properly looked after although he had left a power-of-attorney in favour of his brothers before he left India. The Court allowed the application and set aside the decree. The Plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

The order was passed not only, under sec. 10 of Act IX of 1918 but also upon an application for review. The review having been granted an appeal would lie only on the ground specified in Or. 47, i 7 (c), no other clauses of that Rule being applicable to the case. Cl. (c) would apply if the application for review was admitted after the prescribed period and without sufficient cause. Under sec. 10 of the Indian Soldiers (Litigation) Act an application can be made within three months from the date on which a soldier ceases to serve under war conditions. It is contended by the learned Pleader for the Appellant that the war conditions ceased in November 1918 and that, therefore, the application was out of time. On the other hand, it is contended on behalf of the Respondents that the war conditions in Mesopotamia have not yet ceased. However that may be, there is a certificate by the Adjutant-General that Pran Krishna served under war conditions from 25th July 1918 to 5th November 1919. The application was made on 3rd December 1919, i.e., within a short time after he ceased to serve under war conditions. Apart from the proviso (a) to sec. 10 of the Act, the Adjutant-General's certificate that Pran Krishna was serving under war conditions would be sufficient ground for admitting the application for review after the period of limitation, and we are not inclined to hold that there was any unreasonable delay in making the application after his return to his place of residence. That being so, the appeal must fail.

It is contended, however that we ought to interfere under sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. The main ground on which we are asked to do so, is that the learned Subordinate Judge was in error in holding that there was no compliance with the provisions of sec. 6 of Act

SM. HAIMABATI DEVI v. PRAN KRISHNA BANERJEE.

IX of 1918. Sec. 6 of that Act lays down : " If the Collector has certified under sec. 5, or if the Court has reason to believe, that an Indian soldier, who is a party to any proceeding pending before it, is unable to appear thereon, and if such soldier is not represented by any person duly authorized to appear, plead or act on his behalf, such Court shall suspend the proceeding, and shall give notice thereof in the prescribed manner to the prescribed authority." It is pointed out that as a matter of fact, the learned Subordinate Judge did write to the Collector of 24-Parganas, who at that time was the prescribed authority in this matter, and that the latter refused to certify and left it to the discretion of the Subordinate Judge to act in the way he thought proper. Reference was made on behalf of the Respondent to certain rules published in the Calcutta Gazette in December 1918 to show that the Adjutant-General was the prescribed authority under Act IX of 1918 in place of the Collector of the 24-Parganas who was the prescribed authority under the former Act of 1915. But the correspondence between the Subordinate Judge and the Collector took place before the rules were published; and although the suit did not terminate until July 1919 it does not appear that these rules were brought to the notice of the Subordinate Judge.

But, assuming that there was no default made in complying with the provisions of sec. 6, the Court under the latter part of sec. 10 of Act IX of 1918 may make an order setting aside a decree or order against a soldier if the interests of justice require such a course in any other case. In the present case, the ammukhtearnama executed by Pran Krishna was in favour of his four brothers. It was a joint power given to them and there was no power given to them to act separately. Admittedly the petition of compromise was not signed by all the four. It is contended on behalf of the Appellant that the fourth brother Sarat, although he did not sign the petition, took part in the deliberations and agreed to the terms of the compromise though he was not present at the time of signing the petition of compromise. But he was at Shillong at the time and the learned Subordinate Judge finds that " there is no satisfactory evidence to show that Sarat himself agreed to all the terms embodied in Ex 5 " In these circumstances, the signing of the petition of compromise by an ammukhtear of Sarat would not bind Pran Krishna.

Then, again, it appears that the pleader for Pran Krishna informed the Court by a petition in August 1918 that he had no instructions from Pran Krishna and was unable to act on his behalf. Another petition was presented on behalf of the four brothers in which they stated that the interests of Pran Krishna were not being properly looked after, that they could not properly look after his interests, and prayed that the trial of the suit might be stayed until his return. We have already stated that Pran Krishna did not return to India until October 1919. Under these circumstances, we think, that the learned Judge was justified in setting aside the decree either under the latter part of sec. 10 of the Act or, under the general powers of review contained in Or. 47, r 1, C. P. C.

The last point is whether the Court was right in setting aside the decree not only against Pran Krishna but against the other Defendants also. But where the decree or order is of such a nature that it cannot be set aside as against such a soldier only it may be set aside as against all or any of the parties against whom it is made Here it was a suit for partition including the family dwelling-house and evidently the Court below held that, in these circumstances, the entire decree should be set aside. We are unable to hold that the Court was wrong in doing so.

The learned pleader for the Petitioner endeavoured to show that the compromise was a fair one; but we have no power to go into the evidence on the point, and it is unnecessary to consider that question as the decree must be set aside, upon the grounds stated above.

The result is that the appeal must fail and is accordingly dismissed with costs; hearing-fee one gold mohur.

The Rule is discharged. We make no order as to costs in the Rule.

Let the record be sent down as soon as the decree is signed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 202—Notice upon an accused person to show cause why process should not issue against him, propriety and legality of—Locus standi of accused to appear or be represented by a lawyer before the issue of process against him.

Where the Magistrate caused notice to be served upon a person named as an accused in a petition of complaint and directed him to show cause why process should not issue against him, and on such cause being shown by a pleader on his behalf, dismissed the complaint against him:

Held—That the procedure adopted was improper and was not in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure as laid down in secs. 202 and 203.

An accused person has no locus standi to appear or to be represented by a lawyer before the issue of process against him.

BALAILAL v. PASUPATI (1) referred to and followed.

This was a Rule granted on the 3rd July 1922 against an order of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Rungpur (Mr Huq), dated the 15th May 1922, refusing to issue process against the accused under secs. 114, 379, I. P. C., an application for revision of which order was rejected by the Sessions Judge of Rungpur (Mr. S. C. Ghosh) on 9th May 1922.

The facts of the case are briefly as follows:—

On a complaint that one Mokinuddin and some others at the instigation of their zamindar Manindra Babu cut and removed some paddy, the Magistrate summoned Mokinuddin only. The complaint being ultimately dismissed on the ground that there was not sufficient evidence to identify Mokinuddin with regard to the alleged offence, the complainant desired to proceed against Manindra Babu. The Magistrate thereupon directed notice to be served upon Manindra Babu to show cause why process should not issue against him. Manindra Babu showed cause and a pleader appeared for him and filed a petition on his behalf. Thereupon the Magistrate refused to issue process against him. Against that order the complainant moved the Sessions Judge of Rungpur and then the High Court and obtained the present Rule.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This was a Rule issued by two of my learned brothers, Mr. Justice Walmsley and Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose, and obtained by the complainant calling upon the District Magistrate and on the Opposite Party to show cause why the orders complained of should not be set aside.

The facts of this case so far as they are necessary for one to state for the purpose of my judgment are these :—

The complainant made a complaint against certain persons with regard to the cutting and removal of certain paddy and the allegation was that the paddy was removed by certain barkandajes with the connivance or at the instigation of Manindra Chandra Roy Chowdhury, who was called accused No. 1. It was alleged by the complainant that one of the persons who actually cut and removed the paddy was one Mokinuddin. The Magistrate who took cognizance of this case asked for a report and on receipt of the report issued a summons against Mokinuddin only. The Sub-Deputy Magistrate, to whom the case was made over for disposal, after hearing the evidence which the complainant produced, dismissed the case against Mokinuddin on the ground, as I understand, that there was not sufficient evidence to identify Mokinuddin with regard to this alleged offence. Then the complainant desired to proceed against the accused No. 1, Manindra Chandra Roy Chowdhury, who was the zemindar of the complainant. The Sub-Deputy Magistrate then directed notice to be served upon Manindra Chandra Roy Chowdhury to show cause why process should not issue against him. Cause was shown by Manindra Chandra Roy Chowdhury. We were informed by the learned vakil, who showed cause in this Rule, that a petition was put in by Manindra Chandra Roy Chowdhury and that a learned pleader appeared for him and showed cause why process should not issue. The result was that the Sub-Deputy Magistrate came to the following conclusion, to use his own words, "I do not find any reason to issue any process against Manindra Babu." I assume that amounted to an order dismissing the complainant's complaint as against Manindra Chandra Roy Chowdhury.

Thereupon the complainant applied to the learned Sessions Judge for the purpose of setting aside the order of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, and that application was dismissed, although the learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that the procedure adopted by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, in calling upon Manindra Chandra Roy Chowdhury to show cause why he should not be proceeded against, was improper and irregular. The learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion on the facts that there was no case against the first accused and consequently he dismissed the application.

I agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the procedure adopted in this case as between the complainant and Manindra Chandra Roy Chowdhury was improper and was not in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure. My learned brother Mr. Justice Walmsley and I had to consider a case [Balailal v. Pasupati (1)], in which a similar point arose. I desire to draw the attention of the Magistrate to that case. I refer to two passages in the judgment in that case which are to be found at p. 129. They are as follows:—

“The second irregularity which is relied upon was that the learned Magistrate did not confine himself to the evidence of the complainant and the report which was made by the Police Officer, but that he allowed the accused to be represented by a learned pleader and to address him and argue the points which arose in the case and to put in a detailed statement of the points and the facts upon which the defence relied.

“To my mind this procedure is quite inconsistent with the scheme of this legislation. I do not understand how the accused person ever goes before the Magistrate until the Magistrate has made up his mind to issue process. The Magistrate is directed by the statute to enquire into the case in certain specified ways, and then having investigated the matter in one or other of the specified ways, he is to decide whether process ought to issue, and then if he thinks that process ought to issue, he should direct process to issue. Then the accused person appears, and if he has got a defence, his defence is investigated as well as the case for the prosecution. That being so, it appears to me that the learned Magistrate has not acted in this case in accordance with the procedure which is laid down by the Criminal Procedure Code.”

In this case I am of opinion that the Magistrate did not act in accordance with the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code as laid down in secs. 202 and 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and the learned Sessions Judge was quite right in saying that the procedure was improper and irregular. I hope that the judgment which we are delivering in this case and the judgment, which this Court delivered in the case of Balailal v. Pasupati (1), will be brought to the notice of Magistrates and that they will observe in this respect the plain provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure. If Magistrates do not comply with the provisions in the Code, the inevitable result is that Rules are applied for in this Court and they have to be granted because the Magistrates do not follow the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and much time is unnecessarily wasted.

In this case we do not intend to send the case back for further investigation, and we propose to discharge the Rule on the ground that the two lower Courts, that is, the learned Sessions Judge and the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, both came to the conclusion on the facts of the case that there was no ground for the complaint against the first accused; and having regard to additional matters, which have been brought to our notice at the hearing of this Rule, I am of opinion that it will be mere waste of time to direct this case to be re-tried. As far as it is possible to foresee, the result would be the same if we were to send this case to the Magistrate for re-hearing. Although we are not sending the case back to the lower Court, it must not be understood that we approve of the procedure which was adopted in this case.

The Rule is discharged.

CHOTZNER, J.—I agree.

Will in English language by a Parsi—Construction—Construction approved in English cases, if applicable—“My heirs,” meaning of—Exclusion of widow of son from inheritance in case son died childless, whether limited to son pre-deceasing the testator—Act XXI of 1865, secs. 5 and 6.

The testator, P, a Parsi, by his Will, which was written in the English language, provided inter alia that his son J should have a right of maintenance during the life-time of his wife should she survive him, and that after her death his executors should hold the residue upon trust to pay the net income thereof to his son J for and during his life-time and after his death upon trust for his widow and children absolutely in certain shares, but that in the event of J dying without leaving issue, the executors should pay out of the residue a sum of Rs. 10,000 absolutely to J's widow, and appropriate a moiety of the balance to certain charitable objects and divide the other moiety amongst P's “heirs according to the law of intestate among Parsis, but excluding the widow of J from getting any share in such distribution.” The testator's wife pre-deceased him, and J, who survived him, died childless and leaving a widow D:

Held—That the words “excluding the widow of J from getting a share in such distribution” would apply to funds coming to D as representative of J, in the event of J being included in the class of heirs to the testator.

That the testator did not intend to include J as one of his “heirs” as the term was used in the above clause of the Will.

That according to the natural meaning of the terms “excluding the widow of J from getting any share in such distribution,” such exclusion was not limited to the event of J dying in the life-time of the testator leaving his widow surviving him, the clause in question appearing to contemplate conditions which would arise after the death of the testator.

In a Will written in English, the word “heirs” would naturally include heirs at the date of the testator's death, subject always to a contrary intention being declared in a particular Will.

HOOD v MURRAY (1) referred to

But in determining whether in this case the natural meaning of the term had been displaced by the context, the rules of construction which have been applied in English cases would be of no assistance.

Karachi and died in August 1908 leaving a son Jamsedji, (to whose estate the Appellant has obtained letters of administration) and the Respondents as his heirs, his wife having pre-deceased him.

The testator left a Will, dated 21st June 1907, of which probate has been granted to the Respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

The material clauses of this Will are set out in the judgment of the Board.

Jamsedji survived the testator and died in May 1913 intestate, leaving the Appellant his widow and no children.

On the 26th February 1914 the Appellant instituted the present suit as administratrix of Jamsedji claiming to be entitled to his share of the moiety of the residuary estate bequeathed by the testator, in the events which have happened, to his "heirs."

The suit was tried by Mr. C. Fawcett, Additional Judicial Commissioner who by his decree of the 15th March 1915 dismissed it.

The Appellant appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner in its High Court Jurisdiction and her appeal was dismissed by Kincaid and Raymond, JJ., who held that the Appellant was not an heir of Pochaji and that by his Will she was precluded from taking a share on the death of Jamsedji and said:—

"The intention of the testator was that if Jamsedji died leaving a widow but no children, the widow was to get Rs. 10,000 only.

Jamsedji could not have defeated that intention by the device of making a Will in the widow's favour.

The direction of the Will would still have had to be obeyed and by that direction half Pochaji's property would have gone to his heirs, 'excluding the widow of Jamsedji from getting any share in such distribution.'

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C. and E. B. Raikes for the Appellant—The question for decision is purely one of construction of the Will, viz.—Is Jamsedji entitled to share in the residuary estate of the testator?

Cl. 8 of the Will directs that the widow is to be excluded if she comes among the testator's heirs. This was a reference to sec 5 of the Parsi Succession Act, XXI of 1865, which relates to intestate succession.

The moiety of the residue was to pass to the testator's heirs amongst whom, under sec 5, Jamsedji's widow might be included. In that event the testator directs her exclusion.

The widow is not claiming as "heir," she is claiming as legal personal representative of Jamsedji.

The fact that Jamsedji survived his father makes sec 5 of Act XXI of 1865 applicable.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Respondents—The suit has been brought by the Plaintiff not as an administratrix but as a beneficiary and heiress of Pochaji Hutchinson v National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children (4).

The persons who were to take had to be determined not at the time of the testator's death but at the time of distribution. The word "heirs" at the end of para 8 means my heirs at the death of Jamsedji.

Para 8 does not contemplate Jamsedji predeceasing the testator. The words of para. 8 "excluding Jamsedji's widow" show a clear intention to give Jamsedji's widow Rs. 10,000 and no more.

The three Judges in the lower Court have appreciated the fact that a grant of Rs 10,000 to a childless daughter-in-law is conclusive of an intention to exclude heir from any further share in the testator's estate.

You cannot apply ordinary English rules and customs to a people whose customs and habits are so different and whose intentions would be so dissimilar.

Bhagabati v. Kali Charan (2)

Mr. Upjohn, K C., in reply.

There is no specific law applicable to Parsis. The ordinary rule of justice, equity and good conscience applies.

Mancharsha Ashpandiarji v. Kamrunisa Begam (5)

There is no evidence of a different intention, and in its absence, the persons who were to take had to be ascertained at the time of the testator's death.

Hood v. Murray (1) and Wharton v. Barker (6).

There is no express exclusion of Jamsedji from the class who are to take as heirs, and, in default thereof, he is entitled to share.

There is no connection between the gift to Jamsedji's widow and the gift to Jamsedji himself.

Jamsedji having survived the testator the gift to him vested, and his widow is entitled to it not in her own right but as being entitled to Jamsedji's estate.

Reference was also made to Bullock v. Downes (7) and Ross v. Ross (8).

LORD PARMOOR — The question for decision in the appeal is the construction of the Will of N. N. Pochaji, a Parsi inhabitant of Karachi, who died there in August 1908. The testator left a Will, dated the 21st June 1907, of which probate has been granted to the Respondents Nos 1 and 2. The Appellant is the widow of a son of Pochaji, named Jamsedji, and has obtained letters of administration to his estate. She asks for a declaration that as representative of Jamsedji, she is entitled to a half of Jamsedji's four-sevenths share of the residuary estate of Pochaji under secs 3 and 6 of the Parsi Intestate Succession Act, 1865.

The action was tried by Mr. C. Fawcett, Additional Judicial Commissioner, who held that Pochaji, by the terms of his Will, intended that the Appellant should be entirely excluded from any share in the distribution, whether as heir of Jamsedji or otherwise. It is clear that the learned Judge appreciated the case put forward on behalf of the Appellant before their Lordships. He states her claim to be that, though the Will may exclude her from sharing as an heir of the testator, it does not exclude her as an heir of Jamsedji. This decision was confirmed in the Appellate Court, the Court holding that whatever might be the construction of the Will in other respects, the Appellant was excluded from claiming any share in the residuary estate of Pochaji by the clause "excluding the widow of Jamsedji from getting any share in such distribution." The general principle to be applied in the decision of the appeal is not in dispute. The rule of law is to ascertain the intention of the testator as declared by him, and apparent in the words of his Will, and to give effect to this intention so far as, and, as nearly as may be, consistent with law. In the present instance no issue of inconsistency with law arises, so that the only question is one of construction. Pochaji, a Parsi merchant at Karachi, made his Will in the English language. It is not necessary to set out the whole Will, but cls. 7 and 8 are as follows :—

"7. From and after the death of my wife my executors shall stand possessed of the residuary trust estate upon trust to spend from and out of the same a sum of rupees two thousand for the funeral expenses of my wife and for other ceremonies for one year after her death, and shall hold the residue upon trust to pay the net income thereof to my son Jamsedji, for and during his life-time and from and after his death upon trust for the widow and children of my son Jamsedji absolutely as tenants-in-common in such proportions that each male child shall get double the share of each female child, and the widow shall get the same share as a female child. Provided, however, that if any child of my son Jamsedji shall have died in his life-time leaving a child or children him surviving, then such child or children shall take the share which his or her parent would have taken of the residuary trust estate, if such parent had survived my son Jamsedji, and if more than one the males always taking twice the share of the females

"8 In the event, however, of the said son Jamsedji dying without leaving any issue how low so ever, but only leaving a widow, then my executors shall pay out of such residuary trust funds a sum of rupees ten thousand absolutely to such widow, and in such case and also in the event of the said Jamsedji dying without leaving any widow or issue how low so ever, my executors shall stand possessed of the balance of said residuary trust estate in trust to spend rupees two thousand for the funeral expenses of the said son Jamsedji and to appropriate a moiety of the balance to such charitable objects for the purpose of promoting liberal and religious education amongst the Parsi Zoroastrians of Karachi as my executors may in their discretion think fit, and divide the other moiety amongst my heirs according to the law of intestate among Parsis, but excluding the widow of Jamsedji from getting any share in such distribution."

In the event of her surviving him, Pochaji appointed his wife, Khurshedbai, sole executrix and trustee of his Will; but she pre-deceased her husband. At the death of Pochaji in 1905 he left surviving him his son Jamsedji, Dinbai, Jamsedji's wife, (who is the Appellant), two daughters, and four grandsons (who are Respondents). Jamsedji died childless in May 1913, leaving his widow Dinbai surviving him. It is contended on behalf of the Appellant that Jamsedji is one of the heirs named in the Will of the testator, being thereby entitled according to the law of intestate succession among Parsis to four-sevenths of the moiety of the estate, and that his rights are now vested in the Appellant as his administratrix, and that her rights as administratrix of the estate of Jamsedji are not affected by cl. 8 of the Will.

It will be convenient to consider, in the first place, the meaning of the words "excluding the widow of Jamsedji from getting any share in such distribution." In substance the Counsel for the Appellant suggested two limitations on these words. It was argued that the distribution was completed by the allocation of the residuary estate amongst the heirs of Pochaji, and that the words did not apply to any subsequent devolution of the property. Their Lordships are unable to accept this interpretation, and see no reason for dissenting from the opinion of the Appellate Court that they would apply to funds coming to the Appellant as representative of Jamsedji, in the event of Jamsedji being included in the class of heirs to the testator. It was further argued on behalf of the Appellant that these words were directed to exclude claims of the Appellant which might have arisen under sec. 5 of Act XXI of 1865 if Jamsedji had died in the life-time of the testator, leaving his widow surviving him. In the first place the words construed in their natural meaning contain no such limitation, and secondly, cl. 8 appears to contemplate conditions which will arise after the death of the testator, and when the provision of sec 5, Act XXI, 1865, would have ceased to be operative. In any case there is no reason why the words "excluding the widow of Jamsedji from getting any share in such distribution" should not have their natural general meaning, and to limit them to the event of Jamsedji pre-deceasing Pochaji, is to introduce a limitation not to be found in the terms of the Will. It may be true that Jamsedji might have defeated the intention of the testator by making a Will, or in some other form alienating his interest in the residuary estate. The answer to this objection is that Jamsedji did not, in fact, either make a Will or alienate his interest, and the testator may well have thought that this was an improbable contingency, and that he had sufficiently safe-guarded the interests of the other members of his family.

It is pointed out in the judgment of the Appellate Court that on this construction of the words "excluding the widow of Jamsedji from getting any share in such distribution," it is not necessary to decide whether the words "my heirs" in para. 8 of the Will include Jamsedji among the class. This issue, however, was argued at some length before their Lordships. The Will was written in English, and there is no doubt that in a Will so written the word "heirs" would naturally include heirs as at the date of the testator's death, subject always to a contrary intention being declared in a particular Will.

It is hardly necessary to re-state so clear a principle, but reference may be made to the case of Hood v. Murray (1). This was a Scotch Will, and Lord Watson states the rule as follows :—

"The rule, as I understand it, is simply this, that in cases where a testator or settlor, in order to define the persons to whom he is making a gift, employs language commonly descriptive of a class ascertainable at the time of his own death, he must prima facie, and in the absence of expressions indicating a different intention, be understood to refer to that period for the selection of the persons whom he means to favour. In my opinion, the rule has no other effect than to attribute to the words used their natural and primary meaning, unless that meaning is displaced by the context."

Accepting this principle in its fullest sense, the question in the present appeal is whether the natural primary meaning has been displaced by the context. Various cases were referred to in the argument which depend on rules of construction, adopted in the construction of Wills made in this country, and applicable to documents framed with the knowledge of the rules of construction which are afterwards applied to them. These cases are not of assistance in the construction of a Parsi Will made at Karachi. In Bhagabati Barmanya v. Kali Charan Singh (2) Lord Macnaghten, delivering the judgment, says :—

"It is no new doctrine that rules established in English Courts for construing English documents are not as such applicable to transactions between natives of this country. Rules of construction are rules designed to assist in ascertaining intention, and the applicability of many such rules depends upon the habits of thought and modes of expression prevalent among those to whose language they are applied English rules of construction have grown up side by side with a very special law of property and a very artificial system of conveyancing, and the success of those rules in giving effect to the real intention of those whose language they are used to interpret, depends not more upon their original fitness for that purpose than upon the fact that English documents of a formal kind are ordinarily framed with a knowledge of the very rules of construction which are afterwards applied to them. It is a very serious thing to use such rules in interpreting the instruments of Hindus, who view most transactions from a different point of view, think differently and speak differently from Englishmen, and who have never heard of the rules in question."

A similar opinion is expressed in Norendra Nath Sutar v. Kamalbasin Das (3).

"To construe one Will by reference to expressions of more or less doubtful import to be found in other Wills is, for the most part, an unprofitable exercise. Happily that method of interpretation has gone out of fashion in this country. To extend it to India would hardly be desirable. To search and sift the heaps of cases on Wills which cumber our English Law Reports in order to understand and interpret Wills of people speaking a different tongue, trained in different habits of thought and brought up under different conditions of life, seems almost absurd."

It is therefore not necessary to examine the present Will in the light of rules of construction which have been applied in English decisions. On the construction of the Will of Pochaji their Lordships agree with the Appellate Court. In their opinion the testator did not intend that his son Jamsedji should take any interest under his Will as an heir. The testator intended that the only interest in his property which Jamsedji should take or have

was a right of maintenance under para. 6 during the life-time of the testator's wife if she survived the testator, and a life interest under para. 7 in the testator's property undisposed of under the earlier paragraphs of the Will, and that he did not intend to include Jamsedji as one of his "heirs" as that term is used in para. 8. If the contention of the Appellant could be maintained, she would be entitled not only to Rs. 10,000 specifically bequeathed to her for her absolute use, but also to one-half of the four-sevenths of the moiety of the testator's residuary trust estate mentioned in the fifth paragraph of the Will.

In their Lordships' opinion this would not be in accord with the intention of the testator as declared in the terms of his Will.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal shall be dismissed with costs to be paid out of the estate.

PRIVY COUNCIL APPLICATIONS

Nos. 9 to 26 of 1922

SANDERSON, O. J.	BHUPENDRA NARAYAN
B. B. GHOSE, J.	SINGH, Appellant.
1922,	v.
23, June.	NURPUT SINGH,
	Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 110, pecuniary test, if satisfied when the decree indirectly affects title to property of the statutory value but which was not the subject-matter of the suit or the appeal—Sec. 109 (a), question of wide public importance, when can be a ground for granting certificate under.

In certain applications for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, the subject-matter of the appeals, when taken together did not amount to ten thousand rupees, but the Appellants urged that the decree would indirectly affect a large number of other resumed lands which were not the subject-matter of the present suit but whose value would be over ten thousand rupees, and further that the decision involved a question of wide public importance affecting many zamindars in Bengal benefiting by the resumption of chakran lands.

Held—That on the present applications it was not possible to hold that the decree involved directly or indirectly a claim or question respecting property of the statutory value, because in order to do that, it would be necessary to investigate the terms and conditions of leases in respect of lands which were not included in these suits. Further, before it could be held that the decision involved a question of wide public importance, there should be some evidence that the rights of zamindars and putnidars in Bengal in respect of similar lands are, generally speaking, dependent upon the same facts as appeared in the present suits and that the terms of the leases regulating such rights were similar to the terms of the pattas in these suits.

These were applications preferred on the 21st June 1922 against the judgment of Greaves and B. B. Ghose, JJ., dated the 27th February 1922 in S. A. Nos. 2586 to 2603 of 1919,* which had been preferred against the judgment of Mr. P. C. De, District Judge of Birbhum, dated the 13th September 1919, affirming the judgment of Babu Ram Dulal Deb, Munsif, 1st Court at Rampurhat, dated the 30th September 1910.

* Reported in 26 C. W. N. 943

The facts material to this report are as follows :—The Appellant, Raja Bhupendra Narain Singh Bahadur made certain applications for a certificate that the cases referred to therein were fit cases for appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The subject-matter of the appeals, when taken together, was not however of sufficient value for the grant of the certificate under the provisions of sec 110, C. P. Code. But it was urged that the decision of the High Court would affect indirectly a large number of resumed choukidari chakran lands within the Appellant's estate and that he would lose at least an annual income of about Rs. 5,000 if the decision of the High Court was permitted to stand, and that the decrees involved question or claim to or respecting property of over Rs. 10,000 in value. It was further urged that the decision involved not merely a question of individual or private importance but a question of wide public importance and would affect the property and income of many zamindars in Bengal, benefited or benefiting by the resumption of choukidari chakran lands by the Collector under Act VI of 1870. It was therefore prayed that if the appeals did not satisfy the statutory value, they might be certified as otherwise fit cases for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council under sec 109, cl. (c), C. P. Code.

Mr. B. Chuckerbutty and Babu Brojo Lal Chuckerbutty for the Opposite Party.

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an application for a certificate that these are fit cases for appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; they are numbered Nos. 9 to 26 of 1922. The Appellant is Raja Bhupendra Narain Singh Bahadur and the Respondent is Nurput Singh. They were second appeals, that is to say, appeals to this Court from the decision of the lower Appellate Court and were disposed of by my learned brothers Greaves and Ghose, JJ, in one judgment.

It is admitted by the learned vakil for the Appellant that the subject-matter of the appeals, when taken together, will not be of sufficient value to justify us in granting a certificate having regard to the terms of the first clause of sec. 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The grounds, upon which the application was argued, are the 8th and 9th of the petition which are as follows:—

“8. For that your Petitioner begs to submit further that the decision of this Hon'ble Court will affect indirectly a large number of resumed choukidari chakran lands within his estate and your Petitioner will lose at least an annual income of about Rs. 5,000 (details of which will be submitted later on) if the decision of this Hon'ble Court is permitted to stand and that the several suits aforesaid may be consolidated and the decrees involve question or claim to or respecting property of over Rs. 10,000 in amount of value.

“9 That your Petitioner further craves leave to state that the decision involves not merely a question of individual or private importance but a question of wide public importance and will affect the property and income of many zamindars in Bengal, benefited or benefiting by the resumption of choukidari chakran lands by the Collector under Act VI of 1870 and as such, even if the appeals do not satisfy the statutory value, may be certified 'as otherwise a fit case,' for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council under sec. 109, cl. (c) of the Code of Civil Procedure.”

The facts which are necessary for me to state are as follows:—“The suits were brought to recover khas possession of certain resumed choukidari chakran lands together with mesne profits. The Plaintiff claimed these lands as included in the putni taluk granted to his predecessors-in-interest by the predecessors-in-interest of the 1st Defendant, who is the zamindar, by a putni patta of the year 1853, the Bengali date being the 29th Kartik 1260. It is not disputed that the lands in question were included in the putni patta, but it is said that these lands were not taken into account in settling the rent payable under the patta and that consequently the zamindar, the Respondent, is entitled to a share of the rent derived from settling the resumed lands with tenants. No dispute arises with regard to the payment of the Government revenue which has been assessed on the resumed lands and which, under the terms of the putni patta, is payable by the Appellant. It is conceded that, from the time of the creation of the putni until the lands were resumed, the choukidars rendered private personal service to the putnidar, and not to the zamindar.”

It was argued on behalf of the zamindar that the lands, which had been resumed, that is to say, the choukidari chakran lands, were not taken into account when the jama was fixed. On the other hand, it was contended on behalf of the Plaintiff that the lands were comprised in the putni patta and consequently it must follow that the rents and profits of these lands belonged to the putnidar, and further that the rents and profits must be taken as the equivalent of the personal service, which had been

As to the first ground, it is suggested that the decision of this Court indirectly affects a number of other resumed lands within the estate of the Appellant and that the Appellant will lose at least an annual income of rupees five thousand, the details of which were to be given later on, and that if that amount is taken into consideration, there would be a question relating to property of the value of rupees ten thousand. Before this Court could come to a decision on that question, it would be necessary to investigate whether the terms of the various leases between the Appellant on the one hand and the putnidars on the other in respect of the lands, which are not included in these suits, are the same as the terms of the patta in these cases. Further it would be necessary to ascertain the facts and conditions existing at the time those leases were granted and to inquire whether in each case the services of the choukidars were rendered to the putnidars or to the zamindar. It is only necessary to state these facts to see that on this application it is not possible for this Court to hold that the decree involves directly or indirectly a claim or question to or respecting property of the amount or value of Rs. 10,000. Consequently in my judgment the first ground, on which the applicant relied, must fail.

It was upon the second ground that the learned vakil for the applicant chiefly relied, namely, that the question involved in the decision of this Court is not only a question of private importance but is a question of wide public importance. It was alleged as a ground in the petition that it would affect the property and income of many zamindars in Bengal. In order to establish this allegation the learned vakil drew our attention to 6 or 7 reported cases. These cases go to show that there have been frequent disputes between the putnidars on the one hand and the zamindars on the other relating to choukidari chakran lands which have been resumed. The fact, however, that there have been in the past many disputes in relation to such lands between the putnidars and zamindars, does not prove that the decision of this Court in these suits involves a question of wide public importance. On the contrary, when the reported cases are examined, it appears that the facts relating to the respective cases, vary considerably, and the cases certainly do not show that the facts proved in these suits are such as would cover the arrangements between putnidars and zamindars in Bengal generally. Before the Court could come to the conclusion that this decision involves a question of wide public importance, there should be some evidence that the rights of the zamindars and the putnidars in Bengal in respect of such lands are, generally speaking, dependent upon the same facts as appear in these suits and that the terms of the leases regulating such rights are similar to the terms of the patas in these suits. There is no evidence before the Court which would justify us in arriving at that conclusion.

It has been pointed out in some of the cases, to which we have been referred, that each case must depend upon its own facts; as for instance, in the case of Moharajadhiraj Sir Bejoy Chand Mahatab Bahadur v. Krishna Chandra Mukerji (1), it was stated that the question, whether the Plaintiffs, the putnidars, were entitled to have the lands on payment of the assessment payable to the choukidari fund or were liable to pay some additional rent on red by Defendant No. 4. The Plaintiff's case is that the predecessors of Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 executed a mortgage in his favour in 1310, B. S. He then brought a suit on the mortgage against the representatives of the mortgagors, and against Defendant No. 4 as a purchaser in 1898 and in execution of his decree caused the property to be sold in 1909, when it was bought by Parameswar Ghose, father of Defendants Nos. 5, 7 and servant of the Plaintiff, as benamdar for the Plaintiff. It is beyond doubt that there was such a mortgage, that the Plaintiff obtained a decree and that the property was bought by Parameswar.

The Plaintiff went on to say that the father of Defendants Nos. 1-3 then entered into an agreement with the Plaintiff, by which the Defendants were to pay off the Plaintiff's dues by the end of 1322 B. S., meanwhile remaining in possession, and in default the Plaintiff was to take khas possession after the end of 1322 B. S. The Defendants Nos. 1-3 and Defendant No. 4 did as a matter of fact remain in possession and according to the Plaintiff it was by virtue of this arrangement. The Plaintiff further alleged that only part of the total sum was paid, so he claimed khas possession of the land, with mesne profits, or, in the alternative, a decree for the unpaid balance.

The first Court gave the Plaintiff a decree for khas possession, and also for mesne profits.

The Defendant No. 4 preferred an appeal which was unsuccessful, and in consequence he has preferred this second appeal.

Two points are raised on his behalf. The first is that the suit is barred by sec. 66 of the Civil Procedure Code. Both the lower Courts rejected this argument and I think rightly, for the reason that Parameswar and his successors have not at any stage claimed title under the sale-certificate.

The second argument is based on the provisions of Or. 21, r. 72. The Plaintiff as decree-holder did not obtain the Court's permission to bid at the sale; instead of seeking permission, he caused his servant to buy the mortgaged property benami. The effect of this purchase without permission was considered by both the Courts below, and they took the view that the purchase was voidable but not void, and that Defendant No. 4 could no longer avail himself of the remedy provided by cl. (3) of the rule.

In the grounds of appeal to this Court, the third and fourth deal with this matter, and we are asked now to hold that the lower Courts should have treated the written statement as an application to set aside the sale. If we were to accept that argument, we should have to remand the case, for there are at least two points which would require investigation, namely, whether the Defendant could show that his application was not barred by limitation, and whether in the circumstances the case was one in which the Court should exercise its discretionary power of setting aside the sale under cl. (3). I mention these two points merely to show the force of the Respondent's answer that the Defendant is setting up an entirely new case. I think that answer is correct, and that on that account the Appellant's contention must be overruled. The result is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

SUHWARDY, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think the Defendant being in possession of the property in suit would be entitled to urge by way of defence that the Plaintiff's purchase without permission of the Court was not enforceable as against him, even if it were voidable at the option of the Defendant only. But it depends greatly on the discretion of the Court, and in exercising such discretion, according to authorities, the Court will take into account prejudice to the Defendant, e.g., inadequacy of price, etc. So it is not the absolute right of the Defendant to ask the Court to set aside such a sale, which, I take, is affected with a mere irregularity. In this case the Defendant treated the sale as absolutely void and did not ask the Court to exercise its discretion in this matter or place materials before it for the right exercise of such discretion. Even if I were asked to exercise such discretion in this case, I would, in the absence of any material, decide in favour of the Plaintiff. I agree that at this stage of the litigation the Defendant should not be allowed to make a new case.

As to see 66, Code of Civil Procedure, the heirs of Parameswar do not appear in this case and deny Plaintiff's benami purchase. That section only applies when the Plaintiff attempts to enforce his secret title as against the certificated purchaser. This contention therefore fails.

Suit for dower debt by wife's heirs—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sec. I, Arts. 103, 104, 116—Registered instrument.

Art. 116 applies to suits for recovery of dower debt when there is a registered

ASIATULLA v. DANISH MAHAMMAD (79) approved

This was an appeal preferred against the judgment of Mr Banomali Sen, Additional District Judge, Dacca, dated the 5th October 1920, affirming that of Babu Narendra Nath Ghosh, Sub-Judge, Dacca, dated the 30th March 1917.

The Plaintiff-Respondent gave his daughter in marriage to the Defendant who executed a registered dower deed on the 15th September 1908 in favour of his wife. Dower was fixed at Rs. 5,000, one moiety of which was prompt and the other deferred. The lady died in 1909. In 1915, the Plaintiff, as one of the heirs of his deceased daughter instituted the present suit against his son-in-law for recovery of his one-third share of the dower debt. The Defendant urged the dismissal of the suit on the ground of limitation. The trial Court held that the suit was governed by six years' rule of limitation and decreed the suit and this decision was upheld on appeal.

The Appellant thereupon preferred this second appeal to the High Court.

Babu Biraj Mohan Mazumdar (with him Babu Chandra Sekhar Sen) contended on behalf of the Appellant.—The suit would be governed by Arts. 103 and 104. Mahomed Faiz v. Oomdah Begum (69). Art. 116 which provides a general rule applicable to contracts in writing registered, cannot be applied when there are special articles, viz., Arts. 103 and 104 which cover the present case. When there are two articles in the Schedule to the Limitation Act which may possibly govern a case, the one more general and the other more special, the more specific article should be regarded as the one governing the case. See Issur Chander v. Jibun Kumari (1), Sharoop Das v. Joggeswar Roy (2), Nateson v. Soundararaja (3), Runchordas v. Parvati Bai (4) and Narmadabai v. Bhavani Shanker (5).

Babu Rajendra Chandra Guha for the Respondent—The true scope of Art. 116 has been discussed in the decision of the Judicial Committee in Tricomdas v. Gopinath (10), which confirmed the long line of cases on the subject and it is too late for this Court to depart from the same. Art. 116 has been held applicable by reason of the existence of written and registered instruments in cases which are prima facie governed by special provisions contained in the Schedules to the Limitation Act.

MOOKERJEE, J.—The facts material for the determination of the question of limitation raised in this appeal are no longer in dispute and may be briefly recited. The Plaintiff-Respondent, a Mahomedan gentleman, gave his daughter in marriage to the Defendant-Appellant. At the time of the marriage, the Defendant executed and registered in favour of his wife a dower deed, on the 15th September 1908. The deed fixed the dower at Rs. 5,000; one half was prompt and payable on demand; the other half was deferred. The lady died on the 18th September 1909. On the 10th September 1915, the Plaintiff, as one of the heirs at law of his daughter, instituted the present suit against the son-in-law for recovery of his one-third share of the dower debt. The Defendant pleaded, amongst other defences, the bar of limitation. The Court of first instance held that the suit was governed not by the three years', but by the six years' rule of limitation and decreed the claim. On appeal, this decision has been affirmed by the District Judge. On the present appeal, that decree has been assailed on the ground that the suit is barred by the three years' rule of limitation. The Respondent has urged that the six years' rule is applicable, as the dower was fixed by a registered document.

Art. 103 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, provides as follows :—

“103 A suit by a Mahomedan for exigible dower shall be instituted within three years from the date when the dower is demanded and refused, or (where during the continuance of the marriage, no such demand has been made) when the marriage is dissolved by death or divorce.”

Art. 104 provides as follows :—

“104. A suit by a Mahomedan for deferred dower shall be instituted within three years from the date when the marriage is dissolved by death or divorce.”

In the case before us, as there was no demand and refusal during the continuance of the marriage, time ran, both as regards the prompt and the deferred dower, from the date when the marriage was dissolved by death. Consequently the suit should have been, prima facie, instituted within three years from the 18th September 1909 when the lady died. But the Plaintiff has urged—and his contention has been accepted by the Courts below—that as the dower deed was registered, he is entitled to the benefit of Art 116

“116. A suit for compensation for the breach of a contract, in writing registered, shall be instituted within six years from the date when the period of limitation would begin to run against a suit brought on a similar contract not registered.”

This plainly refers to Art 115 which provides as follows:—

“115. A suit for compensation for the breach of any contract, express or implied, not in writing, registered and not herein especially provided for, shall be instituted within three years from the date when the contract is broken, or (where there are successive breaches) when the breach in respect of which the suit is instituted occurs, or (where the breach is continuing) where it ceases.”

The Appellant has contended that even if we assume that the present suit for recovery of the dower debt may be treated as a suit for compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered within the meaning of Art. 116, that article, which provides a general rule applicable to contracts in writing registered, cannot be applied when there are special articles, namely, Arts. 103 and 104, which precisely cover the case. The Appellant has, in fact, invoked the well-established principle that if there are two articles in the Schedule to the Limitation Act, which may possibly govern a case, the one more general and the other more special, the more particular and specific article should be regarded as the one governing the case. Illustrations of the application of this doctrine may be found in the cases of Issur Chander v. Jibun Kumari (1), Sharoop Das v. Joggeswar Rcy (2), Nateson v. Soundararaja (3), Runchordas v. Parvati Bai (4) and Narmadabai v. Bhavani Shanker (5). The principle, generalia specialibus non derogant, specialia derogant generalibus, has been recognised elsewhere, and illustrations of the doctrine that general provisions do not derogate from special provisions, but that the latter do derogate from the former, are by no means rare, see Hunter v. Knockalds (6), Churchill v. Crease (7), DeWinton v. Greson Corporation (8) and Preddy v. Solly (9). The Respondent has not denied that this argument carries considerable weight; but he has urged that it is too late for this Court to depart from what has been recognised in a long line of cases as to the true scope of Art 116, including the decision of the Judicial Committee in Tricomdas v. Gopinath (10). As will presently appear from an examination of numerous judicial decisions, Art 116 has been held applicable, by reason of existence of a written and registered contract, in classes of cases which are prima facie governed by special provisions' contained in the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act.

Art. 57 provides as follows.—

“57. A suit for money payable for money lent shall be instituted within three years from the date when the loan is made.” It has been repeatedly held that a suit on registered bond for recovery of a specific sum of money is governed not by Art 57, but by Art 116, see Navakumar v. Siru Mullik (11), Kalut Ram v. Lala Dhanukdhar Sahai (12), Shamacharan v. Debya Sing (13), Keri v. Ruxton (14), Nistarini v. Chandni Das (15), Ram Narayan v. Ohndranath (16), Bonwang Raja v. Ghellapoo Choudhry (17), Hussain Ali v. Hafiz Ali (18), Khunni v. Nasruddin Ahmed (19), Sushul Chunder v. Gauri Shankar (20), Ganesh Krishna v. Madhava Rao (21), Magaluni v. Narayana (22) and Viswanath v. S. I. Bank (23)

Art 64 provides as follows.—

“64 A suit for money payable to the Plaintiff for money found to be due to the Defendant to the Plaintiff on accounts stated between them shall be instituted within three years from the date when the accounts are stated in writing signed by the Defendant or his agent duly authorised in this behalf, unless where the debt is, by a simultaneous agreement in writing signed as aforesaid, made payable at a future time, and then when that time arrives”

• Art 106 provides as follows —

“106 A suit for an account and a share of the profits of a dissolved partnership shall be instituted within three years from the date of the dissolution.”

With reference to these articles, it was ruled in Ranga Reddi v. China Reddi (24), that where a registered partnership contract binds the parties to pay the loss according to their respective shares, a suit to recover the Defendants' share of the loss, on a settlement of accounts between the Plaintiffs and the Defendants, is governed, neither by Art 61, nor by Art 106, but by Art 116. It is to be noted, however, that in Unnar v. Pon-naya (25), the Court expressed its unwillingness to hold that Art 116 could be stretched to cover every case in which the suit might in its origin be referred to a contractual relationship expressed in a registered agreement.

“74 A suit on a promissory note or bond payable by instalments shall be instituted within three years from the date of the expiration of the first term of payment as to the part then payable; and for the other parts the expiration of the respective terms of payment” With reference to this provision, it has been ruled that if the instalment bond has been registered, the suit is governed, not by Art 74, but by Art 116; Dindoyal v. Gopal Saran (26) and Rup Narayan v. Gopinath (27)

Art. 89 provides as follows —

agent for moveable property received by the latter and not accounted for, shall be instituted within three years from the date when the account is, during the continuance of the agency, demanded and refused, or (where no such demand is made) when the agency terminates." With reference to this article, it was ruled in Mati Lal Bose v. Amin Chand (28) that a suit for an account by a principal against his agent on the basis of a registered agreement, is governed, not by Art. 89 but by Art. 116, the cause of action arising from the date when the contract to render accounts is broken. This view is identical with that taken in Harendra Kishore v. Administrator-General (29) and was followed in Easin Sarkar v. Baroda Kishore (30), Jogesh Chandra v. Binode Lal (31) and Bhagirath v. Premchand (32). The current of judicial opinion, however, upon this question has been by no means uniform, see Debendranath v. Fsha Hug (33), *Shib Chandra v. (41), Jhapajennessa v. Rash Bihari (42) and Pramram v. Jagadishnath (43). These cases, however, struggle, in most instances, to escape the application of Art. 116, not so much because the article should not be applied to cases comprised within the scope of special article but rather because a suit by a principal against an agent for the relief mentioned in Art. 89 cannot properly be regarded as a suit for compensation for the breach of a contract in writing registered. This, however, does not apply to the decision in Pramram v. Jagadishnath (43) where the two-fold contention was accepted that (a) Art. 89 excludes the operation of Art. 115, which is applicable only to cases not specially provided for, and (b) Art. 116 must be read along with Art. 115 and be deemed restricted in operation in the same manner. This view, as will presently appear, is opposed to that indicated in Vythilinga Pillai v. Thetchana Mutti Pillai (41) and Dindoyal v. Gopal Saran (26) and adopted by the Judicial Committee in Tricomdas v. Copinath (10). It will be observed that the expression "not herein specially provided for" which finds a place in the first column of Art. 115 does not re-appear in the first column of Art. 116. But this plainly does not conclude the matter, and the expression "similar contract not registered" which finds a place in the third column of Art. 116 does require interpretation. Does it refer only to the first column of Art. 116 and consequently mean "a contract in writing not registered"; or, does it refer to the first column of Art 115 and signify "a contract not in writing registered and not herein specially provided for?" The first alternative was adopted in Vythilinga v. Thetchana (44) and Dindoyal v. Gopal Saran (26) and apparently found favour with the Judicial Committee in Tricomdas v. Gopinath (10). The second alternative was adopted in Pramram v. Jagadishnath (43). The conflict, consequently, is between two opposing views; one maintains that Art. 116, like Art 115, applies where there is no special provision, the other maintains that Art 116 supersedes all provisions including those covered by special articles unaffected by Art 115. In this connection, reference may also be made to the decision in Kandaswami Pillai v. Avayambal (15) where it was ruled that a suit by an agent to recover money spent by him on account of his principal, is governed by Art 61 and not by Art 116, even though there was a registered contract of agency; the obligation was deemed as no part of the contract in writing registered, and the earlier decisions in Krishnan v. Kannan (46) and Seshachala v. Varada (47) were distinguished though they were clear authorities for the proposition that obligations not expressed in writing, but imported by the law in the case of sales, might be treated as in writing, for purposes of limitation, when the sale was made by a written instrument.

"110. A suit for arrears of rent shall be instituted within three years from the date when the arrears become due." It has been ruled in a long series of decisions that a suit for arrears of rent, based upon a registered lease, is governed, not by Art. 110 but by Art 116; Vythilinga v. Thetchana Murti (44), Umesh Chandra v. Adarmani (18), Iswari Prasad v. Crowdly (49), Ranecgunj Coal Association v. Jadu Nath (50), Umrao Bibi v. Mahomet Rojabi (51), Ammalayani v. Kamta Sing (60), has now been expressly disapproved of by the Judicial Committee in Tricomdas v. Gopinath (10). Suits for rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act have, however, escaped this fate; they have been held to be governed by the special rule contained in the schedule to that statute, which remains unaffected by Art. 110 and Art. 116, see the decision of the Full Bench in Mackenzie v. Haji Sahed Mohammed (61).

MAHAMAD MAZAHARAL AHAD F. MAHAMAD AZIMUDDIN BHUIAN.

We have not given above an exhaustive enumeration of all the judicial decisions relevant to the points mentioned; but we have stated enough to show that Art 116 has been repeatedly interpreted, in the most diverse connections, as if it were a generalised exception engrafted upon all articles which might, by strength of language, be regarded as applicable to suits comprehended within the description of "a suit for compensation for the breach of a contract." One of the earliest of these decisions, Narakymar v. Suu Mubli (11) goes back to 1880, and the judgment in that case as also the judgments delivered by the Full Bench in 1881 in Hussain Ali v. Hafiz Ali (18) were based upon a historical review of the previous legislation on the subject, but it may be observed parenthetically that some of the judgments delivered by the Full Bench also referred to inadmissible materials, such as, what happened in the Legislative Council, Administrator-General v. Prem Lal Malik (62). Yet, the construction then placed upon Art 116 of the Limitation Act, 1857, must be taken to have found favour with the legislature, as it has been reproduced without alteration in the Limitation Act, 1908. The legislature is presumed to know not only the general principles of law, but also the construction which the Courts have put upon particular statutes, where a section of an Act which has received a judicial construction is re-enacted in the same words, such re-enactment is treated as a legislative recognition of that construction; Jogendra Chandra v. Shyam Das (63), Kamini Devi v. Pramathanath (64) and Nagendra Mohan v. Peary Mohan (65). The Judicial Committee in Tricomdas v. Gopinath (10) felt impressed by this consideration, and Lord Sumner emphasised the fact that when the Limitation Act of 1877 was replaced by the Limitation Act of 1908, the language and arrangement of the relevant articles were left unaltered. In such circumstances, no useful purpose will be served by an attempt to examine the foundations of the long series of decisions which the Judicial Committee found themselves bound to recognise.

In answer to the contention that claims of this character sound in debt and not in damages, it may be pointed out, however, that the term used in Art 115 and Art 116 is not damages but compensation, which also occurs in sec 73 of the Indian Contract Act. As Lord Esher observed in Dixon v. Colcraft (66), the expression compensation is not ordinarily used as an equivalent to damages, although as remarked by Fry, L J, in Skinner's Co v. Knight (67), compensation may often have to be measured by the same rule as damages in an action for the breach. The term compensation, as pointed out in the Oxford Dictionary, signifies that which is given in recompense, an equivalent rendered. Damages, on the other hand, constitute the sum of money claimed or adjudged to be paid in compensation for loss or injury sustained, the value estimated in money, of something lost or withheld. The term compensation etymologically suggests the image of balancing one thing against another; its primary signification is equivalence, and the secondary and more common meaning is something given or obtained as an equivalent. The derivative meaning was familiar to the Roman Jurists and re-appears in the modern Codes founded on the Civil Law. (Sohm, Institutes of Roman Law, 3rd Ed., pp. 458-463.)

The term compensation, as used in Arts. 115 and 116 is thus, perhaps not sufficiently precise, while the technical distinction between debt and damages may be too refined for the purpose.

We must hold that the decision of the Judicial Committee in Tricomdas v. Gopinath (10) though concerned directly with the applicability of Art. 110 and Art. 116 to a suit for arrears of rent, instituted upon a registered lease, must be regarded as of far-reaching application. We cannot ignore the principle which lies at the root of that decision and must govern the applicability of Art. 116 to cases other than those covered by Art. 110, wherever the position may reasonably be maintained that the claim sought to be enforced is a claim for compensation for breach of contract in writing registered. We must consequently examine whether a claim for exigible dower and a claim for deferred dower fall within this category.

The nature of dower debt was examined by this Court in the case of Mir Maharut Ali v. Amani (68) and it was ruled that, according to Mahomedan Law, when the heirs of a Mahomedan woman claim from her husband dower which was not due or payable until her death, their claim is a simple money claim, founded solely on the contract entered into by the husband. The Limitation Act then in force was Act XIV of 1859. Cl. (9) of sec. 1 provided a period of three years for the institution of a suit brought to recover money lent or interest or for the breach of any contract. Cl. (10) of sec. 1 provided a period of three years for a suit brought to recover money lent or interest or for the breach of any contract in a case in which there was a written engagement or contract and in which such engagement or contract could have been, but had not been registered within six months from the date thereof. Cl. (16) of sec. 1 provided a period of six years for all suits for which no other limitation was expressly provided. The Court held that the suit for dower was a simple suit for the breach of a contract, within the meaning of cls. (9) and (10) of sec. 1. Reference was made to the decisions in Mahomed Faiz v. Oomdah Begum (69) and Woomatul Fatima v. Meerunnissa (70), the first had been cited as an authority for the proposition that a suit for dower was not founded on the contract, but on withholding of the widow's estate from the heirs. The second had been relied upon to support the contention that the claim to recover the dower debt was in essence to enforce a lien upon the estate of the deceased as against those entitled as heirs. These dicta were explained away and it was held that the dower, like any other debt, must be paid before the estate divisible among the heirs can be ascertained, and that the suit to recover the dower debt is nothing more or less than a suit to enforce a simple money claim founded solely on the contract entered into by the husband, see also Wafeah v. Shaheeba (71), Jannee Khann v. Amatool Fatima (72) and Mahabu Bibi v. Amina (73).

MAHAMAD MAZAHARAL AHAD v. MAHAMAD AZIMUDDIN BHUIAN.

The view taken in these cases is supported by the observation of Sir Montague Smith in Khajooroonissa v. Saifool Khan (74), namely, that prompt or exigible dower may be considered a debt always due and demandable, and certainly payable upon demand, with the result that upon a clear and unambiguous demand and refusal, a cause of action would accrue and the statute would begin to run. To the same effect is the remark of Lord Parker in Hamra Bibi v. Zubaida Bibi (75), that the dower ranks as a debt, and the right of the wife is no greater than that of any other unsecured creditor of her husband, subject to the reservation that if she lawfully, with the express or implied consent of the husband or his other heirs, obtains possession of the whole or part of his estate to satisfy her claim with the rents and issues accruing therefrom, she is entitled to retain such possession, unless it is satisfied; see also Nurunnessa Khanum v. Khaja Mahomed Sarhar (76) and Abidunnissa v. Fathuuddin Mahomed (77). In view of the principles expounded and applied in the long series of decisions which have now met with the approval of the Judicial Committee in Tricomdas v. Gopinath (10), there is thus no escape from the conclusion that Art. 116 applies to suits for recovery of dower debt when there is a registered dower deed, although Arts. 103 and 104 would apply when there is no such registered instrument. We are not unmindful that the contrary view was, without argument, assumed to be correct in Ful Chand v. Nazab Ali (78). The view which we are constrained to adopt coincides with that taken in the case of Asiatulla v. Danish Mahammad (79), which was brought to our notice after the argument had been closed, and has been reported since then.

The result is that the decree made by the District Judge is affirmed and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Hindu law Private debutter property, conversion of, into secular property by consent of family members—Consent of entire family interested in the shoba necessary—Acts and dealings of shobait, whether sufficient to change the character of the debutter property—Property dedicated to a single debt, though shoba of other debts prescribed—Dedication, if absolute.

'The consent of all persons interested in a private or family debutter which may convert the debutter into secular property must be distinguished from acts which may amount to nothing more than a breach of trust.

It is not the shobait only who by their dealings can give the property a different turn. The persons who by their consent can convert the debutter property into secular property are the members of the whole family, male and female, interested in the worship of which the shebais are merely managers.

It is not dealings with the property which change the original debutter character, but it is the consent of the entire family interested in the sheba, though dealings subsequent to such consent may under circumstances be evidence of consent.

Where property was dedicated to a particular debata, and the surplus of the profits thereof was also directed to be invested in the name of or employed in acquiring other properties for the same debata, the dedication was absolute in favour of the debata, although the income was to be devoted to the sheba of other debatas also.

This was an appeal preferred on the 21st of May 1920, against the decree of Babu Lal Behari Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zillah Hooghly, dated the 11th of February 1920, reversing the decree of Babu Ramesh Chandra Sen, Munsif, 1st Court, Hooghly, dated the 11th of December 1918.

In a family debutter trust certain properties were dedicated to the deity Sri Sri Iswar Krishna Chandra Jew with a provision that if there was any surplus in the profits after performance of the sheba in the prescribed way, then other properties would be acquired for the Iswar Jew. The lower Appellate Court found that the shebais, who were members of the family, sometimes treated the properties as debutter and sometimes as their own personal properties. The Defendant-Respondent who in the present suit denied the debutter character of the properties, had taken a lease of the property in suit from one of the then shebais. The Munsif had held that an absolute debutter was created and that that character of the property was not changed by any consent of the family members and that the dealings with the property by individual shebais as their personal property amounted to instances of breach of trust only. The Subordinate Judge on appeal held, as stated above, that the parties sometimes treated the properties as debutter and sometimes as their personal properties and thereby gave the properties a different turn and converted them into secular properties. He therefore reversed the Munsif's judgment. Against the said decree of the Subordinate Judge the present appeal was preferred.

Babus Braja Lal Chakrabarti and Nagendra Nath Ghose for the Appellants.

Babu Braj Mohan Mazumdar for the Deputy Registrar who was appointed as guardian for the minor substituted Respondent upon the death of the principal Respondent.

Dr. Jadu Nath Kanplal, who had subsequently entered appearance on behalf of the natural guardian of the minors, was heard by the Court amicus curia.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

WOODROFFE, J.—The question in this appeal is whether there was an absolute or imperfect debutter that is a mere charge and in the former case whether property the subject-matter of the debutter was converted by the consent of the whole family into secular property. On reading the niyama patra which has been placed before us, I have no doubt whatever in holding that the Munsif was right and that an absolute debutter was intended to be created by that document. The provision as to the disposal of any surplus, namely, "if there be any surplus in the profits after performance of the sheba in the prescribed way then other property will be acquired for the Iswar Jew " as also the dissociation which was markedly made by the deed of this and secular properties strongly support the view which the Munsif has taken. In passing to the question to which I shall later refer as to whether or not there was a dedication to any particular debata, it is important to remember in this connection the provision as regards the surplus, namely, that other property which will be acquired by the surplus must be acquired for Sri Iswar Jew. It is to be observed that the Defendant who now denies the debutter character of this property took a lease of this property as debutter property.

A point has been made that there has been no particular dedication to any particular debata. It appears to me, however, that the dedication was to Sri Sri Iswar Krishna Chandra Jew in whose favour some of the properties were acquired and in whose name the surplus was to be invested though the income was to be spent for the performance also of the sheba of other debatas. I hold therefore that there was an absolute debutter in favour of the deity named.

The next question is whether the consensus of the family can give a different direction to the property. Speaking for myself, I think there are good grounds for the criticisms of Babu Golap Chandra Sarkar in his Hindu Law, p. 492 on this matter. However this be, the Privy Council appears to have held (although it has been submitted to us that the remark was obiter) that in the case of what it calls a private or family trust the property may be converted into secular property by consent of the whole family. The Subordinate Judge appears to have held that this had happened in the present case. At least the language of some portion of his judgment leads me to suppose so. But the findings of fact do not support sufficiently the conclusions at which he arrived upon a wrong assumption of law. We must distinguish in the first place in this connection such consent given by all parties interested and acts which may amount to nothing more than a breach of trust. According to the Subordinate Judge the parties sometimes treated the property as debutter and sometimes as an individual property. This does not show such consent of the whole family. On the contrary it shows so far as it goes that there was no such consent. For if there was a consent to treat the property as secular from about the year 1880 as alleged why was the property treated as debutter subsequent to that date? The fact may show (at least, it is so contended), that there was no consent to treat the property as secular but an actual treatment of it as such amounting to a breach of trust. "Although" the Subordinate Judge says "the properties were described as niskar debutter properties the so-called shebais dealt with many of these as their own personal properties and have thereby given them different turn." This, however, is not sound law. It is not the shebais only who by their dealing give the property a different turn. It is the members of the family interested who by their consent, (according to the decision of the Privy Council) may convert the debutter property into secular property. Moreover the finding is not that all the properties but that many of the properties were so dealt with. The only persons who can convert the property are the members of the whole family, male and female, interested in the worship of which the shebais are merely managers. It is not, learned Subordinate Judge has held, dealings of the property which change the original character of the property but it is the consent of the family, although dealings subsequent to such consent may under circumstances be evidence of consent. Whether there is anything to show such consent in the present case is another matter.

We have been asked to remand the case if we are against the Respondent on this point. But there is no necessity in the present case to do so because the learned Judge has come to a finding of fact in the appeal that the properties were sometimes dealt with as debutter and sometimes as secular. But if that be so then there could not be on his finding of fact such consent as could convert the nature of the property.

The judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge are therefore reversed and that of the Munsif restored, the Appellant being entitled to his costs of this Court and in the lower Appellate Court.

The Appellant will be entitled to add to his own costs the cost which he paid to the Deputy Registrar and will recover both costs from the estate of the deceased Siddheswar Dubay in the hands of his heirs, the minor Respondents.

Before signing our judgment a point was raised as regards the period for which mesne profits should be allowed. It is argued before us that the lease was a good lease so long as the lessor was alive and that assuming that as our judgment says it is invalid it is only so invalid beyond that period. It is then contended that the mesne profits should not run as provided in the judgment of the Munsif which we restored but from February 1920, the date of the lessor's death. This ground appears to me to be untenable because it raises a question which was not put forth in the pleadings or in the issues or in the lower Courts or in the argument before us. Indeed the pleadings go on the basis that the Plaintiff is entitled to immediate possession. Therefore our judgment stands and the decree of the Munsif is restored.

SUHRWARDY, J.—I agree.

[APPEAL FROM THE JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER OF OUDH.]

VISCOUNT CAVE.

LORD SHAW.

LORD PHILLIMORE.

SIR JOHN EDGE.

MR. AMER ALI.

1922,

Heard, 16 and 17, March.

(Oudh) Act XXII of 1886, as amended by Act IV of 1901—Suit by Taluqdar to assess guzara land with rent—Guzara land given by former Taluqdar to wife for life rent-free by Will—Proprietor claiming taluq under same Will, if can repudiate legacy to wife—Construction of Will—"Sirat makbuza," meaning of—"Sir," popular sense of, includes "guzara" lands as well as home-farm lands—Paper book in Privy Council appeal—Courts' duty in India to control inclusion of irrelevant documents.

R, Taluqdar of Mahawa in District Kheri in Oudh, by Will bequeathed all his moveable and immovable properties to a nephew J, subject to certain legacies of which that to his wife was in these terms: "To my wife for life five hundred rupees per mensem besides sirat makbuza (which means 'sir land in possession') will be given from the estate":

Held—That R by his Will intended to bequeath to his wife an absolute estate for her life as a proprietor and without liability to have the same assessed to rent in the "sir land in her possession."

JAI INDRA BAHADUR SINGH v. BIJAI RAJ KUNWAR.

That the expression "sir land in her possession" covered mauza Chhauch which had been given to her for her maintenance by R in his life-time and was not confined to the home-farm lands, the special meaning assigned to the term "sir" by Act XXII of 1886, the word "sir" being generally used in Oudh to cover both classes of lands.

That J who took taluqa Mahewa under the Will could not repudiate the condition of the Will that mauza Chhauch should be held by R's widow for her life rent-free

That under the terms of the Will J would not be the "proprietor" of mauza Chhauch so long as R's wife continued to be the proprietor for life, and Act XXII of 1886, as amended by Act IV of 1901, consequently did not apply.

PARBATI KUNWAR v THE DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF KHERI (1) distinguished.

A duty lies upon the Courts in India to exercise control upon the wholesale inclusion, in the records transmitted to England, of irrelevant documents by the parties to an appeal to the Judicial Committee, which is a scandal and a hindrance to the proper administration of justice.

These were two consolidated appeals from (a) a judgment and decree of the Board of Revenue for the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh, dated the 13th December 1916, reversing a judgment and decree of the Commissioner of Lucknow, dated the 7th January 1916, and (b) from a decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, dated the 30th August 1918, which reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Kheri, dated the 12th February 1916

The facts are sufficiently set out in the judgment of the Board.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Amund Jackson for Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar.

The petition of Rajindra Bahadur Singh in September 1911 and the consequent entries in the register show that Rani Bijai was intended to hold Chhauch rent-free. She did so hold it until Rajindra's death, and by his Will he provided that she should so hold it until her death.

The Will refers to the "sir" lands in her possession. There is abundant evidence as the Subordinate Judge has found "that 'sir' is used in common parlance to describe a muafi grant of plots of land made to a member of a Taluqdar's family for maintenance," but there is no justification for saying that it cannot include a whole village.

(Sykes's Compendium of the Law relating to the Taluqdars of Oudh at p. 167)

The ordinary meaning of the word "sir" as used by an Oudh man is very much wider than the restricted meaning given to the word by Act XXII of 1886.

The Respondent is not entitled to approbate and re-probate.

It is a condition of the Will that Chhauch should go rent-free to Rani Bijai and the Respondent whose title is derived solely through that Will is not entitled to say that he will accept the property given to him under it but repudiate the limitations of the gift.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh.—This case is governed by the decision of the Board in Parbati Kunwar v. Deputy Commissioner of Kheri (1).

The holding granted to Rani Bijai was a rent-free holding. Her tenure was in no way concerned with the taluqdar mahal.

JAI INDRA BAHADUR SINGH v BIJAI RAJ KUNWAR.

No proprietary interest was conferred on her by the disposition of September 1911 because there was no registered instrument of transfer.

(Sec. 122, Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882).

Since 1793 the Government of India have decided that no one can grant lands rent-free.

(Cl. 10 of Reg. XIX of 1793).

Moreover there is always in the Taluqdar a latent power by statute to charge his grantee with a fair rent, even when he has granted the property rent-free.

(Sec. 107G of Act XXII of 1886 as amended by Act IV of 1901).

No proprietary interest in the "sir" lands was intended to be conferred by the Will. To discover the testator's intention regard must be had to the position at the time of execution. The wife had certain "sir" lands but they were part of the taluqa. The intention is merely to continue the existing state of affairs, i.e., that she should continue as a tenant free of rent.

The expression "sir lands" cannot comprise the whole village; if the whole village is intended to be transferred the expression is always "guzara," never "sir".

"Sirat mukbuza" means a grant for maintenance and the whole interest never passes in such a grant.

Furthermore, the Will contains no word such as "devise" or "bequeath" so as to import a gift.

Reference was also made to the Oudh Land Revenue Act, XVII of 1876, secs. 52, 54 and 55, United Provinces Act, III of 1901, sec. 58.

Mr. Dunne, K. C. replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE.—These are two consolidated appeals. In the earlier of these appeals Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar is the Appellant, and Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh is the Respondent. It is an appeal from a decree or order of the 16th December 1916, made by the Board of Revenue of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh in appeal in a suit which was brought in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Kheri on the 19th March 1915, by the then manager under the Court of Wards of the property of Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh, then a minor, against Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar, to have Rs. 5,542-11-9 assessed as rent on mauza Chhauch under sec. 107G of Act XXII of 1886. In the latter of the two consolidated appeals Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh is the Appellant and Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar is the Respondent. It is an appeal from two decrees, of the 31st January and 30th August 1918, made by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh in appeal in a suit which was brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Lakhimpur on the 27th July 1915, by Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar against Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh for a declaration that she was entitled to hold mauza Chhauch for her life rent-free, under her deceased husband's Will, and that the mauza was not liable to be assessed to rent during her life-time. It is to be mentioned here that a chak which is within mauza Chhauch is known as Chak Khakra. That chak belongs to other persons; in Chak Khakra neither of the parties to these consolidated appeals has or claims interest or title. Where mauza Chhauch is later referred to in this judgment, it is to be understood that what is referred to is mauza Chhauch, excluding Chak Khakra.

After the suppression of the Mutiny of 1857, the taluqa or estate of Mahewa, which included mauza Chhauch, was in the Oudh Summary Settlement settled with Gajrang Singh; he died in 1860, and his brother Girwar Singh succeeded to the estate. Girwar Singh died in 1865, and Balbhaddar Singh succeeded to the estate. Balbhaddar Singh died in 1898, and on his death his widow claimed to be entitled to the estate of Mahewa; her claim was resisted by Rajindra Bahadur Singh, who was Balbhaddar Singh's son. He claimed to be entitled to the estate. These conflicting claims resulted in litigation, and ultimately the Board of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council decided that Rajindra Bahadur Singh was entitled to the estate, and he entered into possession of the Mahewa estate in 1905 or 1906.

In the first regular Settlement in Oudh mauza Chhauch (except Chak Khakra) was, with plots of cultivated lands in eight other mauzas, recorded under the heading "sir" as in the possession of the widow of Girwar Singh. By that entry in the Register it was meant that mauza Chhauch and those other plots had been given to her by Girwar Singh for her maintenance. Before the next regular Settlement in Oudh the Revenue Authorities decided that in future in the Revenue Registers only such lands as were actually home-farm lands of the Taluqdar should be entered under the heading of "sir," and accordingly mauza Chhauch was then entered in the Revenue Register as "muafi"—that is, as rent-free land. When Raghubans Kunwar, widow of Balbhaddar Singh, took possession of the Mahewa estate under her claim of title, she was entered in the Revenue Register as muafidar of mauza Chhauch.

After the decision in his favour of the Board of the Judicial Committee, Rajindra Bahadur Singh, on the 26th February 1906, obtained, as owner of the Mahewa estate, possession of mauza Chhauch and of all those cultivated plots in the eight other villages.

Rajindra Bahadur Singh, as the owner of the estate of taluqa Mahewa, had powers to give, sell, mortgage or bequeath the taluqa or any part of it to whomever he pleased, but his widow, should he leave one, would be entitled to maintenance suitable to her condition as his widow. Rajindra Bahadur Singh in 1911 handed over to Ram Bijai Raj Kunwar, his wife, possession of mauza Chhauch, and on the 1st September 1911 he presented a petition to the Revenue Authorities, which, so far as is material, was as follows—

"1 The Petitioner is the absolute owner of taluka Mahewa, district Kheri, and the village of Chhauch bearing the 'hadbast' (boundary) No. 249 forms part of taluka aforesaid. The Petitioner has all proprietary powers in respect of his taluka.

"2 The Petitioner has given the entire village of Chhauch to his wife as 'muafi'. The revenue of this village would be paid from the income of the taluka and the village would, always, remain in the possession of his wife, as revenue-free 'muafi'.

"3 This application is therefore presented, and it is prayed that entries regarding mutation of names in favour of the aforesaid wife may be made in the revenue department as herein prayed for and the village may be entered as 'muafi' under cl. 6."

On that the Tahsildar reported, on the 10th November 1911, to the Deputy Collector as follows:—

"SIR,—An application was made by Thakur Raj Indar Bahadur Singh, talukdar of Mahewa, to the effect that he had given mauza Chhauch in paragana Kheri to his wife as muafi, that its revenue would be paid from the taluka, and that it might be entered in the name of the Bani as muafi. An enquiry was made. A writing from the talukdar corroborates the contents of the application. The talukdar has given mauza Chhauch to his wife, the Rani, as muafi. As no document has been executed, mutation proceedings cannot be taken. Of course, as reported by the office, entries can be made in papers, under clause 6. In my opinion, there is no harm in making entries in this way. Under clause 6A, under the head of muafi, in the column of remark, these words should be written. 'The whole of this village has been given by the taluqdar to the Rani as "muafi" for her maintenance.' Hence this report is submitted to sanction the entries aforesaid."

Thereupon the Assistant Collector made the following order :—

"Claim for mutation of names in respect of mauza Chhauch, pargana Kheri

"ORDER.

"I have no objection to the above being noted in the remarks column

"(Sd) M. ABDUL LATIF KHAN, Assistant Collector, 1st class

"11th December, 1912"

In the Register relating to mauza Chhauch it was accordingly entered that the village was "rent-free land granted by the zamindar," and under the heading "Remarks" that—"The whole of this village is by way of maintenance allowance of Bari Bahu Sahiba (the Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar) muafi on behalf of 'Taluqdar'." (Taluqdar). It is not contended, on behalf of Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar, that by the petition of the 1st September 1911, and those entries in the Register, any indefeasible title in mauza Chhauch for her life was conferred on her by Rajindra Bahadur Singh, or that he could not thereafter have sued under Act XXII of 1886 as amended by Act IV of 1901, to have rent assessed upon the mauza, but it is contended on her behalf that the petition of the 1st September 1911, and those entries in the Register consequent on it show that it was then Rajindra Bahadur Singh's intention that Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar should hold mauza Chhauch for her life free of liability to pay rent. In fact, she held the mauza from 1911 until his death rent-free.

Rajindra Bahadur Singh died on the 1st October 1912. Rajindra Bahadur Singh had, on the 14th June 1907, made his Will, which, so far as it is material, is as follows :—

"Will

"I, Thakur Rajendra Bahadur Singh, Taluqadar of Mahewa, son of Thakur Sheo Singh, resident of Garhi Prasadpur, pertaining to mauza Madhaia, pargana and district Kheri, declare as follows.—

"This borrowed life is uncertain, and God has not as yet blessed me with a son; but I have a daughter, three years old. I have a strong hope that He will grace me with a male child. Therefore, in order to avoid a dispute in future, I make a Will to the effect that if a son is born to me, he will be the owner, and take possession of all my movable and immovable properties after my death, that in case I get more sons than one, the eldest will be the owner of all my estate according to the rule of succession to the 'gaddi,' and the remaining sons will get allowance; that if no male child is born to me, then dear Jai Indar Bahadur Singh, alias Jhunnu Bhaiya, son of Kunwar Sheo Indra Bahadur Singh, who is the son of my own brother, shall be the owner, and take possession of all the movable and immovable properties owned and possessed by me at the time of my death, or to which I have a right of ownership, or possession of any kind, or to which I may acquire a right in future, without the exception of anything or right; that Musammatt Jai Raj Kunwar, my wife, shall get Rs. 500 per mensem from the estate in cash, besides the 'sir' lands in her possession; that my wife shall be the owner, and take possession of all my personal goods, such as clothes, ornaments, utensils used in eating and cooking, articles of decoration of the residential house, etc.; that Rs. 250 per mensem shall be paid from the estate to my younger brother, Kunwar Sheo Indar Bahadur Singh, who is living with me up to this time, besides the 'sir' lands possessed by him, and both these two allowances in cash shall be a charge on the estate, and the person in possession of the estate shall be liable for the same; that the person in possession of the 'taluka' shall be responsible to pay Rs 50,000 for the expenses of each of the daughters who may be unmarried at the time of my death; that if, God forbid, dear Jai Indar Bahadur Singh, aforesaid, die intestate without leaving a male child, then his nearest male heir descending from Mahendra Bahadur Singh, Narendra Bahadur Singh and Sheo Indar Bahadur Singh, will be entitled to succeed to the 'gaddi' and to be the owner of all the estate. . ."

Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh is the nephew described in the Will as Jai Indar Bahadur Singh, and Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar is in the Will referred to as Musammamat Jai Raj Kunwar, the testator's wife.

Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh did not succeed by right of inheritance to the Mahewa estate or to any part of it; his title depends on the Will, and such interest in the Mahewa estate as he has depends on the Will. He took under the Will, and not otherwise. On behalf of Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar it is contended that under the Will mauza Chhauch (Chak Khakra excepted) passed to her for her life free of rent, and that mauza Chhauch will not vest in Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh until she had died, and that until that event shall have happened Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh will not be the proprietor of mauza Chhauch within the meaning of Act XXII of 1886 as amended by Act IV of 1901, or entitled to sue to have any rent assessed upon that mauza. That contention depends upon the true construction of the Will, which involves the meaning of words in the Will which have been thus translated by the official translator: "That Musammamat Jai Raj Kunwar, my wife, shall get Rs. 500 per mensem from the estate in cash besides the 'sir' lands in her possession." That is the official translator's rendering of the vernacular words in the Will. In the judgment of the Board of Revenue of July 1916, the words in question are translated thus: "To my wife for life five hundred rupees per mensem besides sirat mahbuza will be given from the estate." In their Lordships' opinion the two translations have the same meaning. Sirat is the plural of sir and sirat mahbuza means sir lands in possession. It does not appear to have been doubted by any of the Courts in India that the "sir lands in her possession" passed by the Will to Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar as a rent-free estate for her life. But the question is, what did Rajindra Bahadur Singh mean by "sir lands in her possession" in his Will? That he intended by his Will to bequeath to Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar an absolute estate for her life in the "sir lands in her possession" and not merely a right of tenancy or other subordinate interest in them, and that he intended that she alone should be the proprietor of those lands during her life, their Lordships have no doubt.

The Courts in India who have had these suits before them arrived at different conclusions as to what Rajindra Bahadur Singh meant by the words "sir lands in her possession." The Deputy Commissioner of Sitapur, who tried the Revenue Court suit, in reference to the words "sir lands possessed by her," as he translated the Will, stated in his judgment that—

"These last words must be taken to refer to the 'sir' lands possessed by the Rani at the time of the testator's death. The village in suit is not 'sir' land in the strict sense of the term, but I think there can be little doubt that the word 'sir' is used by the testator in a loose sense, and signifies 'land held as "guzara."' This is not seriously disputed by the Plaintiff. It is then clear that the testator wished that the Defendant should continue to hold her 'guzara' land rent-free for her life-time."

He, however, being of opinion that

JAI INDRA BAHADUR SINGH v. BIJAI RAJ KUNWAR.

Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh was proprietor, and was thus entitled to sue to have mauza Chhauch assessed to rent, gave Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh a decree assessing the rent. From his decree there was an appeal by Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar Singh to the Commissioner of the Lucknow Division, who in his judgment stated, in reference to Rajindra Bahadur Singh's Will :

"By his Will he bequeathed to his widow . . . and the 'sir' or 'guzara' land. . . . It had, before the talukdar's death, been duly entered as 'guzara' held rent-free

"The present talukdar, nephew of the late talukdar, who is under the Court of Wards, succeeded to the property under the terms of the Will. He sues now to have rent assessed, as the rent-free 'guzara' of his aunt, the widow of the testator.

"The Deputy Commissioner has decreed the claim. It appears to me that the suit should never have been brought. The present talukdar, as represented by the Court of Wards, is willing himself to be benefited by the terms of the Will. But he wishes to deprive his benefactor's widow of the benefit, which was meant to accrue to her under the same Will. We must clearly take it that the Defendant-Appellant is entitled under the terms of the grant or Will to hold this village rent-free for her life."

The Commissioner of the Lucknow Division dismissed the Revenue Court suit. From that decree dismissing the suit Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh appealed to the Board of Revenue. The Board of Revenue in their judgment said :

"It is urged by the Respondent that under the Succession Act of 1865, she has devised (had devised to her) the land held by her as 'sirat makbuza,' and the effect was to give her a proprietary title for life. It is further urged that, as the village in suit was held by her in the same way as she had held the other lands at the time of the Will, that the result of the Will also was to confer on her a proprietary grant for life of this village. It may be admitted that the words 'sirat makbuza' in the Will were certainly intended to cover the rent-free grants held by her at the time of the execution of the Will. The Appellant argues, however, that there is a great difference between a whole village and plots of land within a village, however numerous the latter might be, and that a whole village could not be termed 'sir,' however loosely the word is used, and that the fact that the previous talukdar made a separate application in 1911 about the whole village clearly shows that he meant to differentiate it from the other land, and for this argument there is a good deal to be said."

In the result the Board of Revenue held that sec. 107G of Act XXII of 1886 as amended by Act IV of 1901 applied, and made a decree assessing mauza Chhauch to rent. From that decree Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar has appealed to His Majesty in Council.

The Subordinate Judge of Kheri, before whom the civil suit first came, framed six issues, the first of which was, "Is the suit not cognizable by the Civil Court?" He held that the questions whether the Plaintiff (Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar) was "entitled to hold the village (mauza Chhauch) rent-free as a life-interest bequeathed to her under her late husband's Will and that she is not liable to assessment of rent during her life-time" were exclusively for the Court of Revenue, and by his decree dismissed the suit. Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar appealed from that decree to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. The learned Judicial Commissioners on the appeal held that the Civil Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit for a declaration of Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar's legal title to mauza Chhauch under her husband's Will, but that the Civil Court had not jurisdiction to give her a declaration that mauza Chhauch was not liable to be assessed to rent during her life-time, and remanded the suit to the Court of the Subordinate Judge for the trial of certain issues.

The suit on the remand came before another Subordinate Judge, who apparently was not himself familiar with the popular descriptions in Oudh applied to lands held for maintenance. He recorded much evidence on the subject. One of the witnesses, who had been for some years a Naib Tahsildar in Lakhimpur, said "Every sort of cultivated land, whether rent-free or assessed to rent, and whether held by grantee, or Shankahapdar, and under-proprietor or ordinary tenant, is commonly called sir. I never heard a whole village called as sir of anybody, though I heard a whole village called a guzara of a guzaradar." The Subordinate Judge's comment on the Naib Tahsildar's evidence was: "His evidence goes to show that when a member of a Taluqdar's family cultivates guzara land given to him and calls it his sir, others also call it by the same name." Another witness said "Thakur Rajendra Bahadur Singh thought that land given to the members of a Taluqdar's family for their guzara are called their sir. He considered the village Chhauch to be sir of the Plaintiff (Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar)." There was much other evidence, and in conclusion the Subordinate Judge found that "the word sir is used in common parlance to describe a muafi grant of plots of land made to a member of the Taluqdar's family for maintenance, but that a whole village assigned for a similar purpose is not called by the name of sir . . . I find that the words 'sirat-makbuza' were used in the Will in this sense."

On the return to the order of remand the learned Judicial Commissioners proceeded to consider what Rajendra Bahadur Singh meant by the term "sirat-makbuza" (sir lands in possession) which he used to describe the bequest to his wife Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar. They considered that the opinions expressed by the witnesses on that subject did not possess any particular value for the decision of that question. It has not been shown to their Lordships that the Judicial Commissioners formed an incorrect estimate of the value of that oral evidence. The learned Judicial Commissioners took, in their Lordships' opinion, safer ground for the consideration of that question in the history of the manner in which mauza Chhauch had been dealt with since it had been settled with Gajrang Singh, and particularly by Rajendra Bahadur Singh. They also placed great reliance on the introduction to the late Mr Sykes's well-known and valuable compendium of the law relating to the Taluqdars of Oudh, and quoted the following passage which occurs in Mr Sykes's observations on the various classes of sir in Oudh. Mr Sykes, in discussing that subject, stated that —

"Amongst the various classes of sir under-proprietors who never had the full and exclusive proprietary right of the whole village is the land frequently assigned to the junior branches of a family for their support, instead of breaking up the estate and giving them the ancestral shares to which they were entitled. Such appanages are known in Oudh by the name of sir. They also form one and the chief class of Jewan Birt, which is a name also sometimes applied to this class of sir. Whole villages assigned in this way were also called Bhayai villages."

In support of that statement by Mr Sykes, the Judicial Commissioner quoted a passage from Volume I of the Oudh Gazetteer of 1877, which was published under the authority of the Government, and a passage from the Fyzabad Settlement Report of 1880. The passage from the Oudh Gazetteer is as follows:—

JAI INDRA BAHADUR SINGH v. BIJAI RAJ KUNWAR.

"Second, it was common to assign to the junior branches of a family certain lands for their support, instead of giving them the ancestral shares to which they were entitled. Such appanages were also known as sir."

The passage quoted from the Fyzabad Settlement Report runs thus:—

"233. Sir is in most cases an appanage of proprietorship, the lands constituting the home-farm of a proprietor. It is the name, too, given to the lands assigned to the junior branches of a family in lieu of the ancestral share to which they were entitled."

The Judicial Commissioners did not overlook the fact that the passages which they quoted from the Oudh Gazetteer and the Fyzabad Settlement Report had reference to the District of Fyzabad and not to Oudh generally. They observed in their judgment: "The above quotations refer to the District of Fyzabad, but the meaning of the word sir, given therein, appears to us clearly to be a meaning which was applied generally in Oudh." Nor did the Judicial Commissioners overlook sec. 108 of Act XXII of 1886, which enacted how the term "sir" should be understood officially in Oudh. In reference to that section they said: "The restricted meaning of the word sir given in Act XXII of 1886 is a meaning based to some extent upon the meaning of the word in the Province of Agra, and is largely the creation of the English Revenue Authorities. We consider that the learned Counsel for the Appellant (Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar) is correct in his contention that the word sir used by an Oudh man would bear the meaning assigned to it by Mr. Sykes, and would not be confined to the meaning which it bears in Act XXII of 1886." Their Lordships see no reason to disagree with that conclusion of the learned Judicial Commissioners.

Referring to the history of taluqa facts in these consolidated appeals, their Mahewa, the Judicial Commissioners correctly stated in their judgment that mauza Chhauch (excepting Chak Khakra, which belonged to another and distinct family) and cultivated plots in eight other villages of the taluqa were in the possession of Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar at the time of her husband's death; that some of those plots had been handed over to her by her husband, Rajindra Bahadur Singh in 1907, and the remainder of them in 1908; that he had instructed the Patwari to have them entered in the Revenue Register in her name, and that those plots of cultivated lands had been entered into the first Regular Settlement as the "sir" of the widow of Girwar Singh. The Judicial Commissioners also state that the Counsel who appeared before them admitted that those plots of cultivated lands in the eight villages were sirat makbuza, and must be given to Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar under the terms of the Will, but he contended that mauza Chhauch could not pass to her under the description of sirat makbuza. The Judicial Commissioners came to the conclusion that in 1911 Rajindra Bahadur Singh had given mauza Chhauch (excepting Chak Khakra) to Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar as rent-free, and that the description sir makbuza included mauza Chhauch (less Chak Khakra), and that under the Will she took an estate for her life in the taluqa free of rent, and they gave her a decree declaring that she "is entitled to hold possession during her life of the village Chhauch, less Chak Khakra, pargana and district Kheri, under the Will dated the 14th June 1907, executed by Thakur Rajindra Bahadur Singh, the late Taluqdar of Mahewa." From that decree Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh has appealed to His Majesty in Council.

After a careful consideration of all the

JAI IN德拉 BAHADUR SINGH v. BIJAI RAJ KUNWAR.

Lordships have come to the conclusions that the words sirat makbuza in the Will did apply to and cover not only sir lands which might be accurately described as "sir," but also mauza Chhauch (less Chak Khakra), and that Rajindra Bahadur Singh, in confirmation of his gift of 1911 to his wife, Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar, of mauza Chhauch (less Chak Khakra) rent-free for her life, did by his Will intend to bequeath, and did bequeath, to her mauza Chhauch (less Chak Khakra) for her life as a proprietor, and without any liability to have it assessed to rent; and they also are of opinion that Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh, who takes his interest in taluqa Mahewa under that Will, and whose only title to any part of taluqa Mahewa is under that Will, cannot repudiate the condition of the Will that mauza Chhauch should be held by Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar for her life rent-free.

It has been contended on behalf of Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh in these consolidated appeals that the decision of the Board in Parbat Kunwar v. The Deputy Commissioner of Kheri (1) governs this case. That contention was based on a misconception. In that case the Plaintiff, who sued for an enhancement of rent, was the "proprietor" of the mahal there in question within the meaning of sec 107A of Act XXII of 1886 as amended by Act IV of 1901, and was suing a thikadar who held under a lease. In this case Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh is not a proprietor of mauza Chhauch or of any part of it, and will not be the proprietor while Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar continues to be the proprietor for her life, and Act XXII of 1886 as amended by Act IV of 1901 does not apply.

Their Lordships will humbly advise

(1) L. R. 45 I. A. 111; s. c. I. L. R. 40 All. 541; 23 C. W. N. 125 (1918).

His Majesty that the appeal in which Rani Bijai Raj Kunwar is the Appellant should be allowed with costs, and the decree or order of the Board of Revenue of the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh of the 16th December 1916 be set aside and the decree of the Commissioner of the Lucknow Division of the 7th January 1916 be restored and affirmed, and that the appeal in which Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh is the Appellant be dismissed with costs.

In parting with this case their Lordships desire to add one further observation upon a matter which in other cases has often before been animadverted upon, but apparently with small result, namely, the manner in which the record in Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh's appeal has been prepared. When this record, which consisted of 1,134 pages, was received by the Registrar of the Privy Council, it appeared to him that a large part of it, consisting of lists of property in tabular form, was unnecessary for the purposes of the appeal, and he communicated this view to the London Solicitors with a suggestion that Counsel should be consulted as to eliminating this portion of the printed book. As a result the parties agreed between themselves, on the advice of their Counsel, to omit over 800 pages, which were taken out of the books and not referred to again, and this shows that they should never have been included. The persons primarily responsible for this reckless waste of money were no doubt Thakur Jai Indra Bahadur Singh and his advisers in India, and had he won the appeal he would certainly not have received any costs in respect of this part of the record. But at the same time their Lordships think that a duty lies upon the Court to exercise control upon the wholesale inclusion of irrelevant documents, a duty which in this case was certainly not performed. A few weeks ago, in another appeal from the same Court, their Lordships drew attention to the fact that the record contained at least 781 unnecessary pages, and they do so again with the earnest hope that the Judges of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner will take such steps as will prevent in the future the continuance of what their Lordships consider a scandal and a hindrance to the proper administration of justice.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION

No. 25 OF 1922.

SANDERSON, C. J. RASH BEHARI KARURI
RICHARDSON, J. v.
1922, NARAIN DAS DORILAL.
13, December.

Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), secs 99, 101, 102, 104, 106 and 107—Stoppage in transitu by unpaid vendor—Assignment of document of title by buyer—Onus of proof of good faith and of payment of consideration by assignee, whether on the vendor or assignee—Unpaid vendor's right of stoppage in transitu, whether a merely equitable right—General Clauses Act (X of 1897), sec 3, cl. (21)—Good faith, definition of, if applicable to Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872).

Where a vendor who has not received the price of his goods stops them while in transit to the buyer on the buyer becoming insolvent under sec. 99 of the Indian Contract Act, and, in the meantime, the buyer has assigned the document showing title to the goods to a third person:

Held—That it lies upon the assignee to prove that when the document of title to the goods was assigned to him, he was acting in good faith and that he gave valuable consideration for the goods.

Quare —Whether the unpaid vendor's right of stoppage in transitu is a merely equitable right.

Per RICHARDSON, J —Even before the right was recognised in England by the Sale of Goods Act, the better view seems to have been that it was a common law right derived from the law merchant and both in England and in India it is now not only a legal but a statutory right.

The definition of 'good faith' in sec 3, cl (20) of the General Clauses Act (X of 1897) does not apply to the Indian Contract Act which was enacted in 1872.

This was an appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Buckland, sitting on the Original Side, dated the 26th January 1922.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Sir B. C. Motter (with Mr. H. C. Mazumdar) for the Appellant.—Under sec. 102, the onus of proof is on the seller as his right is a merely equitable right.

Refers to Lickbarrow v Mason (5), Gurney v. Behrend (6) and Booth Steamship Company, Ltd v Cargo Fleet Iron Company, Ltd. (1).

Mr. N N Sarkar (with Messrs. S. C. Bose and J N Mazumdar) for the Respondent.—Since the right to stop in transit is a right given by statute to the seller, it continues so long as it is not proved that it has ceased to exist.

I rely on sec. 101 of the Indian Contract Act. Gurney v. Behrend (6) and Booth Steamship Company, Ltd v. Cargo Fleet Iron Company, Ltd. (1) are in my favour.

Faise v Wray (7) referred to.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by the Defendant from the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Buckland, dated the 26th January 1922. The facts of the case may be taken from his judgment at pp 268 and 269 of the paper-book, which are as follows :—

“The Plaintiff firm carry on business at Chandausi in the United Provinces. The Defendant carries on business as a ghee and sugar merchant in Calcutta. The goods were consigned to Joy Gopal Joy Kissen, a firm formerly carrying on business in Calcutta.

“In the latter part of April 1920, Joy Gopal Joy Kissen sent their gomostha Ram Charan to Chandausi where ghee was purchased. A consignment consisting of 457 tins of which the value is stated to be Rs 18,815-9-9 was despatched by rail to Calcutta under Railway receipt No. 19818. The Railway receipt was handed over to Ram Charan who brought it to Calcutta to his employers where it was received in the usual course of two or three days later. It is alleged that on or about the 30th April Joy Gopal Joy Kissen were closing down their business and in insolvent circumstances, and on the 2nd May a telegram was sent from Etawah where, amongst other places, business was carried on by Joy Gopal Joy Kissen, saying that that firm had failed, and instructing the firm of Harnandroy Fulchand in Calcutta to detain the ghee. On the next day Messrs Pugh & Co. were instructed to write a letter to the Railway Company which they did on behalf of the Plaintiff to stop delivery of the goods under the Railway receipt to the consignee, as the latter had become insolvent. A telegram was also sent by the Plaintiff firm on the 3rd May from Chandausi to the Goods Superintendent at Howrah to stop delivery of the 457 tins. In the meantime, according to the Defendant's case, on the 2nd May the Railway receipt which was then in the hands of Joy Gopal Joy Kissen was endorsed by a gomostha of the firm of the name of Haranath in favour of the Defendant who is alleged to have paid Rs. 14,000 for it. On the 5th May Dorilal the gomostha of the Plaintiff firm arrived at Howrah for the purpose of dealing with the matter. He says he could not find Joy Gopal Joy Kissen and he went to the Railway Office. The Defendant's manager went for the goods, which he did on the 3rd, 6th and 11th May, according to his evidence, but the goods had not arrived. On the 7th May Joy Gopal Joy Kissen were adjudicated insolvents and three days later, on the 10th, a further letter stopping the goods was written by Messrs. Khaitan and Co. on behalf of the Plaintiff. That letter was superfluous, in view of what already had taken place, and on the next day the Defendant's manager says, he came to know at Howrah that Joy Gopal Joy Kissen were in financial difficulties. The ghee arrived at Howrah on the 16th May and on the 19th May, this suit was filed. Three days later by an arrangement which I understand was made under an order of the Court, the ghee was delivered to the Defendant.”

It is necessary to notice, as the learned Judge has pointed out, that the goods in question were delivered under an arrangement, which was sanctioned by the Court, to the Defendant with the result that the seller found himself in the position of the Plaintiff; and, in the suit the first prayer was for declaration that the 457 tins of ghee belonged to the Plaintiff firm and that the Plaintiff firm was entitled to take delivery of the same from the East Indian Railway. In the alternative, a claim was made for a decree for Rs 18,815 which was alleged to be the value of the goods in question.

The finding of the learned Judge was as follows :—

“I do not think it is established that Rs 14,000 were paid by the Defendant to Joy Gopal Joy Kissen for the Railway receipt; the circumstances are extremely suspicious, and I am by no means satisfied as to the bona fides of the Defendant in the transaction.”

In the course of the case a question arose as to the party upon whom the burden of proof with respect to the two matters, which are referred to in the learned Judge's decision rested, and the learned Judge stated the question in the following manner at p. 279 —

“Is it the duty of a seller-Plaintiff who has a right by law to stop the goods in transit to show that it has not ceased by reason of the conditions of the section not having been complied with, or is it the duty of the assignee-Defendant to show that it has ceased?”

And upon that point his decision is to be found at p. 280 as follows :—

“In my judgment the burden of proof is upon the Defendant whose duty it is to prove that he acted in good faith and gave valuable consideration and it is not for the Plaintiff to show that the Defendant was not acting in good faith or gave no consideration. The result is that the Plaintiff firm must succeed, for the Defendant has not established that the endorsement of the Railway receipt was made either in good faith or for consideration.”

I propose to consider the question which relates to the burden of proof in the first instance. It was not disputed, at all events, in this Court, that the Plaintiff was in the position of a seller. He had parted with the possession of the goods. The seller had not been paid the price of the goods. Further, in this Court it was not denied that the Plaintiff gave the requisite notice to the Railway Company to stop the goods, and that at the time of such notice the buyers Joy Gopal Joy Kissen were insolvent, and it is common ground that the goods were in transit. In short, all the conditions necessary to bring the case within sec 99 of the Contract Act were fulfilled, and prima facie the Plaintiff had a right to stop the goods in transit. The question in this case arises by reason of the fact that it was alleged that the buyers Joy Gopal Joy Kissen had assigned the Railway receipt (which it was alleged was a document of title to the goods) to the Defendant for good consideration, and by reason of the provisions which are to be found in sec. 102 of the Contract Act. A considerable portion of the argument of the learned Counsel for the Appellant was directed to show that the right of the seller to stop the goods in transit was merely an equitable right. In my judgment it is not necessary to consider this question at any length nor is it necessary, for the reasons to which I will hereafter refer, to consider in detail the English cases which were cited to us. It will be sufficient for me to refer to the case of Booth Steamship Company, Limited v Cargo Fleet Iron Company, Limited (1), for the purpose of showing the origin and the nature of the vendor's right of stoppage in transit.

In the judgment of the learned Chief Justice at p. 579 this passage is to be found :—

(1) [1916] 2 K. B. 570 at p. 579.

RASH BEHARI KARURI v. NABAIN DAS DORILAL.

"The right of stoppage in transitu was introduced in the English law in the seventeenth century, and the first reported case on the subject is in the year 1690 [Wiseman v. Vandeputt (2)]. As the right arises only in the case of insolvency, it came to be recognised in our Courts in the first instance through the medium of the bankruptcy jurisdiction of the Lord Chancellor which was of statutory creation. The right is not peculiar to the law of England; it was part of the law merchant existing in most of the commercial States of Europe before it was recognised as part of our Law. In 1743, Lord Hardwicke received evidence of the custom of merchants as to stoppage in transitu and then applied the rule. He based his decree both upon the custom proved before him and upon the justice of the case. Snee v. Prescott (3). In 1841, Lord Abinger in Gibson v. Carruthers (4) gave a full and interesting account of the history of the introduction of stoppage in transitu into our law and reviewed the authorities. He referred to the opinions expressed by Courts of Equity that the right was founded upon some principle of the common law and of the practice in Courts of law to call the right a principle of equity which the common law had adopted. He pointed out the difficulty, owing perhaps to its foreign parentage, of reducing this right to some analogy with the principles which govern the law of contract as it prevails in this country between vendor and purchaser."

It was then pointed out by the learned Chief Justice that in England some of the difficulties attached to this question had been removed by the codification of the law which is contained in the Sale of Goods Act, 1893.

Fortunately in this country the law relating to the matter in question has been embodied in the Contract Act; and in my judgment we have to decide this question having regard to the provisions of the Contract Act, which relate to the matter in question. The Contract Act provides codification of the law relating to contracts but contains a proviso in sec. 1 that "nothing herein contained shall affect the provisions of any Statute, Act, or Regulation not hereby expressly repealed, nor any usage or custom of trade, nor any incident of any contract not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act."

Now, sec. 99 of the Contract Act to which I have already referred provides that "a seller who has parted with the possession of the goods and has not received the whole price may, if the buyer becomes insolvent, stop the goods while they are in transit to the buyer." Sec. 104 provides the method of stopping the goods. The section runs as follows:—"The seller may effect stoppage in transit either by taking actual possession of the goods, or by giving notice of his claim to the carrier or other depository in whose possession they are."

Secs 106 and 107 deal with the rights of the seller after he has stopped the goods in transit. Sec. 106:—"Stoppage in transit entitles the seller to hold the goods stopped until the price of the whole of the goods sold is paid."

Sec. 107:—"Where the buyer of goods fails to perform his part of the contract, either by not taking the goods sold to him, or by not paying for them, the seller, having a lien on the goods, or having stopped them in transit, may after giving notice to the buyer of his intention to do so, re-sell them, after the lapse of a reasonable time, and the buyer must bear any loss, but is not entitled to any profit which may occur on such re-sale." So that, in my judgment, it appears that the giving of the notice by the seller to the carrier operates to defeat the purchaser's right to possession and entitles the seller to hold the goods until the price is paid, or, in the event of the price not being paid in accordance with the contract, to re-sell the goods in accordance with the provisions of sec 107. Then arises the question, what is the position when the buyer re-sells the goods to another purchaser? Secs 101 and 102 are material to that question. Sec. 101 provides: "The seller's right of stoppage does not, except in the cases hereinafter mentioned, cease on the buyer's re-selling the goods while in transit, and receiving the price, but continues until the goods have been delivered to the second buyer, or to some person on his behalf." It is to be noted that sec 101 constitutes the general rule that the seller's right to stop does not cease on the buyer's re-selling the goods while in transit but continues until the goods have been delivered to the second buyer or to some person on his behalf. The section, however, refers to certain exceptions: and, sec. 102 is an exception, in my judgment, to the general rule which is laid down in sec 101. That section provides:—"The right of stoppage ceases if the buyer, having obtained a bill of lading or other document showing title to the goods, assigns it, while the goods are in transit, to a second buyer who is acting in good faith, and who gives valuable consideration for them." In my judgment, there is no doubt that the proper construction to be placed upon these sections is that when the seller has stopped the goods in transit, it lies upon the second buyer to prove that when the document of title to the goods was assigned to him, he was acting in good faith and that he gave valuable consideration for the goods. The Defendant was in the position of the second buyer referred to in sec 102; and I agree with the decision of the learned Judge that the burden of proof was upon him to show that he acted in good faith and that he gave valuable consideration.

The question, therefore, arises whether the Defendant discharged the onus which lay upon him. The decision of the learned Judge in that respect is to be found at p 277 of the paper-book as follows:—

"I do not think it is established that Rs 14,000 were paid by the Defendant to Joy Gopal Joy Kissen for the Railway receipt, the circumstances are extremely suspicious and I am by no means satisfied as to the bonâ fides of the Defendant in the transaction."

And, consequently, the learned Judge decided in favour of the Plaintiff.

The learned Judge, when dealing with the question whether the Defendant had discharged the burden of proof, which rested upon him, stated certain facts which are to be found in his judgment, and the passage begins at the bottom of p. 272 as follows:—"What are the outstanding features of this story as related to me?" The learned Counsel for the Appellant did not dispute the learned Judge's findings of fact in this respect, but he did dispute the deductions which the learned Judge made from the above-mentioned facts.

The result is that the facts to which I have referred stand uncontested, and the onus rests upon the Appellant to satisfy this Court that the deductions which the learned Judge made from those facts are wrong.

Now, the main grounds upon which the learned Counsel for the Appellant relied were the entries in the Defendant's books. He pointed out that the finding of the learned Judge was that the books on the face of them deserved the commendation which was asked for them; that is to say, (as I understand the judgment of the learned Judge) as far as could be ascertained from the entries themselves they appear to have been made at or about the time of the alleged transaction and in the ordinary course of business; in that respect they were entitled to the commendation that was claimed. The learned Judge then went on to point out that those entries were not conclusive. It appears that the Defendant's business was carried on at Burrabazar where apparently the Defendant carried on his ghee business and the Defendant's son carried on another business of a financial nature and the books relating to both these businesses were kept in the Burrabazar Office, some of the monies being kept in a safe in a house at Bagbazar where apparently the Defendant and his son lived. The learned Judge pointed out that assuming for the sake of argument that this was not a bonâ fide transaction, it would be necessary to make entries in the books of the Burrabazar Office and to enter a substantial sum which could be put forward as the consideration for the assignment of the Railway receipt; he drew attention to the fact that the money was supposed to have been taken from the safe in the house at Bagbazar, and that there was no book of account recording the extraction of the money from the Bagbazar safe, except a copy book which was produced by the Defendant's son for the first time when he was in the witness box; and he made certain criticisms upon that book and the way in which the entries were made.

In addition to those criticisms there seems to me a further criticism which I think was not noticed by the learned Judge. It seems to me that on the page on which this entry of Rs. 14,000 is found, the first item on the credit side, viz, Rs. 97,000 must have been entered after the next four items.

It was suggested by the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff that that had been done in order to make it appear that there was sufficient money on the credit side to permit the withdrawal of the Rs. 14,000 on the 19th of Baisakh.

The learned Counsel for the Appellant, in my judgment, made a pertinent observation with regard to that, namely, that the witness who produced the book had not been cross-examined upon that point, and that consequently much stress ought not to be laid upon it. I agree with that observation. At the same time it is to be remembered that that book was not disclosed by the Defendant in his affidavit of documents and the Plaintiff's learned Counsel had no opportunity of seeing it until it was produced by the witness when he was in the witness box, and, it is not surprising that in the short time which was available for examining the book, the learned Counsel did not observe the matter to which attention has now been drawn. At the same time it must be remembered that the witness had no opportunity of explaining that entry, and, consequently I do not attach an undue importance to that matter.

The main facts, (I do not intend to deal with them in detail) which emerge in this case with regard to the assignment of the Railway receipt, are these.—The representative of the Defendant whose name was Butto Lal Banerjee entered into this arrangement, apparently, according to his own account, after a short discussion. He apparently was prepared to pay the considerable sum of Rs. 14,000 in respect of the ghee. I desire to draw attention to a passage in his evidence which seems to me to be material (at p. 80) which is as follows:—

RASH BEHARI KARURI v. NARAIN

“ Q. Do you know that goods are sometimes sent at owner's risk and sometimes at Railway risk?

A. Yes.

Q. You know if it is at the owner's risk and the goods are lost, you get nothing from the Railway?

A. Yes.

Q. That you have known for years?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you enquire from Harnarain and Rajmull whether these goods were coming at Railway risk or at owner's risk?

A. I did not consider it necessary to enquire about all these.

Q. Did you enquire?

A. No.

Q. If they were coming at owner's risk, supposing they were lost or destroyed or stolen, what would you have done?

A. On the strength of this receipt we would have called upon the Railway Company to explain.

Q. You have told us that you know for years that if it was at owner's risk you cannot get anything from the Railway?

A. Yes.

Q. May I take it that you had no discussion with Harnarain and Rajmull as to what would happen if the goods did not arrive or if only a portion arrived?

A. No. There was no talk with Harnarain on the subject.

Q. Or with Rajmull?

A. No.”

He is supposed to be a business man—he was buying a particular kind of ghee with which apparently his firm never dealt before. He had for some considerable time had no dealings with Joy Gopal

Joy Kissen. He had no sample of the ghee. He did not take the trouble to enquire whether it was carried at owner's risk or at the Railway risk, nor did he even enquire about the invoice price. The invoice price at Chandausi was Rs. 90-8 annas and he bought it at Rs. 80 per maund. He then, having made so little enquiry about the ghee or the conditions relating to its transit, is supposed to have gone up to the Bagbazar house, obtained Rs. 14,000 and paid it over to Harnath who was the representative of Joy Gopal Joy Kissen. This Harnath or Harnarain has not been called; but a man named Rajmull has been called. Rajmull was not connected with Joy Gopal Joy Kissen at the time, although he had been, as I understand, employed by this firm at some previous period; and, I personally do not understand why the services of Rajmull were called upon on this occasion, because, apparently, according to his own account, he did nothing except to introduce Harnath to the representative of the Defendant firm. The evidence shows that the Defendant firm's place of business was at a short distance from the place of business of Joy Gopal Joy Kissen. I am not at all inclined to disagree with the learned Judge's finding when he said that “ Rajmull's evidence with regard to what took place and there being need for him to attend, is not to be accepted too readily.”

The learned Judge seems to have thought that it was quite possible that as Harnath was not available as a witness it was necessary to have somebody who could speak to the transaction from the point of view of Joy Gopal Joy Kissen. I do not intend to deal with this part of the case in any greater detail.

Our attention was drawn to the evidence by the learned Counsel on both sides with great care, and I repeat that in this case the question involved was of fact and it was for the Appellant to satisfy the Court that the learned Judge's findings of fact and the deductions which he drew from those facts were wrong. In my judgment the Appellant has failed to discharge that onus, and I am by no means satisfied that the learned Judge was wrong when he came to the conclusion that he was not satisfied that the Rs 14,000 had been paid. Even if the learned Judge was wrong upon that point, it, by no means, follows that the Defendant should succeed, because the circumstances of this case are such as to lead me to believe that the learned Judge was right in his further decision, namely, that he was not satisfied as to the bond fides of the transaction.

The result is that, in my judgment, this appeal should be dismissed with costs. The injunction restraining the Plaintiff from withdrawing the sale price of the ghee which is in deposit in Court is dissolved.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree. The view of the evidence taken by the learned Judge who tried the case raises the question whether in this conflict between the Plaintiff as seller claiming the right of stoppage in transit and the Defendant as second buyer claiming as assignee of the Railway receipt being the document showing title to the goods, the burden of proof rests on the seller to prove the negative, or on the second buyer to prove the affirmative, of the proposition that the second buyer acted in good faith and gave valuable consideration for the goods. The learned Judge, while he characterises the circumstances in which the document of title was assigned as suspicious, regarded the evidence as in this sense inconclusive, that he could not pronounce against the second buyer if the burden of proof lay on the seller nor against the latter if the burden of proof lay on the former. The learned Judge's decision was in favour of the seller because in point of law he held that the burden was on his adversary. It is not, I think, unfair to say that Sir Benode Mitter, appearing for the Appellant, the Defendant, though he also argued the appeal on the facts, addressed himself in the main to the question of law so arising.

It is not now disputed that the first buyer became insolvent so that as against him the Plaintiff as seller was entitled under sec. 99 of the Contract Act to stop the goods while they were in transit. Nor is it disputed that the goods when the Plaintiff stopped them were in transit. We are not concerned therefore, with sec. 100 of the Act which describes what is meant by transit. The relevant provisions will be found in the two following sections which run as follows:—

Sec 101: "The seller's right of stoppage does not, except in the cases hereinafter mentioned, cease on the buyer's re-selling the goods while in transit, and receiving the price, but continues until the goods have been delivered to the second buyer, or to some person on his behalf."

Sec 102: "The right of stoppage ceases if the buyer, having obtained a bill of lading or other document showing title to the goods, assigns it, while the goods are in transit, to a second buyer who is acting in good faith and who gives valuable consideration for them."

So far as the question of the burden of proof depends on the language of these provisions, the rights of the assignee of the document of title, though they are formulated in a separate section, sec. 102, would appear to be introduced by sec. 101 as an exception to the seller's general right of stoppage where the goods have been sold by the first buyer. According to the general rule, therefore, the language would appear to throw on the second buyer the burden of proving his own good faith in acquiring the document of title.

I will assume, however, that as regards the burden of proof the Act gives out no certain sound and that the question is to be decided on general principles or in the light of consideration such as those advanced by Sir Benode Mitter

Sir Benode contended in effect that the right of stoppage in transit was an equitable right, that the legal right to the goods was in the assignee of the document of title and that it was for the seller to establish want of good faith on the part of such assignee.

It appears to me, however, that it is now too late to argue that the right of stoppage is a merely equitable right. Observations on the history of the right will be found in the judgments of Lord Reading, C. J., and Scrutton, J., (as he then was) in a case to which my Lord has already referred. Booth Steamship Company v. Cargo Fleet Iron Company (1). Even before the right was recognised in England by the Sale of Goods Act, the better view seems to have been that it was a common law right derived from the law merchant and both in England and in India it is now not only a legal but a statutory right.

No doubt Lickbarrow v. Mason (5) and Gurney v. Behrend (6) affirm the title of the bond fide transferee for value of a bill of lading endorsed by the consignee. But it has still to be remembered that the right of the assignee of the document of title is apart from any mere question of language an exception to the more general rule which appears in India in sec. 101 of the Contract Act. The general rule is that "the seller's right of stoppage does not cease on the buyer's reselling the goods while in transit and receiving the price, but continues until the goods have been delivered to the second buyer or to some person on his behalf."

If sec. 102 confers upon the second buyer who comes within the section, a title which may also be described as a statutory title, still in my opinion the title is one which he must prove as against the seller who has shown that prima facie he had the right to stop the goods in transit.

I agree in this case with my Lord and the learned Judge that the burden lies upon the Defendant, and that he has not discharged it.

His principal witnesses are his manager Batto Lal Banerjee and his son Nando. In both cases Mr. Sircar's cross-examination at the trial was very damaging. The goods were being carried on the railway at owner's risk. No enquiry was made on this point. Batto Lal's evidence and that of the witness Padamraj Lameha as to the price of Chandausi ghee in Calcutta at the beginning of May 1920 is very vague. The evidence for the Plaintiff is that Chandäusi ghee was then selling at a price not far short of Rs. 100 a maund. The contract price was Rs. 90-8 a maund and the Defendant bought at Rs. 80 a maund. The transaction was an unusually large one for the Defendant to embark upon. He had never bought Chandäusi ghee before. He had had no transactions with the original buyer, the firm of Joy Gopal Joy Kissen, at any rate for five or six years previously.

It is true that the account books kept at the Defendant's shop in Burrabazar purport to show that a sum of Rs. 14,000 was paid to Joy Gopal Joy Kissen's gomostha Haranath Modi and that these account books appear to have been kept in the regular course of business. But the story is that the money was brought from the home-safe in the family house in Baghbazar, and the evidence that the money was taken out of that safe is at least unsatisfactory. On this point it is unnecessary for me to say more than my Lord has already said.

Moreover, the firm of Joy Gopal Joy Kissen was a firm in a very large way of business. The gadi in Burrabazar was a very short distance from the Defendant's shop. The Railway receipt was negotiated on the 2nd May. It is admitted that Joy Gopal Joy Kissen's gadi was actually closed on the 4th May. The firm or its proprietor was adjudicated insolvent on the 7th May. It is to my mind improbable that no inkling of the firm's position had reached the Defendant. I agree with the learned Judge's observation made in another connection that "if it was true that Joy Gopal Joy Kissen were carrying on business until the 4th May it ought to have been easy in the case of a firm of the standing of Joy Gopal Joy Kissen who are said to have done a very large business and to have been well-known in Calcutta, to call some independent evidence to prove the fact." The learned Judge adds that there is no evidence to that effect.

I am not satisfied that the alleged payment of Rs. 14,000 was in fact made; but even if it be assumed that this sum was paid by the Defendant to Haranath Modi on account of Joy Gopal Joy Kissen, I am unable to say that it is established that the money was paid in good faith. We were referred to sec. 3, cl. (20) of the General Clauses Act (Act X of 1897) which says that "a thing shall be deemed to be done in 'good faith' where it is in fact done honestly, whether it is done negligently or not." The definition does not apply to the Contract Act which was enacted in 1872 but in the present case the facts point to more than mere negligence; they point rather to deliberate abstention from enquiries which if made would have put the Defendant on his guard or to wilful blindness in entering upon a speculative transaction which it was expected would be profitable.

I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

v.

CHAUDHURI, J.

CUMING, J.

20, August

THE CHAIRMAN, CHITTAGONG MUNICIPALITY,
Defendant, Respondent.

Bengal Municipal Act (III, B. C., of 1884), secs. 290, 295, 297—Rules framed by Local Government under secs. 290—Rules 4, 9 and 24 (e), if ultra vires—Rules requiring rate-payer who takes private water connection to pay for meter and authorising cutting off of water supply in case of non-payment, reasonable and intra vires—Rules, if impose a tax.

NAGENDRA LAL DAS v. THE CHAIRMAN, CHITTAGONG MUNICIPALITY.

A Rule framed by the Local Government requiring owners or occupiers paying water rate to provide a meter at their own expense as one of the conditions for allowing them to lay down communication pipes from the service pipe of the Commissioners, for the purpose of leading water to their premises for domestic purposes, is within the powers conferred by sec. 290 of the Bengal Municipal Act, and being reasonable is intra vires. It is not inconsistent with sec. 295 of the Act, which makes it lawful in certain circumstances to have a meter fixed at the expense of the Municipality and to expend the Municipal funds for the purpose.

As no one is obliged to have a house connection, the rule has not the effect of imposing a charge or tax on the rate-payer.

Rule 24 (c) of the Rules framed under sec. 290 of the Act authorising the Commissioners to cut off water supply; upon the owner or occupier refusing to comply with a notice to pay fees and charges imposed in accordance with the rules, is consistent with sec. 297, reasonable and intra vires.

These were appeals against the decree of J. Cornes, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Chittagong, dated the 5th of April 1918, reversing the decrees of Babu Bhupendra Nath Mukherjee, Munsif, 1st Court at that place, dated the 8th February 1918.

Certain rate-payers of the Chittagong Municipality wanted to have house connection with the main water service pipe of the Municipality. The Municipality were willing to allow the connection only on payment by them of the expense of putting up meters to measure the amounts of water consumed. The Plaintiffs who were rate-payers sued the Municipality for a declaration that they were entitled to have the connection made without any payment, and the Municipality having permitted them to have the connection on the understanding that the Plaintiffs would pay for the meters in case their liability for such payment was established. Plaintiffs also prayed for injunctions to restrain the Municipality from cutting off the water supply with a view to enforcing the payments for the meters.

The questions which arose for decision in the suits were whether certain rules framed under sec. 290 of the Bengal Municipal Act by the Local Government, under which the Municipality purported to act were ultra vires.

The suits were decreed by the Munsif but dismissed on appeal by the District Judge.

Hence this Second Appeal

Messrs C. R. Das and P. Choudhury and Babu Khatish Chandra Sen for the Appellants.

The Advocate-General and Babu Ram Charan Mitter for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The facts of the suit out of which Appeal No. 879 of 1918 has arisen are simple.

The Plaintiffs are certain rate-payers of the Municipality of Chittagong, the Defendants are Commissioners of the Municipality. The Plaintiffs wished to have house connection with the main water service pipe. The Municipality were willing to allow the connection only on the condition that a water meter to measure the amount of water consumed was put in by the Plaintiff at their own expense in accordance with certain rules framed by the Local Government under sec. 290 of Act III of 1884 (The Bengal Municipal Act) as amended by Act IV of 1894.

The Plaintiffs contended that these rules were ultra vires and that they were entitled to have the house connection they asked for without paying for the meter and they asked for an injunction to restrain the Defendant Municipality from cutting off the water connection which the Municipality threatened to do if the price of the meter was not paid, the Plaintiffs having been allowed, on the understanding that they would pay for the meter if it was found that they were liable to pay for it, to make the desired house connection. The Court of first instance decreed the suit holding that the rules framed under sec. 290 were ultra vires. On appeal the learned District Judge decreed the appeal and dismissed the suit. He held that the rules framed under sec. 290 were not ultra vires and they did not conflict with sec. 295 of the same Act.

Against this decree the Plaintiffs have appealed to this Court. The question in controversy between the parties though very simple is a question of considerable importance and has been argued at some length.

Sec. 290 of the Bengal Municipal Act is as follows:—"Whenever the Commissioners deem it practicable and consistent with the maintenance of an efficient water supply, they may at a meeting and subject to such rules and conditions as the Local Government may make and impose, allow the owners and occupiers paying the water rate hereinbefore mentioned to lay down communication pipes from the service pipe of the Commissioners, for the purpose of leading water to their premises for domestic purposes."

It is quite clear that this section by itself gives the Local Government the power to make and impose the rules and conditions under which the Municipal Commissioners may allow house connection with the service water pipes. Sec. 291, sec. 292, and sec. 293 which have been referred to by Counsel for the Appellants give the Commissioners the necessary powers to ensure the connection being properly made and kept in proper order to prevent the water being wasted. Under the powers conferred on them by sec. 290, the Local Government did make certain rules which were made final on the 24th October 1916.

The two particular rules with which we have to deal are r. 4 and r. 9 which run as follows:—

4. (1) The owner or occupier of the holding in respect of which the connection is required must bear the entire cost thereof, including the cost of the supply and fixing of the fittings referred to in r. 9.*

(2) The applicant for the connection will also be liable for the cost of such alterations in, or repairs to, roads, drains, sewers, gas or water mains, or pipes, and the cost of such other works as may be necessitated by, or result from the work of making such connection and also all charges for which the Commissioners may become liable in respect of any of the matters referred to in this sub-rule.

9. A holding connection shall comprise the following parts or fittings.

(a) A brass or gunmetal ferrule inserted in the main supply pipe.

(b) A galvanised iron communication pipe from the ferrule to the meter.

(c) A stop cock and its surface box.

(d) A meter.

NAGENDRA LAL DAS v. THE CHAIRMAN, CHITTAGONG MUNICIPALITY.

(e) Service pipes from the stop cocks to the taps.

(f) And taps.

The r. 4 provides that the owner or occupier must pay the entire cost of the fittings as defined in r. 9. R. 9 (d) provides that a meter is included as one of the fittings necessary for a household connection. It has been argued that sec. 290 gives the Local Government no power to define what are fittings; therefore the Local Government are not empowered to make a rule under that section defining what are the fittings required for a house connection.

No doubt the section does not provide that the Local Government shall define what are the fittings required for a house-connection, but it does empower the Local Government to make rules and conditions under which the occupiers or owners may have a house connection and the provision of a meter at the occupiers' or owners' expense is one of the conditions they impose.

It is quite immaterial whether a meter is called a fitting or not.

Neither can it be successfully contended that the rules in question are unreasonable.

It is the manifest duty of the Municipality to see that the public in general have their due supply of water. The capacity of any given installation is obviously limited and unless the Municipality can prevent waste, the general public distributed over a large area are bound to suffer. The installation of a meter is one of the most obvious means of preventing waste and as a house connection must be regarded more or less in the light of a luxury, it is only reasonable that the person who has the benefit of it should pay all the necessary expenses. It would obviously be inequitable that the cost of a luxury should fall on the general body of rate-payers and not on the person who really gets the benefit of it.

It has also been contended that these rules as framed by the Local Government under sec. 290 contravene the express provision of the Act as set forth in sec. 295.

Sec. 295 provides: The Commissioners at a meeting may determine what quantity of water shall be supplied to the occupier of every house free of further charge, for every rupee paid to the Commissioners as water rate on account of such house.

If the Commissioners have reason to believe that the occupier of any house consumes more water than he is entitled to as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for them to provide a water meter at their own expense and to attach the same to the water pipes of the said house and any water which may be used over and above the quantity to which the occupier is entitled as aforesaid shall be paid for by him at such rate as the Commissioners at a meeting may determine.

It is argued that sec. 295 sets forth the circumstances under which the Commissioners may provide a meter and this section states that they may do so at their expense. It is said as this section provides that the Commissioners may have meters fixed at their expense, it is unlawful for the rules to order that a meter should be fixed at the consumers' expense. There is, however, nothing inconsistent between the rules as framed by the Local Government and sec. 295. Sec. 295 makes it lawful in certain circumstances to have a meter fixed at the expense of the Municipality and to expend the Municipal funds for the purpose. That certainly does not preclude the Local Government from making it one of the conditions of a house connection that the occu-pier or owner shall provide a meter at his expense.

A further argument has been put forward that by insisting that the owner or occupier should provide the meter, the Commissioners are imposing a charge or tax on the rate-payer and that no charge or tax can be imposed which is not expressly and in very clear terms authorised by the Act itself. This argument has no substance. No one is obliged to have a house connection. Therefore whether a person may, or does not, pay the charge is entirely within his own discretion. It is not a tax on the public. If the Municipality had to provide at their expense meters free of cost to the user, that would mean taxing the public. It is to prevent it that the rules seem to have been framed. It is also to be noted that the Local Government has control over the expenditure of Municipal funds under sec. 69 (1). We are therefore of opinion that the rules as framed by the Local Government under sec. 290 are intra vires and the occupier or owner must pay for the cost of the meter. It has lastly been contended, the Municipal Commissioners cannot cut off the water supply in default of the Plaintiffs paying the cost of the meter. The argument put forward to support the contention is that sec. 297 is the only section which authorises the Commissioners to cut off the water supply and that the section provides that the water can only be cut off on account of the non-payment of the water rate. There is some force in this contention, but the point is not a fair one to raise as these persons have been allowed to make the connection on the understanding that they would abide by the rules made under sec. 290, if it were found these rules were intra vires.

The same argument, however, applies as has already been applied to the proper construction of sec. 295. Sec. 295 applies to things in statu quo and sec. 290 to future necessity.

The water has, we understand, not been cut off although notice may have been given to cut off under r. 24 (e) made under sec. 290. It cannot be said that this rule conflicts or is inconsistent with sec. 297.

R. 24 (e) is, we consider, intra and not ultra vires. It seems to us to be a reasonable provision.

In the view we have taken, it is needless to discuss the cases which were cited before us, the general principles enunciated in which were not disputed. The Court has received the assistance of having both points of view thoroughly argued. We think it only right to add that we ought not to interfere with rules and conditions, authority for which has been expressly provided for as in this case, unless they are clearly in conflict with some legal principle.

The result is that the decree of the lower Appellate Court cannot be successfully assailed and the present appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Our judgments also govern Second Appeal No. 1168 of 1918 (Chittagong) which is also dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 103, Or 41, r. 25—Second appeal—Issue not decided in the lower Court—Discretion of High Court to decide issue on evidence on record or remit same to the lower Court—Inamdar, suit by, to eject cultivating tenant—Question whether kudiwaram in former or latter, to be decided on facts of each case—Initial presumption in favour of either party, if exists—Onus, where parties have adduced evidence—Grant of inam, if conveys kudiwaram—Zemindar or Polygar when may convey kudiwaram—Act I (Mad.) of 1908, scope of—Act whether affects rights in litigation when passed.

Under sec. 103 read with Or. 41, r. 25 of the Civil Procedure Code, the High Court, in second appeal, has power to determine an issue of fact left undetermined by the Court of first appeal on the evidence on the record, or to remit the case to the lower Court for a finding on that issue, with liberty to the parties to adduce additional evidence if they choose to do so.

When in a dispute between the cultivating tenant and an inamdar or pattadar, the question arises whether the latter is entitled to both the melavaram and the kudiwaram or whether the former have occupancy right (kudiwaram) in the land, the issue must be dealt with in each case upon its own facts with special regard to the evidence and the circumstances thereon. There is no suggestion in SURYANARAYANA v. POTHANNA (2) and in SETURAINAM

AIYER v. VENKATACHELA GOUNDAN (1) of an initial presumption in favour of the inamdar or pattadar on the one side or of the ryot on the other and the inference drawn by the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in MUTHU GOUNDAN v. PERUMAL IYEN (4) in favour of such a presumption is not correct.

When the entire evidence on both sides is once before the Court, the debate as to onus is purely academical.

The use of the term "iram" in a grant by a zemindar or polygar gives no indication of the intention of the donor to convey the kudiwaram to the grantee, even if he had the right to bestow it. Prima facie, a zemindar or polygar is a rent-receiver and his right to direct possession of the lands is confined to his private lands and the "old waste land." It does not extend to rayati land.

The question whether Act I of 1908 (Mad.) applies to rights in litigation at the time of the passing of the Act did not require decision in the case as the tenants were found to have acquired occupancy rights by prescription long before the statute came into force.

This was a consolidated appeal by special leave from a judgment and five decrees of the High Court of Madras, dated the 17th August 1915, allowing one and dismissing four second appeals from decrees of the Court of the District Judge of Trichinopoly, dated the 28th October 1908, which had affirmed three and reversed two decrees of the Court of the District Munsif of Kulitalai, dated the 28th September 1907.

The suits out of which the appeal arose were filed by the Plaintiff-Appellant in his capacity as head of a mutt to eject the Defendants from the lands which they

The Defendants admitted his right to the "mela-varam" alone, and contended that they had the full rights of occupancy tenants.

The facts and arguments are fully set out in the judgment of the Judicial Committee.

Messrs DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellant referred to the Madras Estates Land Act, I of 1908, which came into force while the present suits were under appeal to the High Court. They contended that there was no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on an erroneous finding of fact, Mt Durga Choudhrai v Jawahir Singh Choudhri (5), Code of Civil Procedure, sec. 103, and "that the onus had been wrongly placed upon the Plaintiff.

The relation of landlord and tenant does not raise any presumption of permanent tenure. In each case you must establish permanency by contract or otherwise.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and B. Dubé for the Respondent.—There is no presumption either way but the Plaintiff who alleges a right to eject must prove his title. Nothing done under the inam

THEIR LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by MR AMEER ALI.—The several consolidated appeals arise out of five suits brought by the Plaintiff on the 27th July 1904, in the Court of the District Munsif of Kulitalai in the Madras Presidency, in his capacity of head of a Mutt, to eject the Defendants from the lands in their occupation in the Village of Karappudayanpatti which, he alleged, belonged to his Mutt. The Defendants in the suit are cultivating tenants holding separate lands unconnected with each other. Accordingly, separate suits were brought against them.

SRI CHIDAMBARA SIVAPRAKASA PANDARA SANNADHIGAL v VEERAMA REDDI.

The Plaintiff's case is that in the year 1743 the Polygar of Turayur, who owned the estate within which the village is situated, granted to the head of the Mutt at the time the village in question; and that since then the successive holders of the office have been in possession and enjoyment not only of the right to the receipt of the dues payable by the tenants to the landlord, usually called in the Madras Presidency the melavaram, but also of the right to the actual occupancy of the lands technically called the kuduvaram.

The five suits that were brought in the Munsif's Court were numbered 676, 677, 720, 721 and 722 of 1904. In suit No 676 the Plaintiff alleged that the particular tenant, for whose ejection he was suing, held the land in dispute under a muchilika executed by the Defendant's predecessor on the 18th June 1880, by which he bound himself to surrender the land in his occupation on failure to pay rent. In suit No 720 the Plaintiff's action related to two items of land in respect of which he alleged that the Defendant's father had executed two muchilikas on the 19th April 1894, and the 2nd June 1894, respectively. With regard to suits 721 and 722 the Plaintiff's suit rests on his general allegation that as under the grant he is entitled to both the rights he claimed in the land—viz., the right to receive the rent as well as the right to occupy the lands—he was entitled to eject the Defendants, who were tenants-at-will. In suit No. 722 he appears to have also set up an oral lease. In suit No. 677 the Plaintiff relied upon a muchilika executed on the 24th July 1893 by the Defendant's brother.

The Defendants in all the cases denied the right of the Plaintiff to eject them from the lands in their occupation and under their cultivation, they alleged that he was only entitled to the melavaram and not to the kuduvaram, and that they and their predecessors had held their lands from times immemorial and possessed and exercised the full rights of occupancy tenants to the knowledge of and with the acquiescence of, the Plaintiff and his predecessors. They further charged that the muchilikas produced and relied upon by the Plaintiff were fabricated documents concocted for the purpose of destroying their old and hereditary right in the lands in their occupation.

Upon the allegations the parties went to trial. The District Munsif framed two principal issues, which were common to all the cases, viz.—

- (1) Whether the Plaintiff is entitled to the plaint land [that is, the land in suit] itself or only to the tiwa (rent) thereon?
- (2) Is the Defendant entitled to the occupancy right in the land by custom and prescription?

The other issues related to the genuineness of the muchilikas and to the amount of rent, &c.

The first two issues being common to all the suits, by consent of parties the five actions were tried together, and, as the trial Judge states at the beginning of his judgment, the whole evidence was adduced in suit No 676, and was "used as evidence in all the connected suits."

The Inam grant on which the Plaintiff's claim rests is Ex "A." After reciting by whom and to whom the gift is made the document proceeds thus:—

"The village gifted to our Swami out of our several villages is Karappudayanpatti, to the north of Uppiliyapuram, east of Vayirichettipalayam, south of Kottapatti and west of Sokkapuram. As we have gifted it most willingly to the Swami, you shall forever have dominion over and enjoy the wet and dry lands, tope, well, betel garden, etc., water, tree, stone, treasures, etc., found therein and live happily. Further, what we command to be done for the Gurupooja day is this. We command that Gurupooja shall be conducted by collecting at the rate of 4 measures of grain per plough in respect of Agraharam, Sarvamanyam, Umbalam, &c, including wet and dry lands in the whole of our Turaiyur State. You shall accordingly conduct Gurupooja every year and shall not omit to collect at the rate of 4 measures of grain in respect of dry and wet lands also in the whole of Turaiyur State. You shall enjoy the whole of Karuppudayanpatti Village. Further, you shall, as ordered by our predecessors, receive always Mahamai and allowance of rice and money for extra expenses. The Audeenam shall, in continuous succession, have dominion over and enjoy for ever, the village, Gurupooja, kattalai, rice allowance, &c. He who helps this charity by thought, word or deed, will be blessed with happiness and live long in the same manner as one who establishes temple of several crores of Sivulingams in such holy places as Benares, Chidambaram, Tiruvalur, Arunachalam, Siikalahasti, Conjee, Kalugugundram, Kumbakonam, Rameswaram, etc."

The grant was recognized by the nam authorities in 1865. But the Inam proceedings furnish no indication regarding the extent of the rights covered by it. Both sides in support of their respective contentions produced a mass of evidence, which the District Munsif, in a singularly well-balanced and exhaustive judgment, has analyzed with great industry. He held on the evidence that the Defendants had proved they had been in occupation of their respective lands from very early times, and had been dealing with them as lands in which they had full occupancy rights, that they had been selling, mortgaging, making improvements, and that when any portion of the same was taken up for public purposes, they had claimed and received compensation from Government. He held further that the Plaintiff had utterly failed to show that the Defendants had been let into possession by his predecessors or by himself, or to rebut the testimony they had produced in establishment of their right of occupancy. His main judgment is in suit No 676. He also found that the documents the Plaintiff had produced in support of his claim, together with the muchilikas on which he relied in the three cases, had been fabricated with the object of destroying the tenants' right in their lands. He accordingly dismissed the five suits save and except as regards certain claims for rent.

The Plaintiff appealed to the District Court of Tiruchinopoly against the District Munsif's decrees, and these appeals were numbered as follows:—

Appeal 39 of 1908 (suit No 676);

Appeal 11 of 1908 (suit No. 720);

Appeal 12 of 1908 (suit No. 721);

Appeal 13 of 1908 (suit No 722);

Appeal 40 of 1908 (suit No. 677)

It is necessary to give the numbers of the appeals as well as of the suits, in view of the complication that enters into the determination of the cases owing to the course the proceedings took in the subsequent stages.

In appeal No 39 (suit No 676) the officiating District Judge, Mr Thornton, dismissed the appeal on the ground "that he did not consider the Plaintiff had established he was entitled to both the warams in all the cultivated lands in the village, nor had he proved the terms of their tenancy." In appeal No. 40 (suit No 677), in which the Plaintiff had put forward a muchilika numbered in the Munsif's Court as Ex "O," the District Judge set aside the decree, and in reversal of the Munsif's order made a decree in favour of the Plaintiff for ejectment of the tenant. In appeal No 41 (suit No. 720) he agreed with the Munsif as to item covered by muchilika "O 1," and accordingly dismissed the Plaintiff's appeal with respect to that item, but he differed from the Munsif as to the item covered by muchi-likka "O 2," and accordingly decreed ejectment in respect thereof. In appeals Nos. 42 and 43 (suits Nos 721 and 722) he affirmed the Munsif's decrees.

Both parties appealed to the High Court against the decrees, which operated severally against them. By the time the appeals reached the High Court, the Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908) had come into force, and accordingly the Defendant, against whom a decree for ejectment had been made by the officiating District Judge and who was Appellant in second appeal 544 of 1909, filed, on the 27th September 1910, an additional ground of appeal against his order.

All these second appeals came on for hearing before the High Court on the 14th August 1911, but in view of the provisions of sec 6 of Act I of 1908 and the contentions of the parties, the learned Judges considered it necessary to obtain from the officiating District Judge a finding on the following point —

"Whether the grant to the Plaintiff was of the land revenue or of the kudiamaram also? Opinions have no doubt been expressed in the judgments of the Lower Courts on the point, but the question was never tried with reference to sec 6 of the Madras Estates Land Act"

Sec. 6 will be referred to later on.

The cases accordingly went back to the officiating District Judge, who returned the appeals to the High Court with the following "finding".—

"But it seems to me that, seeing that Ex 'A' purports to grant all the land in the village absolutely to the Plaintiff's predecessor-in-title, and that the Plaintiff is admittedly entitled to both uarams in 70 cawnies while there are no tenants on 77 of the remaining 185 cawnies in the village, the burden lies on the Defendants to show that their predecessors-in-title were cultivating tenants at the time of the grant (see also the case reported at p 639, Madras Weekly Notes, 1910), and that in the absence of proof of this, there can be no presumption that there were any cultivating tenants in the village at the date of the grant or that the Zamindar was not the owner of both warams in the land comprised in the grant. My finding on the issue sent down with reference to sec 6 of the Madras Estates Land Act therefore is that the grant to the Plaintiff was an absolute grant of all the land in the village, and was not a grant of the land revenue alone to a person not owning the kudiamaram thereof."

On the return of this "finding" to the High Court, the learned Judges considered it neither satisfactory nor sufficient. They express their views in the following terms:—

"The learned District Judge has not, so far it appears to us, considered all this mass of evidence, and he seems to have based his conclusion on the language of Ex 'A' and on certain presumption which, according to him, arises from the facts that the Plaintiff is admittedly entitled to both warams in 70 cawnies of land in the village and that about 77 other cawnies are waste. He throws the burden on the Defendants to prove that their predecessors-in-title were cultivating tenants at the time of the grant. We are not disposed to express any opinion on the question of presumptions, because, as a matter of fact, there is considerable evidence upon which the points in issue can be decided one way or the other. But we wish to point out that there is no burden on the Defendants to show that their predecessors-in-title were cultivating tenants at the time of the grant. If they succeed in showing that at the time of the grant the land was in the occupation of cultivating tenants, that might be sufficient to raise a presumption in their favour. We would therefore ask the District Judge to return a fresh finding, on the issue remitted to him, and he will also return a finding on the second issue in the case, namely, 'Is the Defendant entitled to the occupancy right in the land by custom or by prescription?'"

SRI CHIDAMBARA SIVAPRAKASA PANDARA SANNADIHAL v VEERAMA REDDI.

The officiating District Judge does not appear to have applied his mind to the determination of the question involved in the second issue. It was now expressly and clearly brought to his notice

On the return of the cases to the officiating District Judge, that officer, even with the fresh evidence the Plaintiff was allowed to produce, found himself unable to come to any definite conclusion. The end of his judgment shows that he was not clear at all in his mind as to the conclusion to be derived from the evidence, and he expressed his difficulty in the following words:—

“I do not see therefore how it is possible to say whether the grant to the Plaintiff was of land revenue or of kudicaram also”

With these remarks the appeals were re-submitted to the High Court

Upon the return of the appeals to the High Court the learned Judges again found that neither had the evidence been properly considered, nor had the issue to which the attention of the officiating District Judge had been expressly called been determined, and they expressed their view as follows:—

“We are not disposed to express any opinion on the question of presumption because as a matter of fact there is considerable evidence upon which the issue can be decided one way or the other

“The finding again submitted by the District Judge after this remand order does not at all show that the District Judge addressed himself seriously to a consideration of the mass of evidence considered by the District Munsif. The Judge says he is ‘in a position of some difficulty,’ and in a short paragraph (paragraph 3 of the finding paper) says that it is not possible to say one way or the other on that point. We are unable to accept the findings and we request the present District Judge to submit fresh findings on the two issues mentioned in the second remand order after detailed consideration of the evidence and with reference to the above remarks, irrespective of the question of onus and presumption”

The case had accordingly to be remitted once more to the District Court for a proper finding. By that time the permanent incumbent of the office, Mr Harding, seems to have resumed work. He considered the case on the evidence irrespective of any presumption, and on the 30th September 1914, embodied his conclusions into definite findings of fact as required by the High Court. He found on the evidence, in agreement with the District Munsif, that the Defendant tenants had been in occupation of the lands for a very long time, that they had been dealing with their holdings and the lands in their occupation as tenants entitled to occupancy rights, that they had been transferring their holdings, partitioning the same among themselves, making improvements on the land, receiving compensation for land taken up from their holdings by Government, and that the Plaintiff had not only utterly failed to rebut the inference arising from those facts, but had fabricated the documents with which he came to support his claim. He accordingly returned the appeals with the finding as follows:—

“It is unnecessary to say more. A Zamundar could only gift the melwarum of occupied and both warans of unoccupied lands, and we find in actual fact that the holdings and dealings have been as they must be if that supposition is correct. From 1829 onwards, the ryots or tenants in many cases have partitioned their properties or sold them to Government or to one another, and Plaintiff has accepted these things from 1870 onwards at any rate. Plaintiff now holds kudicaram rights in many lands not by his grant but by some subsequent acquisitions. But he never held it in suit lands which are neither pannai nor waste, and in 1901 he was found by the Deputy Collector to be illegally taking possession of lands and this was upheld by the High Court. He is no doubt trying to get the kudumiam of the whole village but his claim thereto is entirely baseless.

"I find that the grant was of the mel-variam only of occupied lands and of both variams of unoccupied lands. Defendants or their predecessors have always had the occupancy rights in their holdings and were not affected by the gift from the Zamindar to the Inamdar.

The learned Judges of the High Court, upon the return of the above finding, held as follows.—

"It must be conceded in favour of the Plaintiff that we expected the learned District Judge to discuss the evidence at somewhat greater length than he has done, we having indicated in our remand order that the District Munsif had devoted about 85 paragraphs to the consideration of that evidence, and that we required to be reasonably satisfied that the conclusions of the learned District Judge are arrived at after a careful consideration of the whole evidence.

"But we do not think that we are entitled to hold that full consideration has not been bestowed by the District Judge on the whole evidence before he arrived at the findings now submitted by him, and we therefore accept the same.

"The result is that second appeals Nos 515 to 518 will stand dismissed with costs, while second appeal No 544 of 1909 will be allowed with costs in this and in the lower Appellate Court."

From these decrees the Plaintiff has now appealed to His Majesty in Council, and it is contended on his behalf that the High Court acted without jurisdiction in remitting the appeals to the District Judge for a proper finding. The argument proceeds on the same misapprehension of the law, as was pointed out by the Board in the case of Seturatnam Aiyer v. Venkatachela Goundan (1). It is to be observed that the Indian legislature, in its anxiety to prevent the High Court from being inundated with second appeals in trifling matters, has provided in sec 100 of the Civil Procedure Code that such appeals shall lie to the High Court only on the following grounds.—

"(1) Save where otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any other law for the time being in force an appeal shall lie to the High Court from every decree passed in appeal by any Court subordinate to a High Court, on any of the following grounds, namely:—

"(a) the decision being contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law

"(b) the decision having failed to determine some material issue of law or usage having the force of law.

"(c) a substantial error or defect in the procedure provided by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits.

At the same time, in order to avoid gross miscarriage of justice resulting from the omission by the lower Appellate Court to determine any issue of fact or to come to a definite conclusion on a set of facts, it has made two distinct provisions. By sec. 103 the High Court itself is vested with the power when the evidence on the record is sufficient, to determine any issue of fact necessary for the disposal of the appeal, but not determined by the lower Appellate Court.

By r. 25, Or. XLI, it is further provided.—

"Where the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred has omitted to frame or try any issue, or to determine any question of fact, which appears to the Appellate Court essential to the right decision of the suit upon the merits, the Appellate Court may, if necessary, frame issues, and refer the same for trial to the Court from whose decree the appeal is preferred, and in such case shall direct such Court to take the additional evidence required;

SRI CHIDAMBARA SIVAPRAKASA PANDARA SANNADHIGAL v. VEERAMA REDDI.

"And such Court shall proceed to try such issues and shall return the evidence to the Appellate Court together with its findings thereon and the reasons therefor."

The High Court had thus the power of determining the issue left undetermined by the officiating District Judge on the evidence on the record, or of remitting the case to the lower Court for a finding on that issue, with liberty to the parties to adduce additional evidence if they chose to do so. The learned Judges of the High Court chose the latter, which, under the law, was fully within their competence. The case was remitted three times because the officiating District Judge in the first instance misunderstood the order of the High Court, and in the second instance expressed himself as unable to come to a definite conclusion. The High Court did not in the present case, as in Seturatnam Aiyer v. Venkatachela Goundan (1), remand it under Or. XLI, r. 23, of the Civil Procedure Code, but under r. 25. The remarks that follow in the judgment in Seturatnam Aiyer's case (1) explain the reason why the remand in that case, as in the present, became necessary. "In the opinion of the learned Judges of the High Court," say their Lordships, "the District Judge had omitted to determine a question of fact which appeared to them essential to the right decision of the suit on the merits; he had failed to consider whether, apart from the particular contract to which his attention was exclusively directed, there was evidence on which to hold that from their inception the holdings of the Defendants were permanent or in the nature of occupancy rights."

As already observed, the Madras Act I of 1908 had come into force on the 1st

July of that year, whilst the appeals in these cases were pending before the High Court. In view of the Plaintiff's contentions, which have travelled over a wide range, and also of the question relating to the grant, it becomes necessary to examine briefly the provisions of the statute. The preamble states the object of the enactment in the following words:—

"Whereas it is expedient to amend and declare the law relating to the holding of land in estates in the Presidency of Madras; It is hereby enacted as follows, etc."

Cl (d) in sec. 3 defines the expression "estate" in the Act to mean—

"Any village of which the land revenue alone has been granted in Inam to a person not owning the kudivaram thereof provided that the grant has been made confirmed or recognized by the British Government or any separate part of such village"

Sec. 3 gives a definition of the words "private land" as meaning the "domain or home-farm land" [expressions borrowed from English law] of a landholder by whatever designation known, such as hambatcam, khas, sir or pannai. It defines the words "ryot" and "occupancy ryot," and declares "ryoti land" to mean "cultivable land in an estate other than private land." This definition includes other varieties of land to which no specific reference is necessary.

It also defines "old waste" as meaning any land in the estate which, not being private land,

"(1) has at the time of letting by the landholder been owned and possessed by him or his predecessors-in-title for a continuous period of not less than ten years and has continuously remained uncultivated during the time, such period being either after or partly before and partly after the passing of this Act, or within twenty years before the passing of this Act, or

"(2) has at the time of any letting by the landholder after the passing of this Act remained without any occupancy rights, being held therein at any time within a continuous period of not less than ten years immediately prior to such letting."

(1) L. R. 47 I. A. 76, s. c. I. L. R. 43 Mad 667; 25 C. W. N. 454 (1919).

Sec. 8 deals with what is called "the merger of occupancy right." It declares:—

"(1) Whenever before or after the commencement of this Act the entire interests of the landholder and the occupancy ryot in any land in the holding have become united by transfer, succession or otherwise in the same person, such person shall have no right to hold the land as a ryot but shall hold it as a landholder; but nothing in this sub-section shall prejudicially affect the rights of any third person"

And cl. (3) provides:—

"The merger of the occupancy right under sub-secs (1) and (2) shall not have the effect of converting ryoti into private land"

Sec 10, cl. 1, declares that "all rights of occupancy shall be heritable, and shall be transferable by sale, gift or otherwise."

Cl. 2 provides —

"If a ryot dies intestate in respect of a right of occupancy and without leaving any heirs except the Crown, his right of occupancy shall be extinguished, but the land in respect of which he had such right of occupancy shall not cease to be ryoti land"

Sec. 13 declares the right of the occupancy ryot to make improvements on the land in his occupation or "in respect of his holding."

Coming now to sec. 6, cl. 1, it runs thus:—

"Subject to the provisions of this Act, every ryot now in possession or who shall hereafter be admitted by a landholder to possession of ryoti land not being old waste situated in the estate of such landholder shall have a permanent right of occupancy in his holding; but nothing contained in this sub-section shall affect any permanent right of occupancy that may have been acquired in land which was old waste before the commencement of this Act."

Chap. XII of the Act deals with the landlord's private land. Sec. 181 provides that nothing in the previous sections will confer a right of occupancy in the landlord's "private lands," but that nothing in that section shall prevent a landholder from converting his private land into ryoti land. Chap XIV provides that no contract between the landlord and a ryot shall take away the right of an occupancy ryot, or limit his right to use the land as provided by law.

In declaring the rights of the occupancy ryots and emphasizing the distinction between the landlord's "private lands" and "the ryoti" lands, the new Act affirmed the old customary law that had always been recognized by the British administration. . Apart from rules relating to procedure and the jurisdiction of the Revenue Courts, it created one new right in order to settle the constant disputes between landlords and tenants which had been going on for nearly a century; it gave occupancy rights to all ryots in occupation of lands within an "estate" at the time of the passing of the Act. It also gave some security to non-occupancy ryots in the enjoyment of their lands. In other respects, generally speaking, it declared and gave statutory recognition to existing rights and status. One important feature of the Act is worthy of note: it throws into relief the component parts which, from immemorial times, go to constitute a village; first, the lands in the direct cultivation of the proprietor (called by various names); second, lands occupied by tenants or ryots; and third, old waste lands over which by custom the landlord possessed certain specific rights now crystallized in the statute. These remarks do not apply to ryotwari tracts in the direct possession of Government which are let out to mirasidari or hereditary ryots for purposes of cultivation.

SRI CHIDAMBARA SIVAPRAKASA PANDARA SANNADHIGAL v. VEERAMA REDDI.

The existence in a village of pannai lands in which the tenant cannot acquire occupancy rights except by contract, connotes the existence of lands in which he can acquire such rights by prescription.

In the present case the grant itself does not convey in express terms the kudivaram to the grantee. Nor does the term inam, an Arabic word meaning "a reward," give any indication of the intention of the donor, even if he had the right to bestow it on the donee. Primâ facie a zemindar or polygar is a rent-receiver; or, to use the language of sec. 4 of Act I of 1908, he has the right to collect the rent from his tenants. Primâ facie, his right of direct possession of the lands is confined to his "private lands" and the old waste land, it does not extend to "ryoti land."

The place of the cultivating ryots in the agricultural economy of Southern India is thus described in a proceeding of the Board of Revenue of Fort St. George (Madras), dated 5th January 1818.*

"The universally distinguishing character, as well as the chief privilege of this class of people, is their exclusive right to the hereditary possession and usufruct of the soil, so long as they render a certain portion of the produce of the land, in kind or money, as public revenue; and whether rendered in service, in money, or in kind, and whether paid to rajahs, jageerdars, zemindars, polygars, motahdars, shrotriendars, inamdars or Government officers, such as tahsildars, amilars, aumeens, or tanadars, the payments which have always been made by the ryot are universally termed and considered the dues of the Government."

It has been urged on behalf of the Plaintiff that the onus was wrongly placed upon him, and in support of this contention the judgments of this Board, in Suryanarayana v. Pothanna (2), and in Upadrashta Venkata Sastrulu v. Divi Sreetharamudu (3) were relied upon.

In the first case the grant appears to have been made somewhere in the fourteenth century of the Christian era, and it was conclusively proved, on behalf of the Plaintiff, in that suit, that he and his predecessors had since then been in actual occupation of the lands extending over centuries; they had further produced documents showing they had been actually cultivating the land. It was also established from the inam Register that the grant not only included the revenue but also the soil. The Munsif had found on these facts in favour of the Plaintiff, but his judgment was reversed by the District Judge, whose decree was affirmed on second appeal by the High Court. The Board upon a review of the facts established in the case declared that it could not under the above circumstances be assumed that the grant was only a grant of the king's share in the produce of the soil, and did not include the kudivaram. It was a presumption which was certainly not warranted by the facts of the case.

In the subsequent case of Upadrashta Venkata Sastrulu v. Divi Sreetharamudu (3) it was again found upon the evidence that the grant included the kudivaram. Their Lordships say in their judgment delivered by Viscount Cave —

"There is not in any of the documents above referred to any trace of a claim by any person other than the inamdar to a permanent right of occupancy, and the fact that by the terms of the grant the grantee is desired to cultivate the lands and that he is referred to as residing in the village, tend to show that no such right existed in any other person."

"And when the subsequent history of the estate comes to be examined, it is found to be wholly inconsistent with the existence of any permanent occupancy rights. Tenancies have been continually granted by the inamdars for short periods and at variable rents. When tenancy lands were compulsorily acquired by Government and compensation was paid to the agramdar, no claim to compensation was put forward by the tenants. In the year 1904 all the tenants formally relinquished their lands to the Plaintiff and put them in his possession, and from that date until tenancies were granted in the year 1907 the property remained vacant."

In view of those facts the Board overruled the objection that the civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and that under the provisions of sec 189 of the Act the Revenue Courts only had the power to deal with the matter. In dealing with the judgments of the District Judge and of the High Court, their Lordships observed that the two Appellate Courts in India had acted on a supposed presumption of law, that an inam grant of a village, particularly if made to a Brahman, is prima facie a grant of the melavaram right only and does not include the kudivaram, and they pointed out that in the previous case, already referred to,* it was held that no such presumption exists. And then they add:—

"Each case must therefore be considered on its own facts; and in order to ascertain the effect of the grant in the present case, resort must be had to the terms of the grant itself and to the whole circumstances as far as they can now be ascertained."

The question came up again for consideration before the Board in the subsequent case of Seturatnam Aiyer v Venkatachela Goundan (1), to which reference has been made before. That was a suit for ejectment by a mirasidar against the tenants in occupation of the lands in a village granted to him many years ago. As already observed, the mirasidar is himself a cultivating ryot, and the land which is granted to him is for purposes of cultivation in a ryotwari tract. The Defendants contested the claim for ejectment, and alleged that they possessed occupancy rights. A considerable body of evidence was produced on both sides. The District Munsif dismissed the suits, holding that the Defendants had established their prescriptive occupancy rights in the lands in their occupation and under their cultivation. The Munsif found that the Plaintiff's claim to eject the Defendants from the lands in actual cultivation was "barred," but decreed the claim in respect of the pasture land. The decree of the District Munsif was set aside by the District Judge, as he considered the question for consideration in the case was "whether the Defendants had shown that the Plaintiff or his predecessor-in-title had contracted the right of tenancy should be changed into a right of permanent occupancy." And his conclusion was that "in those circumstances I think it clear that the Defendants have not established any contract on the part of the Plaintiff or his predecessor-in-title to convey to them a right of permanent occupancy," and he had accordingly decreed the Plaintiff's claim for possession of the suit lands."

On the appeal of the Defendants, the High Court set aside the decision of the District Judge and remitted the case for a finding on the real point involved in the determination of the case. The learned Judges considered that the question which the District Judge had to consider was whether "on the admitted and undoubted facts of the cases, and the evidence on both sides, the Defendants held the lands in their possession as tenants from year to year or as persons having a right of permanent occupancy."

On the return of his finding the learned Judges of the High Court found that he had omitted to consider the question that had been remitted to him. The following remarks are pertinent to the present case. The learned Judges observed :—

"The District Judge in his order submitting his findings had, notwithstanding the caution given by the High Court, again assumed that the Defendants' original right was that of tenants from year to year, and that it lay on them to prove an express or implied contract by which the right of tenancy from year to year was changed into a right of permanent occupancy."

Without, however, remitting the matter for a proper finding, the High Court proceeded themselves to determine, upon the evidence on the record, the issue. To use the words of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, who delivered the judgment of the Board :—

"If and so far as this was an issue of fact—a point on which it is not necessary to express a definite opinion in the circumstances of this case—the Court had power to deal with it under sec. 103 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908"

The conclusion of the High Court was that the Defendants had established occupancy rights in the land they held, and this Board affirmed its decree.

It will be noticed that neither in the case of Suryanarayana v. Pothanna (2), nor in Seturatnam Aiyer v. Venkatachela Goundan (1), is there a suggestion of a presumption in favour of the inamdar or pattadar on the one side or of the ryot on the other. It was further distinctly pointed out in Upadrashta Venkata Sastrulu v. Divi Sreetharamudu (3) that—

"Each case must, therefore, be considered on its own facts; and in order to ascertain the effect of the grant in the present case [that is the case with which the Board was dealing] resort must be had to the terms of the grant itself and to the whole circumstances so far as they can now be ascertained."

A Full Bench of the Madras High Court, however, has in a recent case [Muthu Goundan v. Perumal Iyer (4)] held that underlying the exposition of their Lordships such an initial presumption is to be inferred. Their Lordships cannot help observing that in drawing this inference the learned Judges are clearly in error. Each case must be dealt with upon its own facts, with special regard to the evidence and circumstances therein.

When the entire evidence on both sides is once before the Court the debate as to onus is purely academical. On this point they desire to associate themselves with the observation of the Board in Seturatnam Aiyer v. Venkatachela Goundan (1) : "The controversy had passed the stage at which discussion as to the burden of proof was pertinent; the relevant facts were before the Court, and all that remained for decision was what inference should be drawn from them."

Dealing now with the facts of the present case, there is first the grant in favour of the Plaintiff-Appellant, the terms of which have already been set out. It does not in express terms grant to the inamdar both rights, melavaram and kudiwaram. It speaks of other villages held by the grantor which it might be inferred from the document were occupied by tenants.

nor does it expressly say that only the melavaram right was granted to the donee. The Defendants contended that they had been from time immemorial in possession of their holdings. They alleged they had been transferring their holdings, whole or in part, from time to time; that the lands had descended to their heirs in succession, and the descendants of the transferees were in possession; that they had partitioned the holdings amongst themselves; that they had made improvements, sunk wells and erected buildings thereon for husbandry and dwelling purposes, and had received compensation when any portion of their holdings were taken by Government for public purposes. Under these circumstances it became essential to have the evidence on both sides in support of the propositions they advanced, and to draw therefrom the right inference. Both sides, as already stated, produced a volume of evidence. The District Munsif considered it in the most exhaustive manner. He found that the village that had been granted to the Plaintiff covered three classes of lands; one was in his own possession and cultivation, another was waste or pasturage, and the third was in the occupation of tenants. He found also that the Plaintiff had for a number of years been fabricating evidence to defeat the rights of the tenants, and had in the course of the trial suppressed material evidence. He found, further, that the Defendants had fully established their contentions that they had been in possession and occupation from before 1829 at least; they had dealt with those lands as occupancy ryots, partitioning their holdings, transferring and mortgaging them with the knowledge and acquiescence of the Plaintiff and his agents; and that they had, in fact, received compensation for lands taken up by Government for part-of their holding which had been acquired for public purposes. From these facts and circumstances he drew the inference that the Defendants had fully established their prescriptive rights of occupancy, and accordingly dismissed the suits by the Plaintiff. His conclusion amounts to this, that, assuming that the onus was on the Defendants, they had fully discharged it.

The officiating Judge, Mr. Thornton, on appeal was apparently bewildered by the volume of decided cases, often inconsistent with each other, of his own High Court, and, therefore, unable to come to a definite conclusion on the facts as established by evidence; he accordingly dealt with the appeals, principally on the basis of onus and presumption.

A part of his judgment in Suit No. 676 (Appeal No. 139 of 1908), throws light on some of the salient facts of the case:—

"9 I do not think the mere circumstance that the Plaintiff admittedly enjoys both warans in the whole of the wet land considering the very small proportion this bears to land under cultivation in the village, is by any means a conclusive argument in his favour. A proprietor almost invariably has some pannai land, and there is no reason why in the case of the plaintiff village the wet land granted to the plaintiff Mutt should have not been the Zemindar's pannai at the time of the grant. The village consists of 255 cawnies, of which 22 cawnies are poramboke and 55 cawnies waste, and even including the land for which muchalikas have been executed on the terms of a year to year tenancy, the Plaintiff is not shown to have both warans in more than about 70 cawnies of the cultivable lands. As the District Munsif points out, the Plaintiff's predecessor-in-title cannot have obtained greater rights from the Zemindar in respect of the tenants who were in possession at the time of the copper-plate grant than he enjoyed himself, and it is not suggested the Turayur Zemindar owned both warans in other villages in his zemin, nor is there anything to show that he was entitled to greater rights in the plaint village than in other villages. Nor can the existence of muchilikas for about 16 cawnies, of which 4 cawnies are described in the Plaintiff's adangal (Exhibit VII) as Mattam Sontham, offer any evidence as to Plaintiff's rights in other lands in the village. The muchilikas, Exhibit N series, are almost all dated after 1893, and little value can attach to documents which came into existence long after the dispute about occupancy right had

"10. I do not think the Defendants can properly be described as purakkudis, as contemplated in XI Madras, p. 77, for both in the present case and in the connected cases, with the exception of the tenant who cultivates the land included in the registers of Uppiliapuram village, the tenants are all residents of the neighbouring village of Koppampatti, of which the plaint village is shown to form part in the Settlement Register of 1896 (Exhibit XXI). Again, though the rates of rent may be higher in the plaint village than in neighbouring villages, now it is clear from Exhibit B (1)—the Inam Register of 1864,—that the rates were fixed at the average rate prevailing in the neighbouring villages, and I agree with the District Munsif in thinking Plaintiff can derive but little support from Exhibits E, J. and H. Lastly, with regard to the land taken up by Government for the road though the Plaintiff received the full value of 96 kuls under Exhibit K, it is doubtful whether Exhibit K (1), which comprises the much large extent of 2 acres 78 kuls, relates to both warams. The recital in the document is that compensation is settled at Rs 100 on account of income and tirwa lost to the Plaintiff, and it is suggested by the Plaintiff's vakil that the expression income and tirwa should be construed to mean both the Kudiwaram and Melwaram. But I see no reason why this should not have been more definitely expressed had it been intended to award compensation for both warams, and the expressions used may, as urged by the Defendant's vakil, be construed with equal fairness to mean that compensation was paid only for the Melwaram. I do not consider the Plaintiff has established he is entitled to both warams in all the cultivated lands in the village, and as he has not proved what the terms of the tenancy are under which the Defendants have cultivated the plaint land, I dismiss the appeal with costs throughout."

In his consideration of the Exs. O1, O2 and O3, which he differing from the Munsif, considered to be genuine, he gave little attention to the reasons the lower Court had assigned for considering them to be fabricated. In these circumstances the High Court deemed it necessary to call upon the officiating District Judge to record another finding on the evidence. The case had to go back twice for the purpose, and in the result Mr. Thornton expressed himself unable to come to any definite conclusion. The High Court were compelled to send down the case again, and it was then taken up by the permanent incumbent, who came to a definite conclusion upon the evidence of the record, and that finding has been affirmed by the High Court.

The case has now been before three Courts in India, and all the Courts have come to the conclusion upon a full consideration of the evidence and all the circumstances that the Plaintiff does not possess the kudiwaram which he claimed against the Defendants, in respect of the lands in their occupation. The Defendants have shown conclusively how they have been dealing with the property for at least a hundred years. They have also shown (and the Munsif has dealt with the subject most exhaustively) that they had received compensation from the Government for lands taken out of their holdings for public purposes. The Plaintiff's evidence has been found to be mostly false or fabricated. In this view of the case their Lordships do not consider it necessary to express any opinion as to whether Act I of 1908 applied to rights in litigation at the time of the passing of the Act. The Defendants clearly acquired their occupancy rights by prescription long before the statute came into force.

Under these circumstances their Lordships think that the conclusion of the High Court is correct, and that these consolidated appeals should be dismissed. In accordance with the terms under which special leave to appeal was granted, the Appellant will pay the Respondents' costs as between solicitor and client. Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

his own possession the previous independent possession of another trespasser; and when possession passes from one trespasser to another, there is a constructive, even if a momentary, restoration of the true title to possession. In view of this principle, even in a case to which Art. 142 applies, the Plaintiff is in time if he can show that the Defendant's possession commenced within twelve years of the suit.

This was an appeal preferred on the 18th of March 1920, against the decree of Babu Debabrata Mukherjée, Officiating Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zillah Dacca, dated the 17th of December 1919, affirming the decree of Babu Bishnu Pada Roy, Munsif, 1st Court at Munshigung, dated the 16th of January 1919.

RICHARDSON, J.—The Plaintiff in this second appeal seeks to recover possession of certain land which had been mortgaged to him by the Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and which he had purchased at a sale held on the 17th July 1905, in execution of a decree on foot of the mortgage. The sale was confirmed on the 18th August. On the 15th December following, possession of the land was delivered to the Plaintiff, and the present suit was brought on the 14th December 1917, that is, more than 12 years after the sale was confirmed, but just within 12 years of the date on which possession was delivered. The two Courts below have concurred in finding that possession was delivered symbolically, or in other words, that the Plaintiff was given not actual but formal possession of the land. Both Courts have therefore concurred in rejecting the allegations of the Plaintiff that he obtained actual possession, that he took settlement of the land from the landlord and that he had afterwards been in possession through burgadars until he was dispossessed by the Defendants in Magh 1318.

The only Defendants who contested the suit were the Defendants Nos. 7, 8 and 9 who are the Appellants before us in this second appeal. One of the defences which they set up was that the suit was barred by limitation, general and special. Both Courts conclude, though their reasoning is somewhat different, that the defence of limitation is not tenable and there are therefore concurrent decrees in the Plaintiff's favour.

The learned Vakil for the Appellant has contended that the present suit is out of time under Art. 138 of the Limitation Act and that the decisions of the Courts below are therefore erroneous. The argument addressed to us makes it necessary to consider what in the circumstances is the appropriate rule of limitation.

The Plaintiff, as we must assume, was never in actual possession, and of the three Appellants-Defendants the only Defendant who claims under the mortgagor Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 is the Defendant No. 7. The Defendants Nos. 8 and 9 set up an independent title derived from the landlord by settlement in the year 1914.

As to the Defendants Nos. 8 and 9, they were no parties to the mortgage suit or to the proceedings in execution of the decree in that suit. If therefore the law is correctly laid down in the case of Khiroda Kanta Roy v. Krishnadas Laha (1), Art. 138 of the Limitation Act has no application to the present suit as against them. Inasmuch as the Plaintiff was never in actual possession, Art. 142 can have no application, and the only other article on which these Defendants can rely is the residuary Art. No. 144. Under that article the Burden was on them to show that they had been in possession of the land adversely to the Plaintiff for twelve years before suit brought. Obviously they cannot establish any such case.

The learned Vakil for these Appellants has contended that because the Plaintiff came into Court asserting possession obtained and subsequent dispossession, therefore he is bound by his pleadings and must stand or fall under Art. 142. In support of that proposition he referred to the decisions of the Privy Council in Mohima Chandra Mozumdar v. Mohesh Chandra Neogy (2) and Dharani Kanta Lahiri Chowdhuri v. Gahar Ali Khan (3). But the nature of the title set up and the claim made by the Plaintiffs in those cases necessarily involved a previous actual possession and a subsequent dispossession by the Defendants. Such cases are very different from cases like the present. Here if the Plaintiff alleged that actual possession was delivered to him by the Court, the Defendants successfully denied that allegation. Actual possession is not in the circumstances necessary to the Plaintiff's success and we are at liberty to apply the rule of limitation appropriate to the fact found, namely, that he never had more than symbolical possession.

I have dealt with the point on the lines on which it was argued but I will add that in the view I should be disposed to take, even if Art. 142 were applied, the Plaintiff would still succeed. In each of the cases cited if it had first been shown that the true title was in the Plaintiff and if it had then been proved or admitted that the possession of the Defendant trespasser had commenced within the period of 12 years before suit, the Plaintiff would, I think, have won. As I understand the principle applicable, one trespasser cannot add to his own possession the previous independent possession of another trespasser. When the possession passes from the first to the second trespasser, there is a constructive restoration, even if a momentary restoration, of the true title to possession. So here, it not being disputed that the true title is with the Plaintiff, the fact that the Defendants' possession commenced within 12 years of the suit should entitle him to succeed.

In my opinion, therefore, as against the Defendants Nos. 8 and 9 the suit is within time and the appeal, so far as they are concerned, must be dismissed.

As to the Defendant No. 7 his case stands on a somewhat different footing. It is not very clear from the judgment of the Court below but we have been told by the learned Vakil for the Appellant, and the statement has not been controverted on the other side that the Defendant No. 7 claims the land or a share in the land through or under the Defendants Nos. 1 to 3. If that be so, then as against this Defendant the article applicable would prima facie be Art. 138. The answer made for the Plaintiff is that if the Defendant No. 7 is actually or constructively a party to the decree in execution of which the land was sold then the Plaintiff is entitled as against him to treat the delivery of symbolical possession as equivalent to the delivery of actual possession. In virtue of such possession the article applicable ceases to be Art. 188 and becomes Art. 142, under which the Plaintiff is in time. As authority for this position, reference has been made to the Full Bench decisions of this Court in Jagabandhu Mukherji v. Ram Chandra Bysack (4) and Jagabandhu Mitter v. Purnanand Goswami (5) and to the decision of the Privy Council in Thakur Sri Sri Radha Krishna Chanderjee v. Ram Bahadur (6).

The learned Vakil for the Defendant No. 7 has endeavoured to escape from these rulings. He has cited the cases of Mohadev Sakharam Parkar v. Janu Naurji Hath (7) and Sridhar Mudlavrao Dhopakar v. Ganpati Panja Godse (8) decided by the Bombay High Court. In those cases a distinction is drawn as regards the right of the purchaser at a sale in execution of immoveable property in certain circumstances to actual possession and in other circumstances to formal or symbolical possession. The view of the Bombay High Court seems to be that the decisions of this Court and of the Privy Council to which I have referred only apply to those cases in which the purchaser at the auction sale is entitled in the circumstances to delivery of formal possession. This point, however, does not appear to have been raised in either of the Courts below. Its determination might well involve questions of fact which have not been investigated. There is no finding in the judgments of the Courts below as to the state of the possession at the time when possession was formally delivered to the Plaintiff. We do not know whether there were or were not at that time any tenants on the land under the Defendants

Nos. 1 to 3, and not bound by the decree against those Defendants in the mortgage suit.

It is conceded that there is no authority in this Court for the distinction recognized in the Bombay cases and in the present case at any rate. I am not prepared to consider whether any such distinction would be consistent with the view taken in decisions of this Court by which I am bound and which have received the approval of the Privy Council.

I hold that the suit as against Defendant No. 7 is within time inasmuch as it was brought within 12 years of the date on which formal possession was given to the Plaintiff.

As a last resort the learned Vakil for the Appellant argued that his clients are entitled to the benefit of the limitation prescribed by Art 3 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act. As regards that argument it is sufficient to refer to the language of the article which gives the Plaintiff two years to recover possession of land which he claims as raiyat, the two years to be counted from the date on which the Plaintiff was dispossessed, and to add that the article must be read with reference to the facts of this case which I have already stated. Nor can I see any ground in the judgments of the Courts below for the suggestion that if the Plaintiff was ever dispossessed the landlord had anything to do with the matter. It is familiar law that the article in question has no application in a suit between two tenants unless the dispossession of the Plaintiff tenant can be attributed to the agency of the landlord. The cases on the subject will be found collected in Haran Chandra Barai v. Madan Mohan Barai (9).

For the reasons which I have en-

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 927 OF 1920.

RICHARDSON, J.
SUHWARWADY, J.
1922,

Heard, 25, May.

Judgment,

15, June.

ARJUN CHANDRA
BHADRA, Plaintiff,
Appellant,

v.

KAILAS CHANDRA DAS
and ors., Defendants,
Respondents.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 70, executant's admission of his signature, coupled with a denial of the presence of attesting witnesses, if amounts to "an admission of execution by himself," within the meaning of the section—"Execution," meaning of.

In a suit for enforcing a simple mortgage bond, the Defendant admitted his own signature on the bond but denied execution in the presence of attesting witnesses. No attesting witness was examined and the suit was dismissed on the ground that there was no reliable evidence to show that the bond was executed in the presence of two attesting witnesses.

Held, per RICHARDSON, J—That an admission of execution is sufficient proof as against the party making the admission and dispenses with the necessity for calling an attesting witness or giving any other evidence.

NIBARAN v. RAM (5) and SATISH v. JOGENDRA (4) followed JOGENDRA v. NITAI (3) referred to.

But the case is different when the admission of the signature is coupled with an express denial that the document was signed in the presence of the attesting witnesses. The policy of the law makes the ceremony of attestation essential to the validity of a mortgage instrument, and no admission of execution is effected under sec. 70 of the Evidence Act unless it amounts to an acknowledgment of the formal validity of the instrument. What the Defendant said in the present case amounted not so much to an admission of execution as a denial of execution.

"Execution" of a document means something more than the mere signing by the party. It must certainly include delivery, and it also includes signing in the presence of witnesses where witnesses are necessary.

SHAMU PATER v. ABDUL KADIR (1) referred to.

Per SUHWARWADY, J—Sec 70 of the Evidence Act qualifies sec 68 of the Act but does not affect or control sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, which is a later enactment. Hence it follows that whatever may be the meaning, technical or ordinary, of the term "execution," the word is used in sec 70 of the Evidence Act in the sense of due execution or execution in the way in which a particular document is required to be executed, and admission of execution means execution in the manner in which a document is required by law to be executed.

This was an appeal preferred on the 12th of April 1920, against the decree of Babu Rajendra Lal Sadhu, Subordinate Judge of Zillah Jessore, dated the 22nd of December 1919, affirming the decree of Babu Jnanendra Nath Ghosh, Officiating Munsif, 3rd Court at Narail, dated the 14th of December 1918.

ing to create a simple mortgage as security for a loan. Before any witnesses were examined, the Defendant admitted his own signature on the bond but expressly denied execution in the presence of attesting witnesses and contended that it could not therefore take effect as a mortgage bond. Evidence was adduced by the Plaintiff but no attesting witnesses were examined. The trial Court dismissed the suit holding that the transaction was fraudulent and without consideration. The lower Appellate Court, however, held on the evidence that there was consideration for the bond and it was not a fraudulent document, but he dismissed the suit on the ground that there was no reliable evidence to show that the bond was executed in the presence of two attesting witnesses. Against this decision the present second appeal was preferred to the High Court.

Babu Prokash Chandra Pakrasi for the Appellant.

Babu Narendra Kumar Bose for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

RICHARDSON, J.—This is a second appeal.

The Plaintiff who is the Appellant before us seeks to recover the amount due under a bond purporting to create a simple mortgage as security for a loan made by the Plaintiff to the Defendant. The plaint was filed more than six years but less than twelve years after the date fixed for repayment.

The trial Court, holding that the transaction was fraudulent and collusive and without consideration, dismissed the suit.

The learned Subordinate Judge in the lower Appellate Court found on the evidence that there was consideration for the bond and that it was not a fraudulent and collusive document. He was of opinion, however, that there was no reliable evidence to show that the bond was executed in the presence of two attesting witnesses and he accordingly confirmed the Munsif's decree of dismissal.

It appears that at the hearing in the trial Court before any witnesses were examined, the Defendant admitted his own signature on the bond but expressly denied execution in the presence of attesting witnesses. The entry in the order-sheet, under date 2nd December 1918, is as follows :—

"Parties ready, Defendant admits to have executed the bond but contends that it was not duly attested and so it cannot take effect as a mortgage bond. Plaintiff to adduce evidence."

Evidence was adduced by the Plaintiff but no attesting witness was examined.

The bond in suit is one which under sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act required attestation and on the face of it, it was duly signed by the mortgagor and attested by witnesses. It is settled law, however, that such an instrument is not duly executed and cannot operate as a mortgage or create a charge unless it be in fact signed by the mortgagor in the presence of at least two attesting witnesses [Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir (1) and Ganga Prosad Singh v. Ishri Prosad (2)].

The short point arises, not apparently covered by authority, whether the Defendant's admission amounts to "an admission of execution by himself" within the meaning of sec. 70 of the Evidence Act.

Under sec. 68 of the Evidence Act,

(1) L. R. 39 I. A. 218; s. c. I. L. R. 35 Mad. 607; 16 C. W. N. 1009 (1912).

ARJUN CHANDRA BHADRA v. KAILAS CHANDRA DAS.

"If a document is required by law to be attested, it shall not be used as evidence until one attesting witness at least has been called for the purpose of proving its execution, if there be an attesting witness alive and subject to the process of the Court and capable of giving evidence."

By sec. 71, "If the attesting witness denies or does not recollect the execution of the document, its execution may be proved by other evidence."

But by sec. 70, "The admission of a party to an attested document of its execution by himself shall be sufficient proof of its execution as against him, though it be a document required by law to be attested."

It is not suggested on the part of the Plaintiff that there was no attesting witness available. The contention is that the Defendant's admission is sufficient proof of the mortgage as against him and that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that it was necessary to call an attesting witness or otherwise to prove attestation.

As to the cases to which reference was made in the argument the dictum in Jogendra Nath Mukhapadhaya v. Nitai Churn Bundapadhaya (3) has not been followed. The learned Judges (Banerjee and Geidt, JJ.) seem to have been of opinion that an admission within sec. 70 of the Evidence Act would not dispense with independent proof of attestation. But the case went off on the finding of fact that the instrument had been duly attested, and in Satish Chandra Mitra v. Jogendra Nath Mahala Navis (4), Woodroffe, J., took occasion by way of observation, to express his disagreement with the view of the learned Judges. "That decision," he said, "is open to this construction that even when the executant admits execution his admission is proof of execution of signing only and does not dispense with proof of attestation as against him. If this be the meaning of that judgment, I am unable to agree with it, as I think that the admission of the executant has the effect of dispensing with the proof of attestation as against him. For if the admission of execution is to be understood only in the sense of admission of signing, then there was no necessity for sec. 70 at all, regard being had to the general provisions of the Evidence Act relating to admissions. This is also indicated by the last words of sec. 70, "though it be a document required by law to be attested."

In Nibaran Chandra Sen v. Ram Chandra (5), N. Chatterjea, J. and myself held, in accordance with the dictum of Woodroffe, J., that an admission of execution was sufficient proof as against the party making the admission and dispensed with the necessity for calling an attesting witness or giving any other evidence. But the admission there was an admission of execution plain and simple, capable of being construed as an admission of due execution in the presence of the attesting witnesses.

The case is different when the admission of the signature is coupled with an express denial, that the document was signed in the presence of the attesting witnesses. The policy of the law makes the ceremony of attestation essential to the validity of a mortgage instrument. Where the mortgagor denies his signature it is not sufficient to prove the hand-writing. It must also be proved that he affixed his signature in the presence of the attesting witnesses.

ARJUN CHANDRA BHADRA, v. KAILAS CHANDRA DAS.

I have little doubt that the words "the admission of a party to an attested document" mean the admission of a party to a document which is on the face of it an attested document. To say that they mean the admission of a party to a document which is proved or admitted to be an attested document (that is, proved or admitted independently of the admission of execution) makes the section, as Woodroffe, J. points out, meaningless or superfluous. Attestation can hardly be proved or admitted without proof or admission of the signature attested. On the other hand, the concluding words "though it be a document required by law to be attested" may be understood as referring back to sec 68. The admission of execution by a party to an attested document is to be sufficient proof of its execution as against him and the requirement of sec 68 that an attesting witness must be called is dispensed with. These provisions in the Evidence Act deal with the method of proof. But the force of the word "execution" has still to be considered and in my opinion no admission of execution is effectual under sec 70 unless it amounts to an acknowledgment of the formal validity of the instrument. What the Defendant said in the present case amounts not so much to an admission of execution as a denial of execution.

In Wharton's Law Lexicon, the execution of deeds is defined as "the signing, sealing and delivering of them by the parties as their own acts and deeds in the presence of witnesses," and a similar explanation is given in regard to the execution of Wills.

In the Oxford Dictionary, the meaning attributed to the verb "execute" in the present connection is, "to go through the formalities necessary to the validity of (a act, e.g., a bequest, agreement, mortgage, etc.) Hence to complete or give validity to (the instrument by which such act is effected) by performing what the law requires to be done as by signing, sealing, etc

Sealing is not generally speaking necessary in India but the execution of a document must still mean something more than the mere signing by the party. It must certainly include delivery, and I think it also includes signing in the presence of witnesses, where witnesses are necessary. In sec 71, for instance, proving execution includes proof of the necessary formalities.

It may be said that the expression used in sec 70 is "execution by himself." The added words "by himself" seem to me to make no difference. The word used is "execution" and not "signature." Sec 69 which deals with the case where no attesting witness is available, speaks of "the signature of the person executing the document."

Where the admission of execution is unqualified it may well be equivalent to an admission of due execution or a waiver of proof of due execution within sec. 70. But the carefully guarded statement which the Defendant made in the present case does not in my opinion entitle the Plaintiff to the benefit of sec 70. It was said that it was hard on the Plaintiff that a mere technicality should deprive him of his money. On the merits, however, the Courts below took different sides and though we have no jurisdiction to question, and I do not question, the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge, that the merits lie with the Plaintiff, the principle still is that formalities imposed by the law as barriers against perjury and fraud, Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir (1) must be strictly observed. It is the Plaintiff's own fault that he did not call an attesting witness to meet the Defendant's challenge of the attestation of the document.

In the result, I would confirm the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss this appeal. As to cost I am not sure that we ought not to follow the ordinary rule but the order we make is that there should be no costs of this appeal.

SUHWARADY, J.—I am of the same opinion. Sec 59 of the Transfer of Property Act requires that a mortgage bond must be attested. Sec 68 of the Evidence Act provides for the mode of proof of a document required by law to be attested. Sec 70 of the Evidence Act provides an exception or proviso to the general rule of procedure laid down in sec 68, viz., where the executant admits that a document was executed by him, i.e., executed according to law, no further proof of execution is necessary. Sec 70 of the Evidence Act thus qualifies sec 68 of the Act but does not affect or control sec. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act which is a later enactment. Hence it follows that whatever may be the meaning, technical or ordinary, of the term 'execution,' the word is used in sec. 70 of the Evidence Act in the sense of due execution or execution in the way in which a particular document is required to be executed. The admission, therefore, as contemplated in sec. 70, is admission of execution in the manner in which a document required by law to be attested is to be executed.

In this view of the law, I agree with the conclusion arrived at by my learned brother and dismiss this appeal.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. NO. 787 OF 1922.

NEWBOULD, J. ABHOY MONDAL and ors., SUHWARADY, J. 2nd party, Petitioners,
v.
1922, BASU RAI and ors., 1st
22, November. party, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 145, Magistrate in declaring possession, if can question validity of a Civil Court decree—Symbolical possession, value of, in such proceeding.

B obtained a decree against A in a Civil Court and got symbolical possession of certain land in execution of the decree. In a subsequent proceeding between the parties under sec. 145, Criminal Procedure Code, the Magistrate declared possession with A thinking that the Civil Court decree could be ignored as the said Civil Court had no jurisdiction over the land and because the delivery of possession was symbolical:

Held—That in a proceeding under sec. 145, Cr P. C., the Magistrate could not go behind the decision of the Civil Court in the matter and could not ignore the decree though the Court passing the decree had no jurisdiction over the land. Also when the decree was inter partes, it was immaterial that the delivery of possession was symbolical only.

This was a Rule granted under sec. 107 of the Government of India Act, against an order of Mr S. C. Chatterjee, Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Bankura, dated the 8th August 1922, in a proceeding under sec. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The facts of the case were as follows:—In the settlement record-of-rights certain lands were recorded to be in the possession of the Opposite Party. But subsequent to the publication of the record-of-rights the Petitioners obtained a decree against the Opposite Party in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Purulia and in execution of that decree, they were put in symbolical possession of the disputed land. In a subsequent proceeding between the parties under sec. 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Bankura passed the following order :—

“ The dispute has a long history. As early as 1323 B. S. there was a criminal case about this land in which Basu Rai was the complainant and Madhu Mondal and others of the second party were fined. This was followed by a damage suit by Basu Rai which was decreed and the appeal of the second party dismissed.

Then there was a civil suit instituted by Madhu Mondal and others in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Purulia, which was decreed in their favour and against Basu Rai. The latter fought up to the High Court but to no effect.

Basu Rai, however, has got parchas during recent settlement and it appears from the order of the Superintendent of Survey, Purulia, (before whom Madhu Mondal and others filed a decree) that the disputed land appertains to mauza Upargara village, Bankura District. I am therefore of opinion that the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Purulia in respect of lands situated outside his territorial jurisdiction is of no value.

It appears that during recent settlement operation in this District the first party were found in possession and obtained parchas which have been finally published. I rely on this and find Basu Rai and others in possession of the disputed land and declare them to be in possession and hereby forbid all disturbance of the same.

I also direct the second party to pay Rs 15 fifteen as costs of this case to the first party.”

Against the above order the Petitioners moved the High Court and obtained the present Rule.

Babus Manmatha Nath Mookherjee and Harendra Kumar Sarbadhikary for the Petitioners.

Babu Narendra Kumar Bose for the Opposite Party No. 1.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Rule is directed against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Bankura declaring the first party, the Opposite Party before us, to be in possession of certain lands under sec 145, Cr. P. C. The Magistrate has passed his order on the record-of-rights published in the Settlement proceedings which recorded the possession of this party. But subsequent to the publication of this record-of-rights, it appears that the second party who are the Petitioners before us obtained a decree against the first party in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Purulia and in execution of that decree they were put in possession of the disputed land. This Court has repeatedly held that in a proceeding under sec 145, Cr. P. C., the Magistrate cannot go behind the decision of the Civil Court in the matter. The Magistrate here has erred in thinking that the decree can be ignored because the Subordinate Judge of Purulia had no jurisdiction over this land and because the delivery of possession was symbolical. It is not for the Magistrate to question the validity of a decree that has not been set aside by a competent Court. Also when the decree is inter partes it is immaterial whether the delivery of possession is symbolical or not. We hold that in this case in disregarding this delivery of possession the Magistrate acted with gross irregularity and in a manner that was likely to cause a failure of justice.

We accordingly make this Rule absolute and set aside the order of the Magistrate declaring the first party to be in possession

v.

MUSAMMAT SHYAM

Respondents.

Hindu law—Mitakshara—Woman's estate—Power of alienation—Legal necessity—Compromise by limited owner, when valid.

The necessity for which a Hindu woman in possession of property as a limited owner can alienate such property does not mean actual compulsion, but the kind of pressure which law recognises as serious and sufficient.

A compromise made bonâ fide for the benefit of the estate and not for the personal advantage of the limited owner will bind the reversioner just as much as a decree on contest.

This was an appeal against the decree of the High Court of Judicature at Patna, dated the 9th August 1918, which affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Darbhanga, dated the 21st December 1914 and made in Suit No. 277 of 1912.

The said suit was brought by the present Appellants who were the reversionary heirs to the estate of the late husband of the first Defendant for a declaration of their rights as such in certain property as forming part of his estate, and for other relief.

The decrees of the Indian Courts were against the Plaintiffs who preferred the present appeal.

The first Respondent was the widow of Brij Mohan Lal who died without issue on 22nd December 1895 and the Appellants were the nearest male heirs of the said deceased entitled to succeed to his estate on the death of the widow. The said parties were Hindus and it had been concurrently found that they were governed by the Mitakshara law of Benares.

The question on the appeal was as to the validity against the Appellants of a transaction (described below) by the widow in respect of part of Brij Mohan's estate in favour of others of the Respondents. The case for the Appellants was that the said transaction was beyond the power of a widow in possession of her husband's estate.

Brij Mohan Lal held two mortgages on the property now in question from the second and third Respondents who covenanted that it was unencumbered. There proved, however, to be an outstanding charge in favour of Raja Rameswar Singh. In 1895 Brij Mohan Lal brought a suit for sale on his mortgages against the mortgagors and the said Raja. He died on 22nd December 1895 pending the suit which was continued by the present first Respondent as his representative. In 1901 after the decision on appeal of Sham Kumari v Raja Rameswar (6), a final decree was passed for the Plaintiff against the mortgagors but it was thereby declared that the Raja's charge was entitled to priority.

Under the said decree the present first

Respondent discharged the prior encumbrance by a payment of Rs. 25,000 and then obtained a final order for sale of the mortgage premises as unencumbered property to realise the sum of Rs. 1,41,959 then due under the decree. The sale was held on the 20th June 1912 and the present first Respondent having obtained leave to bid thereat became the purchaser for the sum of Rs. 65,075 of the thirteen mouzas which constituted the mortgage properties. There remained a sum of Rs. 76,000 due by the mortgagors. Then followed the transaction to which the present suit related—the effect of which (shortly stated) was that the widow gave up the land for Rs. 66,000 and released all the balance of the decretal debt for a mortgage of Rs. 5,000.

Meanwhile on the 23rd August 1912 the present Appellants instituted in the said subordinate Court the present suit against the widow, Defendant No. 1, the judgment-debtors, Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and the purchasers, Defendants Nos. 4-11. In their plaint they set out the facts of the case and prayed that the order entering up satisfaction be vacated and their rights should be declared and asked for an injunction and for further and other relief.

On the 21st December 1911, the Subordinate Judge delivered his judgment and passed a decree dismissing the suit. He thought that the Plaintiffs had not made out their claim. He was of opinion, and the High Court agreed, that the widow's main idea was to spare as far as possible the judgment-debtor. He adds, however: "In order to establish that the Plaintiffs have a right to come, they are bound to show that proceedings were sham and carried on for the purpose of destroying their rights," and thus he finds had not been proved.

Against the said decree the present Appellants preferred an appeal to the High Court, but the same was dismissed by a decree, dated the 9th August 1918.

On the said appeal, Mr. Justice Roe delivered the leading judgment. He said: "The whole question seems to me to be one of burden of proof," and he came to the conclusion on the authority of the cases cited that the burden of proof was on the Plaintiffs to show that the "compromise" entered into by the widow was entered into collusively for the purpose of conferring upon herself benefit at the expense of the estate and that they had failed to discharge such burden.

Against the said decree of the High Court the present appeal was preferred by the Plaintiffs in the ordinary course.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellants—On the purchase by the widow of the villages they became immoveable property in which the reversioners were entitled to share. She had no right to have it converted into money which she might dissipate. Further the price obtained for the villages on re-sale would have been greater had she waited for a better market.

The widow had no power to compromise.

Lekraj Roy v Baboo Mahtab Chand (8) refer to compromises sanctioned under sec. 344 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882.

The present case is not so much a compromise of a money claim as an alienation of immoveable property which the widow had obtained.

In Mohendia Nath Biswas v Shan-sunnessa Khatun (5) the view of the High Court was no doubt adverse to my contention but the Court was constrained to take that view through a misunderstanding of the decision in Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (3).

Even if a compromise is possible this one was not for the benefit of the estate, for admittedly the widow's motive was to benefit her poor relations.

Then LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by LORD PHILLIMORE -- The question raised on this appeal is whether the reversionary heirs of one Bij Mohan Lal can recover possession of certain property which is said to have been alienated by his widow as one of the terms of a compromise of litigation originally brought by Bij Mohan Lal and continued by his widow after his death. He had begun the suit on the 18th July 1895, and died on the 22nd December. The suit was brought to enforce two mortgage bonds. There was a claim by a prior mortgagee which eventually came up before this Board, and resulted in a decree which was generally favourable to the widow, but required her to pay into Court a considerable sum to the credit of this first mortgagee. She paid this, and then proceeded to execute a decree for recovery of what was due to her on the mortgage bonds, which was ascertained by the decree to be the sum of Rs. 141,959. Six of the properties were then put up for auction on the 20th June 1912, the widow having leave to bid; and she bought them for the sum of Rs. 65,075. Thereupon the judgment-debtors filed a petition in objection to the sale, and the widow came to the compromise which is now impeached.

By this compromise she agreed that the sale of the six properties should be set aside, and that the judgment-debtors should be allowed to sell them again to certain proposed purchasers for a sum total of Rs. 66,000 to be paid over to her. It was further provided that the two other properties should be hers to sell and make what she could of them, it being estimated that she would probably obtain Rs. 5,000. The rest of the debt, Rs. 70,259, was remitted.

The reversioners, hearing of this transaction, applied for leave to intervene in the suit and oppose, but were refused, all their rights being reserved. Thereupon the present suit was instituted by them, praying that the order entering satisfaction of the judgment debts should be vacated, for a declaration of their rights and for an injunction and further or other relief. They said that the sale was fraudulent, collusive and illegal.

The widow, the judgment-debtors and the purchasers from the judgment-debtors all appeared and defended. One of the points set up on behalf of the Defendants was that the widow's husband's family was governed by the Mithila School of Hindu law, which gives larger powers to a Hindu woman when an estate is vested in her than she gets under the Mitakshara. This was negatived by both Courts—and need not now be considered.

On the other hand, both Courts have found that there was no fraud or collusion, and have taken the view that the compromise should stand, and have dismissed the suit. The principal ground on which the supposed fraud rested was that the properties released being worth considerably more than Rs 66,000, the purchasers from the judgment-debtors had obtained very advantageous bargains, and that one of these purchasers was the widow's brother. Both Courts, however, having negatived fraud, it would require an exceptionally strong case to induce this Board to take a contrary view, and indeed the Appellants have not ventured to question this part of the decision.

The points further to be decided are, first of all, whether the widow or anyone holding what is known as a Hindu woman's estate, especially perhaps if that estate consists of immoveable property, can compromise in any circumstances, and secondly, whether this compromise is sufficiently reasonable for the Courts to allow it to stand.

Then Lordships have been invited in an elaborate argument which has reviewed all the authorities to hold either that there is no such power of compromise at all, or that a compromise which results in the surrender of land must be treated on the footing that such an alienation is on the same footing with other alienations of land which the holder of a Hindu woman's estate can make, namely, that they are justifiable by necessity and necessity only.

It should be observed in limine that the word necessity, when used in this connection, has a somewhat special, almost technical, meaning. A widow can alienate if there are no other means available for the obligatory ceremonies to secure the repose of the soul of her husband. A holder of a Hindu woman's estate can in some circumstances alienate immoveable property to pay the last owner's debts, or (if there is no other available source of supply) for her own or infant children's maintenance. Necessity does not mean actual compulsion, but the kind of pressure which the law recognises as serious and sufficient.

Bearing this in mind their Lordships will proceed to consider whether an alienation, which is the result of a compromise or the mode by which a compromise is carried into effect, should, if the compromise be reasonable and prudent, and for the interest of the estate, fall within the power of the holder of a Hindu woman's estate, either as being an alienation which is to be deemed to be induced by necessity, or as being in a parallel position to an alienation induced by necessity. It may be observed at once that the argument which would refuse authority to compromise in any case would have very extreme consequences. A Hindu woman might be party to a litigation concerning considerable immoveable property, might be successful in the first Court and be threatened with an appeal, and have then a suggestion from the adversary that if she would part with a single item of property or a few bighas he would let the judgment stand. She would have, if the argument were sound, to refuse the suggested compromise, and be prepared to fight the case up to the Privy Council. Or it might be put in another way. Her opponent could never suggest a compromise, because he would know that any compromise would be upset. It would be very undesirable in the interests of property owners that this extreme doctrine should be upheld and their Lordships, after consideration of the authorities that have been cited to them, are glad to find that they are not driven to any such extreme position.

The case of Katama Natchuar v. The Rajah of Shiragunga (1), decided in 1861, which has been brought to their Lordships' notice, has no direct bearing upon the point now to be discussed, but it is perhaps useful as an introductory statement. Their Lordships there held that a decree fairly and properly obtained against a widow binds the succeeding heirs because the whole estate is for the time vested in her, absolutely for some purposes, though in some respects for a qualified interest, and because until her death it could not be ascertained who would be entitled to succeed (p. 601).

In Tarnee Churn Gangooly v. Watson & Co. (2), decided in 1859, the High Court at Calcutta had to deal with the case of a widow who was under age and had a minor son and the judges held that if she was properly represented in the suit they must treat the matter as standing precisely as if she had been of age, and had acted on her own behalf, that it was erroneous to look upon the transaction simply as an alienation by her, and that she had full power to compromise a suit or even to have entered into a compromise before the suit was brought.

In Khunni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (3), decided in 1911, an agreement of compromise was made between the daughters of the pre-deceased son of a convert from Hinduism to Mahomedanism, and his heir-at-law, by which the property was divided into certain shares between the daughters and the alleged heir-at-law. After the death of the daughters, the heirs in reversion claimed the estate against the derivative purchasers from the heir-at-law, putting their case in this way, that the heir-at-law's title came under an alienation made by the daughters without justifying necessity, and that therefore neither he nor his derivative purchasers could hold the property. This Board held that the compromise on its true construction did not mean an alienation, and that it was not right to say that the heir-at-law or the derivative purchasers derived a title from the daughters. It is obvious that to put it as the Respondents in that case did, that the purchasers derived title from the daughters, was begging the question. The property belonged to one or other, or possibly both, of the parties to the dispute, and the compromise proceeded upon the footing that it was uncertain in which of them the title was. As their Lordships put it, it was based on the assumption that there was an antecedent title of some kind in the parties, and the agreement acknowledged and defined what that title was.

It was contended in the present appeal that this Board had laid down in the case of Imrit Kooner v. Roop Narain Singh (4), decided in 1880, "that it is clear that daughters could not be bound by a compromise made by the widow under any circumstances", but it must be remembered what that case really was. In a dispute between a person claiming to be an adopted son of the previous owner and the widow and her daughters who would have titles after her, the widow gave up her daughters' rights in consideration of her own remaining practically unimpaired. Such a compromise obviously could not stand; indeed it is not a compromise at all. If the language in the sentence quoted is rather wide, no one referring to the case in full could be misled by it.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the true doctrine is laid down in Mohendra Nath Biswas v Shansunnessa Khatum (5), decided in 1914. A compromise made bonâ fide for the benefit of the estate and not for the personal advantage of the limited owner will bind the reversioner quite as much as a decree on contest.

Thus being so, their Lordships proceed to enquire whether this compromise is one that can be supported on these principles. At the outset it is a startling one. Assuming, as upon the whole appears to be the case, that the two reserved properties were worth the Rs. 5,000 for which they were to stand, the widow took for the estate Rs. 66,000, plus Rs. 5,000, or Rs. 71,000 in all, and gave up all but as much, Rs. 70,959. Moreover, her petition to the Court presented in pursuance of the compromise in order to effect the necessary entries on the Court register, states, and the widow herself has stated in evidence, that one of her motives was the fact that the judgment-debtors were related to her and belonged to a respectable family, which she did not wish absolutely to impoverish, and that she gave up her rights after an entreaty by one of the judgment-debtors, who said that he had no property left. On the other hand, it does not appear that the judgment-debtor or debtors had any available property; one was said to have nothing but the house he lived in, which was itself encumbered.

Then comes the question, what was the value of the property released? It would have been easy for either party to have produced evidence nearly conclusive upon this point, but they have failed to do so, and the Courts have been left to a series of inferences. The sub-sales were for Rs. 69,000, and if we are to take it that there was no fraud, it is reasonable to suppose that this would be the full value, not perhaps as between willing purchasers and willing sellers if an undisputed title were conveyed but very likely as much as the widow would have realized if she had re-sold, and if this be the case, all that she has given up is Rs. 3,000. While, therefore, giving all weight as against the validity of the compromise to the point that the widow was partially actuated by motives which, however laudable in themselves, did not entitle her to give up property in which she had only a partial interest, their Lordships do not see that a concession of Rs. 3,000 out of Rs. 69,000 to buy off the opposition of the judgment-debtors, which had crystallized into a petition of objection, was otherwise than reasonable.

Litigation in respect of this very subject-matter had already once taken the widow to the Privy Council, and though the objections of the judgment-debtors were of the stock kind and not likely to prevail, still with judgment-debtors who had little or nothing to lose it was likely that their objections would have been carried as far as the High Court.

Their Lordships do not find it necessary to consider whether the judgment of the High Court, in so far as it places the burden of proof upon the present Appellants, is absolutely and without qualification sound, but upon the facts found by both Courts in India they agree in the conclusion to which those Courts came.

RAMSUMRAN PRASAD v. MUSAMMAT SHYAM KUMARI.

One further observation should be made. It was suggested in argument for the Appellants that there was a greater sanctity in immoveable than in moveable property forming the estate of a deceased Hindu. If this be the case, as to which then Lordships do not find it necessary to pronounce, it would be carrying technicality to an excess to consider this property as immoveable property. In the hands of the deceased and in the hands of the widow till the sale it was money secured by a mortgage on immoveable property. For a very brief period it might be said that the widow had converted the property by her purchase at the sale; but even this can hardly be said. The sale had not been confirmed and the compromise was upon the very point whether it should be confirmed that is, whether the property should be converted. In these circumstances there is no substance in the suggestion that the compromise is more difficult to uphold because it resulted in an alienation of immoveable rather than of moveable property.

Then Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal be dismissed with one set of costs.

Appellants,

v.

MAKSUDAN CHOW-

DHURY and ors.,

Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 278, order under, but to suit after it has become final, even though wrong.

Certain properties were mortgaged to L by a deed of 10th January 1882. On 21st March 1885 the properties were again mortgaged to L by a deed which expressly provided that the mortgage of 10th January 1882 should continue. L sued on both mortgages and got a decree under sec 88 of the Transfer of Property Act for sale of the mortgaged properties on 12th February 1886 and had the properties attached on 20th May 1886. Meanwhile one K had obtained a money decree against the mortgagor on 2nd April 1884 and having attached the properties on 27th June 1884 in execution thereof had the properties sold and purchased them on 16th August 1884. On 8th September 1886, K objected to the attachment by L under sec 278 of the Civil Procedure Code. On 14th September 1886, the Court passed order exempting the properties purchased by K from L's attachment. L did not appeal against the order. On 10th January 1912, the Plaintiffs, who meanwhile had purchased L's decree, executed it and purported to purchase the properties in execution thereof in proceedings to which K or his representatives were not parties, sued to recover from the latter possession of the properties on the strength of such purchase:

SARJU PRASAD MISSION & MAKSDAN CHOWDHURY.

Held That it was unnecessary to enquire whether the order of 11th September 1886 was right or wrong. Not having been appealed from, the order became final and binding upon L and upon those who claimed title under L.

These were consolidated appeals from two decrees of the High Court at Patna, dated the 30th July 1917, which reversed a decree of the District Judge of Darbhanga, dated the 21st May 1914, and dismissed the suit brought by the Plaintiffs who were the present Appellants.

The said suit was brought for recovery of possession of certain property known as mauza Bhandarson and for mesne profits.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment of the Board.

Mr. J. M. Parikh for the Respondents

THE LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by SIR JOHN EDGE.—These are two consolidated appeals by the Plaintiffs from two decrees, dated the 30th July 1917, of the High Court at Patna, which reversed a decree, dated the 21st May 1914, of the District Judge of Darbhanga and dismissed the suit of the Plaintiffs.

The suit was brought by the Plaintiffs, the Appellants here, on the 10th January 1912, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Darbhanga for certain declarations as to title and for a decree for possession of certain immoveable property and for mesne profits. That immoveable property will in this judgment for the sake of brevity be referred to as the property in dispute. The property in dispute was originally the property of one Sadik Ali Khan, the Plaintiffs claim title through one Lalji Lal, the Defendants claim title through one Kamal Narain Choudhri. The facts will later be briefly stated, but then Lordships may here say that in their opinion the fate of these consolidated appeals depends upon the effect of an order of the 14th September 1886, of the Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot, which was made in certain execution proceedings to which Kamal Narain Choudhri, as an objector to an application for the attachment of the property in dispute, and Lalji Lal, as the applicant for the attachment, were with Sadik Ali Khan parties.

Sadik Ali Khan, on the 10th January 1882, by deed mortgaged the property in dispute, and much other immoveable property with which this suit is not concerned, to Lalji Lal for Rs. 40,000, and interest which might become due thereon. On the 27th September 1883, Kamal Narain Choudhri brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpur a suit for money due to him against Sadik Ali Khan. On the same day that suit was transferred to the Court of the District Judge of Darbhanga. On the 24th November 1883 Kamal Narain Choudhri obtained from the District Judge an order for the attachment before judgment of the property in dispute, and that property was attached. On the 2nd April 1884, Kamal Narain Choudhri obtained from the District Judge a decree against Sadik Ali Khan for the money owing to him. On the 27th June 1884, Kamal Narain Choudhri obtained from the District Judge attachment of the property in dispute. On the 21st March 1885, Sadik Ali Khan by deed further mortgaged to Lalji Lal for Rs. 90,000 the property in dispute, and much other property with which this suit is not concerned.

The Rs. 90,000 included the debt due under the mortgage of the 10th January 1882, and it was expressly agreed by the mortgage of the 21st March 1885 that Lalji Lal's security under the mortgage of the 10th January 1882 should continue. On the 11th December 1885, Lalji Lal brought under sec. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, against Sadik Ali Khan a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpur to recover the money due to him under the mortgages of the 10th January 1882 and the 21st March 1885, amounting together to Rs 98,519-13-6, and further interest. On the 12th February 1886, Lalji Lal obtained in that suit a decree under sec. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, for sale of the properties mortgaged if the decretal money should not be paid to him by Sadik Ali Khan within four months from the date of the decree.

The property in dispute being under attachment in execution of Kamal Narain Choudhri's decree of the 2nd April 1884, Lalji Lal, on the 20th February 1886, presented to the Court of the District Judge of Dharbhanga a petition for the execution of his decree of the 12th February 1886, in which he stated the nature of the assistance from the Court for which he asked thus :—

“That in the above-mentioned case, though postponement for four months has been granted to the judgment-debtor to pay the entire decretal amount, but there is very little chance of the judgment-debtor paying the entire decretal money within the time allowed. The judgment-debtor owes a considerable amount, and besides this his properties have been advertised for sale in satisfaction of several decrees. If proceeding for execution of this decree would be taken by your Petitioner after expiry of the four months' time allowed by the Court, then the decretal money due to him cannot be realised in any way; for this reason it is very necessary to take out the execution proceedings. Therefore it is prayed that the case may be registered that proceedings for attachment of the properties of the judgment-debtor may be taken that sale proclamation may be issued and date for sale of the properties may be fixed by the Court after the time allowed and that the decretal money due to your Petitioner may be realised. Inventory of the properties is given below.”

On the 20th May 1886, Lalji Lal obtained in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpur an order of attachment, under his decree of the 12th February 1886, of the property in dispute, and the property in dispute was accordingly attached.

On the 16th August 1886, the right and interest of Sadik Ali Khan in the property in dispute were put up for sale at public auction in execution of Kamal Narain Choudhri's money decree against him of the 2nd April 1884, and Kamal Narain Choudhri, who had previously obtained permission to bid at the sale, purchased the right and interest of Sadik Ali Khan in the property in dispute. On the 8th September 1886, Kamal Narain Choudhri presented to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot a petition of objection to the attachment of the property in dispute, which Lalji Lal had obtained. To that proceeding by petition of objection Lalji Lal and Sadik Ali Khan were made parties. That petition, so far as it is material, was as follows :—

“1. That a Title Suit No 18 of 1883 was filed by the objector on the 9th Kartik, 1291, corresponding to the 25th October 1883, in the Court of the District Judge, and the properties of Babu Sadik Ali Khan, the Defendant judgment-debtor, situated in mauza Bhandarson ash with dakhil, together with the tolas, pargana Loam, were attached, and on the 2nd April 1884, a decree was passed in favour of the objector; in the execution of decree on the 24th Asarh, 1291

SARJU PRASAD MISSIR v. MAKSUDAN CHOWDHURY.

F S., corresponding to the 2nd July 1884, the said property was attached, and on the 16th August 1886, after having been sold by the District Judge, was purchased by the objector

"2 That the judgment-debtor, after the attachment mentioned above, mortgaged the said property under a bond, dated the 12th (21st) March 1885, to Lalji Sahu. Hence the said mortgage under the provision of sec 276 of the Civil Procedure Code is null and void

"3 That subsequent to attachment by this objector Babu Lalji Lal Sahu attached the said property on the 7th Jeth, 1293, alleging a lien under a decree obtained on confession of judgment, and the date for the sale of the said property is fixed for the 15th September 1886

"4 That when the said property had been sold they cannot now be sold under the provisions of sec 285

"5 That the said property, having been sold, is purchased by this objector, the Court has no jurisdiction to sell the property again and the said property under sec. 278 is fit to be exempted, and it is prayed that by allowing this objection mauza Bhandarson, ash, together with dakhl, and the tolas in pargana Loam, be exempted from sale

"I, Kamal Narain Choudhri, objector, do declare that the contents of this petition of objection are true to my knowledge

objector,

"By my own pen"

There appears to be some confusion in para 1 of the petition of objection as to facts and dates. The decree of the 2nd April 1884 was made by the District Judge in the suit which was brought on the 27th September 1883, and the order for the issue of the writ of attachment was made on the 27th June 1884. It is to be observed that there is nothing in that petition of objection which would suggest to the Subordinate Judge that Lalji Lal had held any mortgage of the property in dispute except the mortgage of the 21st March 1885, or would draw the attention of the Subordinate Judge to the fact that by the mortgage of the 21st March 1885, the security which Lalji Lal had obtained by the mortgage of the 10th January 1882, was maintained, or to the fact that the mortgage of the 10th January 1882, was made before Kamal Narain Choudhri had obtained his attachment of the property in dispute. Those facts do not appear to have been brought to the attention of the Subordinate Judge by or on behalf of Lalji Lal or by anyone. On the 14th September 1886, the Subordinate Judge on that petition made the following order: "It is ordered that the objection of the objector be so far allowed that mauza Bhandarson ash bearing No 22 (the property in dispute) in the inventory of the decree-holder (Lalji Lal), be exempted from the sale." As their Lordships construe that order, it was an order that the property claimed should not be sold under the decree, which Lalji Lal had obtained on the 12th February 1886. Lalji Lal did not appeal against that order of the 14th September 1886, of the Subordinate Judge, and it became final. On the 19th November 1886, Kamal Narain Choudhri obtained his sale certificate in respect of his purchase at the auction sale on the 16th August 1886, of the right and interest of Sadik Ali Khan in the property in dispute, and obtained possession as the purchaser

On the 21st February 1895, the Plaintiffs in this suit, who are the Appellants here, in a suit to which the Respondents here, who are the representatives of Kamal Narain Choudhri, were not parties, obtained a money decree against Lalji Lal. In execution of that money decree the Plaintiffs, Appellants here, purchased the mortgage decree which Lalji Lal had obtained on the 12th February 1886, and eventually, in execution of that mortgage decree of the 12th February 1886, applied for the sale of the property in dispute, which was sold and was purchased by them on the 16th February 1907, and a certificate of sale was granted to them on the 29th May 1908. The Defendants, Respondents here, were not parties to those proceedings. This suit was brought by the Plaintiffs (Appellants) on the 10th January 1912 to obtain declarations of title to and possession of the property in dispute, and mesne profits. The suit was tried by the District Judge of Dharbhanga and went on appeal to the High Court at Patna. There are concurrent findings of these Courts which determine a question which arose as to the identity of the property in dispute.

The District Judge being of opinion that the order of the Subordinate Judge of Tirhoot of the 14th September 1886, was made without jurisdiction, as Lalji Lal's decree was a decree for sale under the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and that Lalji Lal's decree of the 12th February 1886 was binding on the property in dispute, gave the Plaintiffs, Appellants here, a decree for possession, subject to a right of the Defendants, Respondents here, to redeem, and decreed that Plaintiffs were entitled to mesne profits. From that decree the Plaintiffs and the Defendants appealed to the High Court at Patna.

The learned Judges of the High Court, before whom those appeals came, were of opinion that Lalji Lal had not obtained, under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, an order absolute for sale, had, in ignorance of his rights, elected to surrender his rights under his mortgage of the 10th January 1882, and had proceeded to execute his decree of the 12th February 1886 as a money decree, had attached the property in dispute under sec. 274 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, had gone to trial on the objection of Kamal Narain Choudhri under sec. 278 of that Code, and had acquiesced for twenty years in the decision of the 14th September 1886, against him under sec. 278; and they allowed the Defendants' appeal and dismissed the Plaintiffs' appeal and then suit. From those decrees these consolidated appeals have been brought.

At the hearing of these consolidated appeals counsel were unable to show that any order absolute for sale under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, was made, but their Lordships are aware that even in 1886 the necessity for an order absolute under that section was sometimes overlooked in suits for sale, and sales proceeded in suits for sale under an ordinary order for execution such as would be made for the execution of a money decree. Their Lordships do not draw the same conclusion as the High Court that Lalji Lal elected to surrender his rights under the mortgage of the 10th January 1882. Lalji Lal had got the property in dispute attached in order to bring it to sale, and on the petition of Kamal Narain Choudhri the Subordinate Judge made his order of the 14th September 1886, which, as their Lordships construe it, was an order that the property in dispute should not be sold in the suit of Lalji Lal. It appears to their Lordships to be unnecessary to consider whether that order should or should not have been made. The petition of objection was a petition which the Subordinate Judge had to consider and dispose of, and any party to that proceeding who was dissatisfied with the order which the Subordinate Judge might make could have appealed from it. Lalji Lal was a party to that proceeding and he did not appeal and the order became final and binding upon Lalji Lal and upon those who claim title under him. From 1886 Kamal

Naram Choudhri or the Defendants who represent him have been lawfully in possession of the property in dispute under the certificate of sale of the 19th November 1886, and the Plaintiffs did not bring this suit disputing that title until the 10th January 1912. Their Lordships are of opinion that the decrees of the High Court were right.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that these consolidated appeals should be dismissed. The Appellants must pay the costs of these consolidated appeals.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 47—Power of execution Court to enlarge or alter the decree by consent of parties—Sec. 47, if bars a Defendant in a fresh suit from setting up a defence which could have been made a ground of objection under the section—The section, if applies when the fresh suit is based on a different cause of action—Sec. 11, res judicata, the principle, if applies to a new suit when one of the parties to the suit was not a party to the compromise in the execution proceeding.

Certain persons having sued for recovery of four pakhis of land, got a decree for three pakhis of land measured according to a certain standard rod. During execution proceedings before the Commissioner, by consent of the parties, excepting one who was absent, the decree-holders were given possession of three pakhis of land measured according to a different standard rod, the result being that they got $3\frac{1}{2}$ pakhis of land measured according to the standard in the decree. They were subsequently dispossessed by the judgment-debtors and brought a suit for recovery of the $3\frac{1}{2}$ pakhis of land:

Held—That sec 47 of the Civil Procedure Code had no application as the suit was based upon a different cause of action

That it was competent to the Defendants to set up a defence based upon an objection which could have been taken under sec. 47.

NILKAMAL v. JAHNABI (1), BHIRAM v. GOPI (2), DURGA v. KARAMAT (3) and CHANDRAMONI v. HALIJUNNESSA (4) followed.

That as one of the Defendants was not a party to the agreement in the execution proceeding, and the length of the measuring rod was not in issue in the previous case before a Court of justice and there was no adjudication on that point, the elements constituting res judicata were wanting and hence the principle underlying sec. 11, C. P. C., was not applicable to these proceedings.

The executing Court is not competent to enlarge, extend or modify the decree, even by consent of parties subsequent to the decree, unless it is in adjustment of the decree, and the only adjustment of decrees of which the execution Court can take cognizance is the adjustment contemplated by Or. 21, r. 2, C. P. C.

SURADHANI DUTTA v. SITOO SHEIKH.

This was an appeal preferred on the 1st of March 1920 against the decree of Babu Matilal Roy, Officiating Additional Subordinate Judge of Zillah Faridpur, dated the 15th of August 1919, modifying the decree of Babu Ashutosh Roy, Munsif, 1st Court at Goalando, dated the 23rd December 1918.

The Appellants brought a suit for the recovery of possession of $3\frac{1}{2}$ pakhis of land which was granted to them in execution of a decree in a suit in 1907. In the execution proceedings there was some dispute before the Commissioner regarding the length of the measuring rod. But the parties came to terms and all the judgment-debtors except one gave their consent in writing to the Commissioner's allotment. The report of the Commissioner was confirmed by the executing Court and the Plaintiffs were given possession of the land allotted.

The Plaintiffs were subsequently dispossessed by the Defendants. Hence the present suit which was decreed in full by the first Court. On appeal the Subordinate Judge found that the Plaintiffs were in possession of $3\frac{1}{2}$ pakhis of nal karsha land, while they were entitled to only $3\frac{1}{2}$ pakhis under the decree. He accordingly modified the decree of the first Court and gave Plaintiffs decree for 3 pakhis. The present second appeal was with regard to the $\frac{1}{2}$ pakhi which was disallowed by the lower Appellate Court.

Babu Nirmal Chandra Chatterjee (for Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitter) for the Appellants.—The question as to what land was covered by the decree is res judicata. The executing Court had jurisdiction to determine the question. Reads sec. 47, C. P. C. And that Court having decided the matter and the Defendant not having appealed against that order, it is no longer open to them to raise the question once more in a separate suit. Cites Biru Mahata v. Shama Churn (6). Even if excess lands are awarded to the decree-holder, the judgment-debtor cannot reopen the question in a separate suit.

[WALMSLEY, J.—In that case the judgment-debtor sued for the recovery of excess lands. But in this case the decree-holder sues for restoration.]

Yes, on a new cause of action brought about by the wrongful dispossession of the decree-holder after delivery of possession through Court. Sec. 47, C. P. C., is a bar to such a suit.

Cites Hassan Raja v. Kailas Chandra (7), Muddun Mohan v. Kanai Das (8) and Jogendra Narain v. Rancee Surno Moyee (9).

The Defendants are in this case bound by estoppel as they were consenting parties to the Commissioner's report.

[WALMSLEY, J.—One of the Defendants did not consent.]

But I am at least entitled to joint possession with him.

On the question of costs, as the Plaintiff has substantially won his case, 3 pakhis out of $3\frac{1}{2}$ claimed by him—at least proportionate costs should be awarded.

Babu Phanindra Nath Moitra for the Respondents.—Sec. 47, C. P. C., does not apply in this case. It operates as a bar to the Plaintiff's suit. But it does not bar the trial of an issue raised by the Defendant in a suit brought against him.

SURADHANI DUTTA v. SITOO SHEIKH.

Nor is the matter res judicata under sec. 11, C P C. The question in issue is what should be the length of the measuring rod? That is not a question as to execution and was not the matter in issue in the previous execution case.

Regarding compromise one of the Defendants did not consent. The Commissioner had no jurisdiction to give the Plaintiff more than what was in the decree—even by settlement between the parties. A decree cannot be modified or enlarged by consent of parties. Kanhya Lall v. The Court of Wards (5)

There can be no adjustment outside Court after the decree has been drawn up.

Reads Or 23, r. 4, C P C. and Or 21, r 2, C. P. C.

Regarding costs the Plaintiff should not get more, simply because some of the Defendants were consenting parties.

Babu Nirmal Chandra Chatterjee in reply—The essential elements which constitute res judicata are present in the case. The issue really was what was the area covered by the decree? And that is the very issue in the present suit. The issue was finally decided by the executing Court which confirmed the allotment made by the Commissioner by virtue of the authority delegated by the executing Court. And the executing Court had jurisdiction to decide the matter as it was a question relating to the execution of the decree within the meaning of sec. 47, C. P. C.

[SUHRAWARDY, J.—But does sec. 11, C. P. C., apply to execution proceedings?]

The Judicial Committee has decided the point. The principles of res judicata underlying sec. 11 do apply to execution proceedings.

Cites Ram Kirpal v. Rup Kuari (10).

[SUHRAWARDY, J.—But that means that a matter once decided at one stage of an execution case cannot be re-opened at a later stage of the same execution case.]

That decision, I submit, becomes res judicata, i.e., conclusive between the parties not only in the same execution case but also in a different suit. The Judicial Committee has held that the principles of res judicata apply also to interlocutory orders.

Cites Hook v. Administrator-General of Bengal (11).

The case of Kanhya Lall v. The Court of Wards (5) does not apply in this case. It was not a case of modification or adjustment of a decree. It was a question of construction of a decree. The Commissioner has found in this case that the plot allotted in the execution case would be $3\frac{1}{2}$ pakhis according to Defendant's standard and only 3 pakhis according to that of the Plaintiff.

SUHRAWARDY, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of certain parcels of land on the allegation that the Plaintiffs got a decree in respect of them in 1908 but from which the Defendants subsequently dispossessed them. The facts are that in 1908 the Plaintiffs brought a suit against the Defendants and other persons for recovery of 4 pakhis of land measured according to the standard called nal karsha rod. In that litigation they finally got a decree for 3 pakhis of land according to that measurement, namely, nal karsha measurement.

(11) 25 C. W. N. 915 (P. C.) (1921).

SURADHANI DUTTA v. SITOO SHEIKH.

They put that decree in execution when a Commissioner was appointed by the executing Court to deliver possession to the Plaintiffs. The Commissioner felt some difficulty in regard to the measurement to be applied and the Plaintiffs set up a pallai rod of 14 cubits 1 inch, while the Defendants set up the nal karsha of 13 cubits. The Commissioner made a compromise with the consent of the parties by which the length of the rod was fixed somewhere between these two figures and according to that measurement he delivered possession to the Plaintiffs of 3 pakhis of the land which according to nal karsha measurement came to $3\frac{1}{2}$ pakhis. Subsequently the Defendants dispossessed the Plaintiffs from the whole of $3\frac{1}{2}$ pakhis. The Plaintiffs got a decree for 3 pakhis according to nal karsha measurement, and the only point in issue is with regard to the Plaintiffs' right to recover the $\frac{1}{2}$ pakhi remaining.

The trial Court gave a decree to the Plaintiffs holding that the Defendants are bound by the result of previous litigation. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge reversed that decree holding that the Plaintiffs in the previous suit brought a claim for 4 pakhis of nal karsha land while they got a decree for 3 pakhis of nal karsha land, and therefore so much of the order of the executing Court as purported to put the Plaintiffs in possession of $3\frac{1}{2}$ pakhis was not right and could not be enforced. In this view of the matter he held that the Plaintiffs are entitled to 3 pakhis and dismissed the suit for the remaining $\frac{1}{2}$ pakhi.

On appeal several objections were taken to the decision of the Court of appeal below. It is urged that under sec. 47, C. P. C., the Defendants are not entitled to object to the Plaintiffs' right to recover the whole $3\frac{1}{2}$ pakhis. I may here mention that one of the Defendants, namely, Defendant No 3 was not a party to the agreement before the Commissioner in the previous execution proceeding as to the length of the rod used in measuring the land decreed to the Plaintiffs in that suit. With regard to this contention, it is enough to say that the present suit is not a continuation of the previous litigation but is based upon a subsequent cause of action, namely, dispossession by the Defendants long after 1908. The Plaintiff therefore must succeed on the strength of his title. The learned Court of appeal below was perfectly right in the statement of facts that the Plaintiffs had brought a suit for 4 pakhis and got a decree for 3 pakhis and they are not, under the provisions of the law, entitled to the remaining $\frac{1}{2}$ pakhi. This contention of the Plaintiffs has been met by the learned Judge by observing that sec. 47, C. P. C., bars the suit but it does not prevent the Defendants from setting up a defence based upon an objection which could have been taken under sec. 47, and in support of this view reliance is placed on the case of Nilkamal Mukerjee v. Jahnnabi Choudhram (1), which follows the case of Bhram Ali Sheikh Shikdar v. Gopi Kanth Saha (2). These cases are again followed in the cases of Durga Charan Agradin v. Karamat Khan (3) and Chandramoni Saha v. Halijunnessa Bibi (4). It therefore seems to be settled so far as this Court is concerned that an objection which could not have been raised in a suit by the Plaintiffs, under sec. 47, can be made the ground of defence in a subsequent suit. The result therefore in my judgment is that in the first place, sec

(4) 9 C. L. J. 464 (1908).

47 has no application because the present suit is based upon a different cause of action and secondly it is competent to the Defendants to set up the defence as in this case without violating the provisions of sec. 47, C. P. C.

The next ground of attack is that it ought to have been held that the Defendants are barred by the principles of res judicata from raising this question and disputing the Plaintiffs' title to the $\frac{1}{2}$ pakhi. So far as one of the Defendants is concerned, namely, Defendant No 3, this objection has no force because he was not a party to any compromise between the other Defendants and the Plaintiffs in the previous litigation. Then the elements constituting res judicata do not seem to be present in this case. It is conceded that sec 11, C P C., does not apply, but according to the recent decision of the Judicial Committee the principle which underlies sec 11 is applicable to these proceedings. Admitting that to be so it does not appear that the question of the length of the rod was a point in issue in the previous case before a Court of justice, or that there was adjudication on that point. The Commissioner, it appears, unnecessarily raised difficulties in this matter by suggesting that he could not decide what rod was to be used to measure the land though the decree was for 3 pakhis of land according to nal karsha measurement.

There was no dispute that this nal karsha rod was of 13 cubits. Both parties set forward certain measurements and they came to an arrangement by which the length of the rod was taken as of more than the nal karsha rod and the Plaintiffs got more than they were entitled to. In this state of facts, I think the principle of res judicata is not applicable.

The next attempt is to make these Defendants bound by the previous compromise. It is argued in answer that the executing Court is not competent to enlarge, extend or modify the decree, even by consent of parties subsequent to the decree unless it is in adjustment of the decree. In my opinion this view of the law ought to prevail. It seems reasonable that the Court which takes upon itself to execute the decree is authorized by law only to execute the decree as it stands irrespective of any other circumstance, as for example, the agreement between the parties to modify the decrees. Take for instance, a decree is passed for the sum of Rs. 5,000 in favour of the Plaintiff; it is absurd to assume that the Court in execution would be justified to execute a decree for Rs. 10,000 because the parties agree between themselves that the judgment-debtor should pay Rs. 10,000 to the decree-holder. It seems to me that any such compromise may afford a cause of action for a separate suit, but it cannot invest the executing Court with jurisdiction to execute a decree which it was not called upon to do. In connection with this contention the case of Kanhya Lall Pandit v. The Court of Wards (5) would seem to be in point. It may also be observed that Or. 23 which deals with adjustment of suits is not applicable to execution proceedings. The only adjustment of decree of which the execution Court can take cognizance is the adjustment contemplated by Or. 21, r. 2. In this view of the matter we do not think that there is much force in this contention. As I have observed one of the Defendants was not a party to the arrangement in the previous suit by which the Plaintiffs got more than they were entitled to, and in the present case it is difficult to divide the interests of the several Defendants.

One other point has been raised, namely, that the order of the Court of appeal below that the parties should bear their own costs throughout is bad on principle. I am of opinion that considering the course the litigation has taken it was in the right exercise of the discretion of the Court of appeal below that this order was passed. I do not see any reason to interfere with it.

As all the objections taken by the Appellants fail this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

WALMSLEY, J.—I agree.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE

No. 48 OF 1921.

WOODROFFE, J.	HARE RAM SINGH CHOUDHURY, Appellant,
CUMING, J.	v.
1922,	RAM RAM SINGH CHOUDHURI and an.,
17, May	Respondents.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), sec. 17, withdrawal of renunciation of executorship, how far allowable—Date of grant, which is.

One of several executors appointed under a Will applied for probate on issue of notice to the other executors named in the Will, one of whom stated that he was willing to be an executor but finally attacked the Will and refused to be an executor. Thereupon probate was granted to the applicant and about two months after the date of grant the executor who had renounced made an application for withdrawing his renunciation and for being appointed one of the executors.

Held—That at the time when the application for withdrawal of the renunciation of executorship was made, the grant of probate had already been made and therefore the application came too late.

The date of grant of probate is the date on which the order granting the probate is passed and not the subsequent date on which an order is passed that probate should issue.

IN RE GOLAP SUNDARI DASSI (1) distinguished.

This was an appeal preferred on the 4th of January 1921, against the decree of J. A. Ross, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Murshidabad, dated the 8th of October 1920.

One Gobinda Sundar Singh Chaudhuri left a Will appointing his sons Ram Ram and Hare Ram along with some others as executors. Ram Ram applied for probate and notices were issued to the other executors requesting them either to renounce the executorship or to join in the application. Thereupon, Hare Ram made an application that he was willing to be an executor and also filed objections. On a subsequent date Hare Ram made an application that he did not agree to be an executor and that he would bring a suit for setting aside the Will. On the 7th of August 1920, an order was passed granting probate. Hare Ram's name was not included among the probate-holders. On 27th September 1920, Hare Ram prayed that he might be allowed to withdraw his renunciation. The prayer was refused. Against this order the present appeal was preferred to the High Court by Hare Ram.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chakrabarti and Kali Kinkar Chakrabarti for the Appellant.

Mr. B Chakrabarti and Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

A preliminary objection was raised in this appeal as to its competency. It has been contended, that the appeal is directed against an order refusing an application for a review (that is, taking it that the probate was granted by the Court on the 7th of August 1920) It is not necessary in my opinion to decide that point because I think the appeal fails upon the second ground.

(1) 5 G. W. N. 41 (1901).

HAHE RAM SINGH CHOUDHURY v. RAM RAM SINGH CHOUDHURY

The Appellant is a son of the testator one Gobinda Sundar Singh Chaudhuri. The Respondent also is another son. These two sons were appointed executors under the Will of their father. There were also other persons, executor and executrix. An application for probate was made by the Respondent Ram Ram Singh on the 8th June 1920. On the 12th June 1920, the application was registered and notice was directed to issue to the persons named in the order of that date requesting them either to renounce the executorship or to join in the application. On the 3rd July an application was made by the Appellant before us stating that he was willing to be an executor under the Will. In that petition, however, he further stated that it would be necessary to file a petition of objection to the suit. On the 17th July 1920 he made an application asking for further time until the 27th July 1920 for the purpose of filing objections. Then on the 27th of July the date up to which he had got an adjournment, an application was made by the Appellant in which he said contrary to his previous statement that he did not agree to be an executor under the Will. In that petition he also says that he has come to know that the Will contains various illegal provisions and that he will have to bring a suit for setting aside the Will, that he does not admit the clauses of the said Will, nor does he intend or agree to be an executor thereof. He prayed that his objections might be noted (on protest) and the suit might be decided. Then after certain other orders to which I need not refer, on the 7th of August an order was passed, as I read it, granting probate. This Appellant's name was not included among the probate-holders. Then there were some further orders and on the 27th of September 1920 the Appellant prayed that he might be allowed to withdraw his application of the 27th July 1920 and be appointed an executor along with his two brothers. That application was supported by a petition in which it was stated that the objector, that is the Appellant, was always ready and willing to be an executor and that he had never refused to do so. This application was opposed and on the 8th of October 1920 the learned Judge gave his decision holding that he was not satisfied that the petition of the Appellant renouncing executorship was filed through mistake as alleged. He also pointed out that the Appellant did not file his petition of withdrawal until two months after the petition of renunciation had been filed. He accordingly dismissed the petition. Against that order the present appeal has been made.

I think the decision of the learned Judge must be supported on the ground that at the time when the Appellant asked to withdraw his renunciation of the executorship the grant of probate had already been made on the 7th of August 1920 and therefore that his application came too late. It has been argued that we should hold that the probate was granted on the 8th of October 1920. On that date the order was that probate should issue. The probate had been granted some time previously. This distinguishes the present case from that cited to us (1). Therefore the Calcutta Rent Act (III of 1920, B. C.), sec. 18, jurisdiction of the President of the Improvement Tribunal to revise order of the Rent Controller where the Petitioners had contended before the Controller that the subject-matter of the order did not come within the definition of "premises"

In a standard rent case the landlord contended that the room in question could not be described as "premises" within the meaning of the Calcutta Rent Act and as such the Controller of Rents had no jurisdiction to fix a standard rent. The Controller fixed a standard rent and on the landlord's application to the President of the Improvement Tribunal for revision of that order under sec. 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act, the President held that he had no jurisdiction in the matter inasmuch as the Petitioner himself had contended that the room did not come within the definition of "premises" in the Act:

Held—That under sec. 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act, the landlord Petitioner was entitled to a decision from the President of the Tribunal as to whether or not the Controller had jurisdiction to fix any standard rent in the case which was brought before him.

This was a Rule granted on the 2nd June 1922 against an order of the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal (Mr. S. C. Banerjee), dated the 3rd March 1922, rejecting the application for revision of the order of the Controller of Rents (Mr. B. D. Banerjee), fixing the standard rent of the room in question.

The facts of the case are as follows:—

The Opposite Party held a room in certain premises under the Petitioners at a rent of Rs. 70 per mensem. In the letter of attornment the Opposite Party described the room as a godown. In 1920 the Opposite Party agreed to pay enhanced rent at the rate of Rs. 99 per mensem but subsequently filed an application before the Controller of Rents for fixing a standard rent for the room. The landlords Petitioners pleaded that the subject-matter of the case was a godown and not an office and that the same could not be described as "premises" and that as such the application for fixation of standard rent was incompetent. Against the Controller's order fixing standard rent, the landlords moved the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal for revision under sec. 18 of the Rent Act. The President of the Tribunal in dismissing the application passed the following judgment:—

"This is an application by the landlord purporting to be made under sec. 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act. The only ground on which this application is based is that the property in respect of which the Controller has purported to fix a standard rent is a godown and not a premises within the meaning of the Act and that therefore the Rent Act does not apply. On the statements in his petition it is therefore clear that there has been in this case, according to the Petitioner's contention, no fixing of the standard rent for any premises within the meaning of sec. 18 of the Rent Act and consequently the Petitioner has no right to make this application.

"The Controller was moved in this by the tenant and the landlord objected that the property in question was not a premises and that the Controller had no jurisdiction to fix any standard rent for it. The Controller has overruled that objection, finding that the property was not a godown but a shop or office and therefore a premises within the meaning of the Act.

"On the present application it is contended by the learned vakil for the Petitioners that the property is a godown and that consequently neither the Controller nor I have any jurisdiction in respect of it. But he contends that as the Opposite Party does not admit that the property is not a premises, I cannot reject this application on the ground that it does not come under the Act without giving my finding on the issue whether the property is a godown or not. I do not think that their contention is sound. The jurisdiction of the Court under sec. 18 of the Rent Act is neither an appellate nor a revisional jurisdiction as those expressions are ordinarily understood. Sec. 24 of the Act lays down that an application under sec. 18 has to be dealt with, as nearly as may be, as a regular suit—which means, and I have always acted on that view, that it must be disposed of entirely on evidence given before me and the Petitioner before me has to be treated as a Plaintiff in a regular suit, his application has to be treated as a plaint (except for purpose of Court-fee and other matters specially provided for in the Act). When a plaint shows on the face of it that the Court in which it is presented has no jurisdiction to entertain it, I do not think that it is necessary to raise or try any issue about the jurisdiction and the plaint in such a case must, unless it is amended, be rejected as in contravention of the provisions of Or. 7, r. 1 (f).

"Looking at that matter from another point of view it seems to me that what the Petitioner wants to question in this case is not the Controller's order fixing the standard rent but his order or finding that he had jurisdiction to deal with this property under the Act. I do not think that an application made for the purpose comes within the meaning of sec. 18 of the Rent Act.

"I am told by the learned vakil for the Petitioner that he is not prepared to amend his petition to show that the property is a premises within the meaning of the Act so as to give me jurisdiction.

"The application is therefore dismissed as incompetent.

"The Petitioner will pay to the Opposite Party Rs. 25 as costs."

Against this order of the President, the landlords moved the High Court and obtained the present Rule.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Paresh Nath Mookerjee for the Petitioners.

The Advocate-General and Babu Narendranath Choudhury for the Opposite Party.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Petitioners before us are lessees of certain premises in Calcutta, No. 40/1 Strand Road, and the Opposite Parties are sub-tenants under the Petitioners occupying, to use a neutral expression, a certain room on the ground floor of the said premises. The Petitioners allege that the room in question is a godown and that the Opposite Parties executed on the 29th August 1919 a letter of attornment in their favour whereby they agreed to pay rent at the rate of Rs. 70 a month to the Petitioners. It is alleged that in the letter of attornment, the room was described by them as a godown on the ground floor of premises No. 40/1 Strand Road. It is further alleged by the Petitioners that on or about the 29th January 1920, the Opposite Parties agreed to pay enhanced rent at the rate of Rs. 99 per month from January 1920 in respect of the said godown. It appears that on the 31st May 1920, the Opposite Parties filed an application before the Controller of Rents in Calcutta for fixing a standard rent of the said room, alleging that the room in question constituted an office and that the standard rent thereof could not be more than Rs. 77 per month. The Petitioners on being served with notice of this application contended before the Controller of Rents that the subject-matter of the demise was a godown and not an office and that the same could not be described as "premises" within the meaning of the Calcutta Rent Act, and that as such the application of the Opposite Parties before the Controller of Rents was incompetent. The Controller of Rents inspected the room in question and came to the conclusion that the same was an office, that it was used "as a shop, an office as well as for the purpose of storing goods for sale in a portion" and fixed the standard rent thereof at Rs. 70. The Petitioners being dissatisfied with the order of the Controller of Rents fixing the standard rent of the said room at Rs. 70 applied to the learned President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal for revision of the order of the Controller of Rents, fixing the said standard rent, under sec. 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act. The learned President held that inasmuch as the Petitioners before him had contended in their application for revision that the Controller of Rents had no jurisdiction whatsoever to fix a standard rent in respect of the subject-matter of the demise the same not being "premises" within the meaning of the Act, the Petitioners on their own showing were disentitled to any relief by way of revision under sec. 18 of the Act. The argument of the President is that inasmuch as the Controller of Rents had, according to the Petitioners, no jurisdiction to interfere in the matter, the President had equally no jurisdiction because, in his opinion, sec. 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act is only attracted to cases where admittedly the Controller has jurisdiction to fix a standard rent. We are unable to assent to this view of the matter. We are of opinion that under sec. 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act, the landlords, in this case the Petitioners, were entitled to a decision from the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal as to whether or not the Controller of Rents had jurisdiction to fix any standard rent in the case which was brought before him. In our opinion, the fact that the Petitioners before the President of the Tribunal contended that the Controller had no jurisdiction in the matter, could not be construed to be a point against the Petitioners disentitling them to any relief at the hands of the President under sec. 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act for revision of an order fixing a standard rent, because if that reasoning were held to be sound, then in no case of this description could relief be given under sec. 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act. We think that the President has taken an unduly narrow view of sec. 18 of the Calcutta Rent Act. In this view of the matter, we set aside the order of the President of the Calcutta Improvement Tribunal and remit the case to him for consideration of the questions urged in the petition of the Petitioners before us. There will be no order as regards the application under sec. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure Code.

The Petitioners will get their costs of the first Rule which we assess at three gold mohurs.

v.

Heard, 20 and

TINCOURI DHOPI.

21, July.

Judgment, 21, July

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 86, a habitual gunja smoker committing murder in a temporary state of intoxication, is entitled to the benefit of the provisions of—High Court's power to consider accused's unsoundness of mind in passing sentence, when no such plea taken under sec. 84, I. P. Code—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 401.

In a case of murder committed suddenly and without any provocation, there was some evidence that the accused was a habitual gunja smoker. There was no evidence of any motive for the crime, but the accused did not take any plea of unsoundness of mind under the provisions of sec. 84 of the Indian Penal Code.

Held—That having regard to the way in which the murder was committed and the fact that there was practically no evidence of motive, it ought to be inferred that the accused at the time when he committed the murder was suffering from some severe mental derangement and that he was not responsible for the act which he committed, though insanity was not pleaded. The case, however, did not come under sec. 84 or sec. 85, but fell under sec. 86. But in view of accused's mental condition, the capital sentence was not the proper sentence to pass in the case.

The accused was sentenced to transportation for life and the matter was reported to the Local Government for consideration under sec. 401, Cr. P. C.

This was a Reference under sec. 307, Cr. P. C., by the Sessions Judge of 24-Pergunnahs (A. G. R. Henderson, Esq.), dated the 21st June 1922, disagreeing with the verdict of the jury who had found the accused not guilty of the charge found against him under sec. 302, I. P. C.

The facts were briefly as follows:—Two females with three boys were proceeding from one village to another. The boys were walking ahead and the women who were talking to each other were at some distance behind. The accused suddenly came out of a garden and tried to catch a bundle which one of the boys was carrying on his head. He raised an alarm and the accused let go his hold on him but caught the next boy up by the legs and dashed him several times on the ground. The women ran up but the accused took to his heels and, being chased, got into a clump of bamboos and then into a tank where one of the women caught him as he was coming out of the tank, and made him over to the villagers who had assembled.

One of the prosecution witnesses deposed that the accused used to smoke gunja in the morning and in the evening every day. No plea was, however, taken on behalf of the accused under the provisions of sec. 84 of the Indian Penal Code, that the accused at the time of doing the act was in an unsound state of mind. The jury brought in a verdict of not guilty, and the Additional Sessions Judge of 24-Pergunnahs, disagreeing with the unanimous verdict of the jury, referred the case to the High Court under the provisions of sec. 307, Cr. P. Code.

Babu Amulya Chandra Sen for the Accused.

Mr. Orr for the Crown.

This is a Reference under the provisions of sec. 307, Cr. P. C., by the learned third Additional Sessions Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs, disagreeing with the unanimous verdict of the jury in a trial which was held for an offence under sec. 302, I. P. C. The accused Tincouri Dhopi was charged under the provisions of sec. 302, I. P. C., with having committed the offence of murder in that he had killed a child named Pulin. He was tried before a jury and the jury brought in a verdict of not guilty. The learned Sessions Judge was of opinion that the verdict was against the weight of evidence and that it was necessary for the ends of justice to make a reference to this Court and has accordingly laid the matter before this Court. The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer appears in support of the reference and has placed the evidence in the case before us. We also have had the advantage of hearing Mr. Amulya Chandra Sen on behalf of the accused.

The facts shortly are as follows.—On or about the 29th Falgun 1328, the prosecution witness No. 3, Swarnamoni Bewa, with her daughter Tustumoni Bewa (prosecution witness No. 4) and two boys named Jiten and Pulin went to the house of a relative of theirs on the occasion of the Dol festival. They stayed there for four or five days and then went to the house of one Sasthi Mondal. They stayed in Sasthi's house for a night or two and set out for home on the afternoon of Saturday the 18th March. The party on the return journey consisted of the witness No. 3 Swarnamoni, witness No. 4 Tustumoni, witness No. 5 Jitendra Nath Gayen, witness No. 6 Bhim Chandra Haldar and the deceased Pulin. It appears that during the return journey the boys Jiten and Pulin and Bhim walked ahead of the others and the women who were talking to each other were at some distance behind the boys. It is alleged that the accused suddenly came out of a garden and tried to catch a bundle which the witness No. 5

Jiten was carrying on his head. Jiten raised an alarm and the accused let go his hold on Jiten and he caught Pulin up by the legs and dashed him several times on the ground. The witnesses Jiten and Bhim thereupon ran away. The witnesses Nos. 3 and 4 Swarna and Tustu ran up to the place where Pulin was being assaulted in the manner described above by the accused. Before, however, Swarna and Tustu could actually reach the place, the accused had taken to his heels. The witnesses Swarna and Bhim gave chase and it was found that the person who had been chased had got into a tank which is known as Naram's tank. Naram, who is witness No. 16, states that he was splitting some bamboos in his house. He saw a woman walking fast. She shouted out that a child had been murdered by a man. She asked if a man had passed that way. Then a boy said that a man had gone into the tank. He asked the woman if she would be able to recognize the man. She said "yes." The witness Swarna then went to the bank of the tank and caught the accused as he was coming out of the tank and made him over to the villagers who had assembled on the bank of the tank on hearing her cries, and she went back to the place where Pulin was lying dead. The dead body was sent to the Diamond Harbour Hospital in charge of a constable, and Sarat Gaven, witness No. 2, who is a nephew of Swarna, thereafter lodged the first information at the thana.

The medical officer who held the post mortem examination found a contused lacerated wound below the point of the chin and another similar but large wound on the back of the head through which the skull bone and brain substance were protruding. The skull bone on the back and the side bones were smashed to pieces and the line of fracture extended to the base of the skull. In the opinion of the medical officer, death was due to the shock resulting from fracture of the skull and he further states that the boy Pulin could have come by the injuries found on him and from which he died, if a man held him by the legs and dashed him on the ground.

The occurrence was witnessed by Swarna and Tustu. Swarna states that as soon as her attention was drawn to the fact that Pulin was being assaulted in the manner described above, she asked her daughter to look after the injured boy while she ran after the accused. She followed him for about half a mile and the accused then jumped into the tank. A boy who was standing there asked her what was the matter. She told him she was chasing a man who had killed her nephew Pulin and who had gone into the tank. As the accused came out of the tank she threw her sari round his neck and caught him. Many villagers had come up and she made over the accused to them.

Tustumoni in her deposition says in so many words that she saw the face of the accused and she heard what Jiten had said, namely, that his bundle was being pulled by a man. After Jiten had raised the alarm and after the accused had let go his hold on Jiten, she saw the accused seize Pulin by the legs, pick him up and dash him to the ground three times. Then they, that is Swarna, Tustu and witness No 6, started to run. The accused then threw the boy down and ran away. She says further that after her mother Swarna had started chasing the man, she stayed at the place where the boy was done to death and waited till her mother returned.

The witness No. 6 Jiten says that a man came from Satis doctor's garden and approached them; there was a bundle of clothes on his head; the man who came tried to seize the bundle. Thereupon he shouted out to his great aunt and held on to the bundle. The man let go his hold upon him and seized Pulin by the legs. Jiten dropped the bundle and began to run towards his great aunt. The man dashed Pulin to the ground several times.

Witness No 6 Bhim Chandra Halder states that he was ahead of Pulin and Jiten. The accused came up to them and seized Jiten's bundle. The witness ran after Jiten and looked over his shoulder and saw the accused dash Pulin to the ground. He was going towards the north and reached the Musalmanpara before Jiten did; and he says further that he was standing at the side of the tank when Swarna reached the place of occurrence. When she followed the accused he threw clods of earth at her. The accused ran towards their village and the accused was lost sight of when he ran into a clump of bamboos.

The witness No 11 Krsto Mohan Mandal says that he saw the accused run up and plunge into a tank. His aunt Swarna followed him. She was shouting all the time "Pulin has been killed." His aunt seized the accused when he came out of the tank. Other people came up and secured him. The accused was wearing a gamcha which was blood-stained. In cross-examination he says he saw the accused sitting in the verandah of Hossein (Narain's) house afterwards. He was wearing a gamcha. It was tied round his waist. His aunt caught him by putting the corner of the cloth (sari) round his neck. The accused said he did not kill the boy. He was sitting when they came into the house.

. Then we have the evidence of Rash Behari Neogi who says he heard a woman shouting "my son has been murdered by a man who is running away." A man was running in front of her. This witness was in a position to identify the accused and he did identify the accused in the Sessions Court. He says further that the man who was running was going towards Khunkali. The witness followed him. He stumbled and fell. Later he found the man under arrest in the house of Ram Kanta Mondal. He was taken away to the place where the dead body was lying.

Ram Kanta Naskar witness No. 14 states that Swarna came to his house with her aunt and two boys Pulin and Jiten in Falgoun and went away about the 4th Chaitra taking his daughter-in-law Tustu with them.

Then we have the evidence of Uttam Chandra Mistri who says the accused was employed under him as a labourer and he used to smoke gunja. He used to take it in the morning and in the evening.

Then we have the evidence of Naran Chandra Mistri who has already been referred to above. Lastly we have the evidence of Kunja Lal Naskar and Ramanath Mondal who speak to the fact that they knew the accused. They saw Swarna run up shouting that murder had been committed and that the murderer was running away. There was a boy standing near the bank of the tank who had seen the accused run away. The witness Kunja asked the boy about the man. He said that the man had plunged into the tank. They went towards the east through Karim's compound. The man was leaning against the wall of the verandah. The woman, that is, Swarna, identified him as the murderer and asked them to arrest him. He was arrested by a man named Khajan Mal.

This is practically all the evidence in the case and on this evidence there cannot be any manner of doubt that the boy Pulin was killed by the accused and that the act of killing such as has been described above amounted to murder. It would therefore appear that the accused was guilty of having committed an offence punishable under the provisions of sec. 302, I. P. C.

It has been urged, however, that the identity of the accused has not been sufficiently established. On this point it is sufficient to refer to the evidence of Swarna and Tustu, of the witness Jiten and of the witness Bhim Halder. In addition to this body of evidence there is the testimony of Krista Mondal, Rash Behary Neogi and Kunja Naskar. We see no reason whatsoever to reject the evidence of these persons and to come to the conclusion that the identity of the accused has not been established. In our opinion the evidence which has been referred to above, that is to say, the evidence of the eye-witnesses and the evidence of the other persons whose names have been referred to above point conclusively to the fact that it was the accused and the accused only who was responsible for the death of Pulin.

It is next said that the story of the chase is such that no reliance can be placed on it. We have examined the evidence and we are unable to say that the story of the chase is so unnatural as it has been alleged by the defence that no reliance can be placed on the same. We think under the circumstances that the chase was perfectly natural and there are no reasons whatsoever for thinking that the story of the chase as related by the witnesses whose names have been mentioned above is untrue in any particular.

The medical evidence shows that the deceased having regard to the injuries which had been inflicted on him could have come by his death by being dashed on the ground several times. The only thing that can legitimately be urged on behalf of the accused in a case of this description is that having regard to the way in which the murder was committed and having regard to the fact that there is practically no evidence of motive, it ought to be inferred that the accused at the time when he committed the murder was suffering from some severe mental derangement and that he was not responsible for the act which he committed. As will be seen later, we have taken this plea into our consideration, and we think there is good reason for coming to the conclusion that the accused must have been at the time, having regard to the fact that he was a habitual gunja smoker, in such a state of mind that he was not responsible for his action.

The accused has not taken any plea under the provisions of sec. 84 of the Indian Penal Code, and having regard to the evidence on the record this is not a case which comes under the provisions of sec. 84, I. P. C., or of sec. 85 but falls within the provision of sec. 86, I. P. C. We think that the ends of justice will be met if a sentence of transportation for life is passed on the accused. This is obviously not a case where the capital sentence should be passed and as has just been indicated we do not propose to pass the capital sentence on the accused. But we think that the accused ought to be convicted under sec. 302, I. P. C., and sentenced to suffer transportation for life and we direct that the accused Tincouri Dhopi be transported for life.

Having regard, however, to the facts of this case we think that the attention of the Local Government may be drawn to this case under the provisions of sec. 401, Cr. P. C., and the Local Government may be invited to take such action as it think proper under the provisions of that section, and we direct that the records of this case together with a copy of our judgment be forwarded to the Local Government for their consideration.

SIR JOHN EDGE.

Judgment, 25, May.

RAI RADHA KRISHN,

and ors., Appellants,

v.

BISHESHAR SAHAY

and ors., Respondents

Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 29—Leave to bid refused to decree-holder—Purchase by decree-holder in benami of another, if a nullity—Sale voidable—Questions which arise upon proceeding to set aside sale—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 12.

A purchase by a decree-holder who has not obtained permission is not void nor a nullity, but is only to be avoided on the application of the judgment-debtor or some other person interested. The fact that the decree-holder had actually applied for permission and had been refused would make no difference. The question upon an application to set aside such purchase is not whether the decree-holder had been contumacious, but whether the property had been really realised to the best advantage. If it had not, the Court would set the sale aside; if it had, then it did not matter that the decree-holder bought without permission or that he had applied and been refused.

The sale being voidable only and not void, Art. 12 of the Limitation Act applies and the suit must be brought within one year.

This was an appeal from a decree, dated the 27th February 1919 of the High Court at Patna which reversed a decree, dated the 27th November 1916 of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Muza-faipur.

RAI RADHA KRISHNA v. BISHESHAR SAHAY.

The suit in which this appeal arose was instituted by Mahabir Pershad (who represents the interest of Rai Gudar Sahay, deceased) against the principal Respondent, Bisheshar Sahay and others.

Rai Gudar Sahay was the owner of the village of Kataya, which in 1873 he mortgaged in favour of Bisheshar and others.

On 31st May 1886 the mortgagees obtained a decree for sale in a suit to recover their debt and the entire mortgaged property was sold by the Court on the 18th April 1899.

One Hari Narain was declared by the Court purchaser of the village in dispute and was granted a certificate under sec. 316 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882.

Rai Gudar Sahay having died in 1897, his widow applied under sec 311 of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside the sale on the ground that the execution proceedings were fraudulent. This application was dismissed by the Court on the 7th July 1899 and an appeal by the widow to the High Court was also dismissed.

Rai Gudar Sahay's estate devolved in 1910 on Rai Mahabir Pershad who instituted the suit in which this appeal arose.

In his plaint he alleged that the execution proceedings which resulted in the auction sale were collusive and fraudulent, that Bisheshar in spite of being prohibited from bidding by the Court had purchased the village benami in the name of Hari Narain and that the sale was accordingly void. On the death of the Plaintiff the suit was continued by his sons.

The principal Defendant in his written statement denied that Hari Narain was a benamidar and pleaded that the suit was barred by limitation and was res judicata.

The Subordinate Judge held that Hari Narain was a benamidar for the Appellant, he negatived the pleas of "res judicata" and limitation and held that, inasmuch as the purchase had been made in defiance of the Court's refusal of permission to the purchaser to bid, the sale was void ab initio and inoperative. In the result he allowed the Plaintiff's claim to recover possession of the whole village, and made a decree accordingly.

From that decree the Respondents appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Patna and their appeal was heard by Atkinson and Das, JJ., who delivered their judgment on the 27th February 1919.

The learned Judges held that Hari Narain was not a benamidar for the Respondent, that in any event the sale would not be void but voidable, and that any suit to set it aside was barred under Art 12 of the Indian Limitation Act. They were further of opinion that the Plaintiffs' remedy, if any, was not by a fresh suit but by an application under sec. 244 and sec. 294 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882.

In the event they set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and made a decree dismissing the suit of the Plaintiffs with costs.

The Plaintiffs now appealed from the decree of the High Court to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. DeGruyther, K C (with him Messrs. Parikh and Majid) for the Appellants.—The evidence here tends to show that the transaction was benami.

Hari Narain was a pauper, he had been a benamidar on a previous occasion and was not the type of man likely to make so shrewd a bargain.

By Art. 12 of the 1st Schedule to the Limitation Act a suit to set aside a sale must be brought within a year, but no limitation can run against the reversioners unless it is shown that they knew of the benami nature of the transaction.

They did not know of it owing to the fraud of the purchaser and the article of the Limitation Act that is applicable is Art. 95 which allows three years after the discovery of the fraud.

Syanlal Mandal v. Nilmony Das (1) and Srimati Sarat Kumari v. Nimai Charn Dey (2).

Moreover, the sale was not voidable but void. Bidding at the auction in spite of the order prohibiting it was an abuse of the process of the Court—and no sale could be effected in favour of a bidder to whom leave had been refused.

S M. Kamini Debi v. Ramlochan Sirkar (3), Mahomed Gazee Chowdhry v. Ram Loll Sen (4) and Mahabir Pershad Singh v. Macnaghten (5).

Mr. Dubé for the Respondents—The evidence that the transaction was benami is far from conclusive. It has been held that more suspicious circumstances are insufficient to prove the benami nature of a transaction.

Sreemanchunder Dey v. Gopaulchunder Chuckerbutty (6) and Hakim Maulvi Muhammad Mahbub Ali Khan v. Bharat Indu (7).

Sec. 294 of the Civil Procedure Code clearly states that a sale may be set aside upon application and for just cause. In the absence of any such application within the period of limitation laid down by Art. 12 of the Limitation Act the sale though voidable before becomes good. There is no foundation for the suggestion that it was void ab initio.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD PHILLIMORE.—Rai Gudar Sahay, a landowner in the District of Muzaffarpur, borrowed from a joint family of money-lenders to whom the Defendants belong, a sum of Rs. 16,000 on the 2nd May 1873, and mortgaged for it his village Mouza Kataya. The family afterwards separated, and upon the partition of their property various fractions in the mortgage became allotted to the different members. They, however, all joined in a suit brought in 1886 to enforce the mortgage, and in the ordinary course obtained a decree on the 31st May 1886, under which if the money was not paid the property was to be brought to sale.

For a time no steps were taken to realise this decree, and the judgment-debtor paid off portions by purchasing, through a benamidar, the shares of some of the decree-holders, for prices which it is noteworthy were considerably less than the nominal values. In January 1889, he bought a share nominally worth Rs. 7,140 for Rs. 3,266. In March 1891, a share nominally worth Rs. 15,209 for Rs. 5,000, and in November 1894, shares nominally worth Rs. 24,619 for Rs. 7,476. This left something under five annas of the judgment unsatisfied, and these were held in severalty by the Respondent Bisheshar Sahay and two of his brothers. In 1898 Bisheshar, on behalf of himself and the remaining decree-holders, took proceedings to have the decree executed, and the property was sold by the Court on the 18th April 1899. By that time the judgment-debtor was dead, and his widow was proceeded against in his place. Upon the record of the execution proceedings one Hari Narain was declared purchaser of the village, and he obtained a certificate of sale and possession. The widow applied to set aside the sale on various grounds, but failed. She died in 1904 and was succeeded by her daughter, who died in 1910. Upon the daughter's death the estate of the original judgment-debtor devolved upon the Appellants as the next heirs, and they in 1914 instituted the present suit, alleging that the proceedings at the sale had been collusive and fraudulent, that they had recently discovered that Bisheshar had applied to be allowed to bid and had been refused leave, but in spite of the refusal had purchased the village in the name of Hari Narain, who was his benamidar. The present Appellants made certain other points which were disposed of in the course of the proceedings.

The Respondent Bisheshar denied that Hari Narain was his benamidar, and said that Hari Narain was the true purchaser, who had since sold and transferred to him. He also took the point of the Statute of Limitations.

It must be taken to be true that he had applied to the Court for leave to bid and had been refused. Hari Narain purchased the property for Rs. 625 only and sold it, or purported to sell it, to Bisheshar, on the 9th December 1902, for Rs. 1,500. The case came before the Subordinate Judge, who by his decree, dated the 27th December 1916, decided in favour of the Plaintiffs, the present Appellants. He held that the purchase by Hari Narain was made by him as benamidar for Bis-heshar Sahay, and he thought that the Statute of Limitations did not apply, because he held that it was not a suit to set aside a voidable sale, but a suit to recover possession of immoveable property by the heirs in reversion on the death of the last female heir, and was therefore covered by Art. 141 of the Indian Limitation Act.

Bisheshar appealed to the High Court, which by its judgment, dated the 27th February 1919 reversed the decision, held that Hari Narain was not a benamidar, and further held that the suit was barred by Art. 12 of the Indian Limitation Act as being a suit to set aside a sale in execution of a decree by a Civil Court, for which the period of limitation is one year from the date when the sale is confirmed or would otherwise have become final and conclusive. If either of the defences raised by Bisheshar be established the judgment of the High Court at Patna would be right and the suit would fail.

Their Lordships will consider first the question whether it was proved that the transaction was benami. There is, as admitted in the judgment of the High Court, ground for suspecting that the transaction might be of this nature. The Judge of first instance took it as established, though there is some question as to the regularity of the proof, that Hari Narain was in position a servant and a servant to a brother of Bisheshar, and one not likely to have money, though there was some evidence that he had engaged in commercial transactions. The sum for which the property was sold was exceedingly low. In the view of the Subordinate Judge it was worth Rs. 1,500 or Rs. 1,600 a year gross, from which should be deducted the revenue cesses amounting to about Rs. 400 a year. Not only, therefore, was the original price absurdly low, but Hari Narain, if he were the real purchaser, though making a considerable profit on the re-sale, nevertheless sold to Bisheshar for much less than he might have expected to get for the property.

But, on the other hand, the widow of the original judgment-debtor, who seems to have been advised, made a number of objections to the sale and never raised this one, and the matter waited for upwards of 15 years, by which time Hari Narain was dead, before these proceedings were taken. It may be said that the widow and her advisers would not know who Hari Narain was, but the fact that the price was as low as it was would have put them upon inquiry, and indeed the witness for the Plaintiffs, Khub Lal, if he is to be believed, told the widow's brother about it from the first. The fact that the decree-holders were content to take so small a proportion of the nominal value of their shares in the decree seems to point to there being a deficiency in the mortgaged property. Moreover, Bisheshar's two brothers got in respect of their shares, which together were larger than Bisheshar's, only their small proportion of the net proceeds of the sale, and as they would certainly have known who Hari Narain was, they must either have been satisfied that the sale was good and that no more could have been realised, or they must have been parties to the fraud, which has not hitherto been suggested. Except the witness Khub Lal, whose evidence, taken as a whole, was unfortunate for the side which called him, and another witness whom the High Court thought unworthy of belief, there was nothing like affirmative evidence of a benami case.

Upon the whole, their Lordships agree with the view of the High Court that it has not been proved that Hari Narain was benami for Bisheshar. This is sufficient to dispose of the appeal.

With regard to the point on the Statute of Limitations as it was presented before the Courts in India, their Lordships are also of opinion that the decision of the High Court was right. The applicable section of the Code of Civil Procedure regulating sales in execution by the Court is as follows:—

“294 No holder of a decree in execution of which property is sold shall, without the express permission of the Court, bid for or purchase the property

“When a decree-holder purchases with such permission, the purchase money and the amount due on the decree may, if he so desires, be set off against one another, and the Court executing the decree shall enter up satisfaction of the decree in whole or in part accordingly.

“When a decree-holder purchases, by himself or through another person, without such permission, the Court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of the judgment-debtor or any other person interested in the sale, by order set aside the sale, and the costs of such application and order, and any deficiency of price which may happen on the re-sale, and all expenses attending it, shall be paid by the decree-holder”

Upon the construction of this section it is evident that a purchase by a decree-holder who has not obtained permission is not void nor a nullity, but is only to be avoided on the application of the judgment-debtor or some other person interested. It would be injurious to those interested in the sale if a decree-holder who had been forced up in the bidding to give a large sum of money could escape from fulfilling his contract by getting the sale declared a nullity, and it would make all titles under such sales insecure, if at later periods they were liable to be treated as nullities. A sale is to be set aside upon application and upon cause shown.

This position is well established and seems to have been accepted by the Subordinate Judge; but in his view the fact that the decree-holder had applied for permission and had been refused made a distinction. Their Lordships, however, cannot see that this makes any difference. He is still a decree-holder who has not obtained permission to bid. He is that and nothing more. If indeed an application were made under the last paragraph of the section, his conduct might be one of the points which the Court would take into consideration in determining whether it would avoid the sale or not. It is doubtful even then whether it would be of any importance. The question would not be whether the decree-holder had been contumacious, but whether the property had been really realised to the best advantage. If it had not, the Court would set the sale aside, if it had, then it mattered not that the decree-holder bought without permission or that he had applied and been refused. If, then, the sale is voidable only and not void, Art. 12 in the Act of 1908 applies, and the suit must be brought within one year. Therefore it was too late.

Counsel for the Appellants took a further point. He urged that this case might be treated as one of concealed fraud, to which sec. 18 of the Act and Art. 95 would apply, and that the fraud consisted in concealing from the Court that the decree-holder who had been refused was in fact buying through his benamidar. Their Lordships deem it unnecessary to consider this contention, which was never put forward or discussed in the Courts in India, and the foundation for which is deficient. There is indeed allegation but there is no proof of the time when the fraud, supposing that there were fraud, became known to the Plaintiffs (Appellants). Moreover, for this purpose the widow would represent the estate, and the Court would have to be satisfied that she did not know. In this connection the evidence of Khub Tal would have to be further considered, as well, perhaps, as that of other witnesses for the Plaintiffs.

For these reasons their Lordships deem it unnecessary to express any opinion upon this contention, and, upon the whole, they will advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Judgment, 23, May.

NARAIN DAS, Appellant,

v.

ABINASH CHAN-
DAR and anr.,

Respondents.

Infant, lease on behalf of—Alteration of terms so as to make it reasonable in order to bind minor, if permissible—Incomplete tender—Liability to pay interest—Rate of interest, what is reasonable in India.

A lease which taken as a whole was an unfair and inequitable transaction could not be altered and reduced into a proper and reasonable form in order to make it binding on an infant on whose behalf it was executed, when the objectionable features of the lease did not admit of separation from its general structure as an independent bargain between lessor and lessee.

A tender of payment accompanied by a condition which prevented it from being a perfect and complete tender does not relieve the payee of the obligation to pay interest.

Award of interest at 12 per cent. per annum was upheld as such a rate, though considered high in England, may be a very proper and reasonable rate to impose in the local conditions of India.

This was an appeal against the decree of the High Court of Judicature at Aliahabad, dated the 21st January 1919, which reversed the decree of the Additional Judge of Gorakpur, dated the 28th September 1916, and made in Original Suit No. 108 of 1915.

The said suit was brought on behalf of the present first Respondent for a declaration that a lease-deed executed on the 12th September 1913 by his father to the present Appellant, who was the first Defendant in the suit, was not binding on the Plaintiff, and for possession. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the Plaintiff's suit but on appeal the High Court passed a decree for him. The present appeal has been preferred by the first Defendant.

The Plaintiff, now the first Respondent, is the infant son of Shekhar Chand who was the second Defendant and is the second Respondent. During his minority Shekhar Chand's estate was under the management of the Court of Wards and when it was released to him on 28th August 1905 on his coming of age, it was worth about Rs. 24,000 a year. He was admittedly a man of weak character addicted to extravagance if not to vice and not competent to manage the estate. The Appellant Narain Das is a relative of the family who used to stay with him and look after his household affairs and certainly had a good deal to do with the management of the estate prior to the execution of the lease in question which comprised most of the lands. According to his own case he advanced considerable sums of money to Shekhar Chand who, to employ the language of one of the judgments referred to below, was under his thumb.

On the 12th September 1913, the Appellant obtained three deeds from Shekhar Chand; one was a sale-deed of part of the family property for Rs. 31,000, another was a mortgage for Rs. 50,000—both of these deeds have been set aside as against the minor as stated below—the third deed was the lease now in question which comprised all that remained of the estate. The High Court said, “the lease was a very improvident and inequitable one so far as the lessor was concerned, but it was still more unjust and inequitable and improvident so far as it related to the interest of the minor Plaintiff . . . It was for a term of 15 years. The gross rent reserved was Rs. 16,775 out of which the lessee was in the first place to pay Rs. 5,721 Government revenue; he was then to pay Rs. 5,000 to the Benares Bank on account of a mortgage made by Shekhar Chand, in the next place Rs. 3,755 was to be retained by the lessee to meet interest on the mortgage of even date. All that the lessor was to get for himself and his son was Rs. 3,804 per annum.” The provisions of the lease were submitted by the High Court to a detailed examination which led to their conclusion above stated that it was unfair and inequitable. The present Appellant stated before the High Court that he was ready to submit to the elimination of many objectionable provisions if he were permitted to retain possession but the suggestion was rejected.

Soon afterwards two suits were instituted on behalf of the minor by his next friend, viz., Suits No. 382 of 1913 and No 84 of 1914 for decrees setting aside altogether the sale-deed and mortgage above mentioned as well as another sale-deed which the present Appellant had obtained from Shekhar Chand in 1912. While these suits were pending, viz., on the 9th November 1914, a partition-decree was obtained against the father in Suit No 218 of 1914, dividing the entire family property in moieties. On the same day the two first-mentioned suits came on in the same Court and (on an application in which the present Appellant joined) the deeds there in question were set aside as against the minor's moiety only; and by a sale-deed of the same date Shekhar Chand conveyed to the present Appellant most of his own share in consideration of inter alia the amount secured by the mortgage of 12th September 1913, and the lease now in question. The present Appellant having thereafter declined to give up the lease and surrender possession the present suit became necessary.

On the 12th March 1915, the present suit was instituted on behalf of the minor, viz., the present first Respondent against Narain Das, joining also his father as second Defendant, for a declaration that the lease was not binding on him and for possession and mesne profits and other relief. The plaint set out the facts of the case referring inter alia to the previous litigation above mentioned and stating in paras. 5, 6 and 9 as follows:—

“(5). The Plaintiff and Babu Shekhar Chand were the members of a joint family and the entire family and ancestral property was jointly held by the father and the son. Babu Shekhar Chand had no power to transfer any property without any lawful necessity.”

“(6). The Plaintiff, having seen this state of affairs, brought a claim in this Court for the cancellation of the sale-deed and mortgage-deed in favour of Narain Das, along with a claim for partition of the family property.”

“(9). The lease in dispute has altogether been dishonestly executed with the object that Narain Das may become the owner of the property leased out, entered in list (B) annexed hereto, as will appear from the hard conditions given below. He himself did not execute any ‘qabuliat.’”

A written statement of defence was put in by the present Appellant in which he says inter alia:

“(6). As regards para. 6 of the plaint it is admitted that half of the property was released and that the claim in respect of the mortgage-deed was relinquished. The rest of the allegations is not admitted.”

“(9). Thus Defendant has realised from Defendant No 2 the amount due to him under the hypothecation bond, dated the 12th September 1913, sale-deeds, dated the 5th August 1912, and the 12th September 1913, by means of the sale-deed, dated the 9th November 1914. Babu Shekhar Chand has become liable for the other debts due to the Benares Bank, etc. As regards this the conditions laid down in the lease have become ineffectual. The complaint made by the Plaintiff in the plaint in respect of those conditions is improper and has no bearing on the case.”

And he pleaded that the transaction in question could not be impugned on behalf of the minor.

On these pleadings seven issues were framed of which the most material are the following:—

(2) Whether or not the Plaintiff can, during his minority, have the lease granted by the manager of the family set aside by suing through a next friend?

(3) If the Plaintiff be not bound by the "theka" in question, whether because the villages are joint, and are not yet actually partitioned, the Plaintiff cannot recover actual possession?

(4) Whether the "theka" in dispute was given in bad faith, and its terms are unreasonable and injurious to the family, and the Plaintiff is not bound by it?

(5) Is the Plaintiff entitled to have the said "theka" set aside as regards his half share of the property?

The suit having come on for hearing the Additional Judge delivered his judgment on the 28th September 1916, and passed a decree dismissing the suit. The second issue he found in favour of the Plaintiff. On the third issue he appears to hold that the fact that the land had been divided into separate moieties was a bar to the suit. On the fourth issue he says "I hold that the terms of the 'theka' were not hard or unreasonable, nor injurious to the family, and because the 'theka' was given when the family was joint, by the father, who was the head and manager of it, the Plaintiff is bound by it, and is not entitled to set it aside." He consequently decided the fifth issue against the Plaintiff.

Against the said decree an appeal was preferred to the High Court in which judgment was pronounced on the 21st January 1919. Referring to the mortgage, interest on which was provided for by the lease in question, the learned Judges say —

"A glance at the details of this consideration at once suggests that it was highly improbable that the joint undivided family property could have been mortgaged to pay off these debts. They had been incurred very recently after Shekhar Chand had come into possession of a very substantial property recently released from the charge of the Court of Wards. It seems the father of the Plaintiff was squandering the family property. The Plaintiff instituted a suit against Narain Das, contending that the mortgage could not bind the family estate. He brought another suit contending that the sale-deed for Rs. 31,000 did not bind the estate, and he brought a further suit for partition. It would appear that it was felt that it was impossible under the circumstances to resist the Plaintiff's claim and to maintain the mortgage and sale-deed as alienation of the family property justified by Hindu law. The result was that so far as the minor Plaintiff's interest in the property was concerned, the mortgage and sale-deed were set aside. The partition suit was settled upon the same lines, the Plaintiff was to have half of the property. The debts were to remain upon the father's share."

And they add:—

"We further think that the maintenance of the lease is quite contrary to the spirit, if not to the letter, of the compromise and settlement that was come to in respect of the suit for partition and the two suits to set aside the mortgage and sale-deed respectively."

The learned Judges' judgment as to the character of the lease appears from the citation contained in para. 4 above. In conclusion they passed a decree to the effect that the lease did not bind the Plaintiff's interest in the property, decreeing possession of a moiety of the land with mesne profits.

Against the said decree the present appeal has been preferred by the first Defendant, the second Defendant being joined as a Respondent with the minor Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Wallach for the Appellant.

Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Respondents were not called upon.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD BUCKMASTER.—Their Lordships do not desire to hear the Respondents in this case, for in their opinion the principle upon which it falls to be determined is one that is plain and can be simply stated.

The Appellant, Babu Narain Das, is the lessee under a lease granted to him on the 12th September 1912, by one Babu Shekhar Chand. The lease in question affected a joint family estate that was held by Shekhar Chand and his infant son, the first Respondent. Contemporaneously with the lease two other documents were executed; one was a sale of a part of the family property and the other a mortgage for Rs. 50,000, both in favour of the present Appellant. The lease was an unusual document, and it certainly does some credit to the ingenuity of the pleader who drew it, for he contrived to secure that the lease should at the same time serve the purpose of a lease and a collateral security for the mortgage-debt, for the terms provided that out of the rent payable by the lessee under its terms the interest that was due to him upon his mortgage-debt should be deducted, the result being that after all the different payments had been made as the lease provided the gross amount of Rs. 16,775 rent was reduced to Rs. 3,804 per annum.

Proceedings were subsequently instituted on behalf of the infant son to obtain partition of the joint estate, and a decree was made on the 9th November 1914, granting this claim. The actual partition does not appear to have taken place at present. Proceedings were also instituted for the purpose of setting aside the contemporaneous mortgage and the sale, and these ended by a compromise, the effect of which was that all that the infant could reasonably claim as his share of the family estate was released from the mortgage debt, and the sale-deeds were set aside. That compromise did not deal with the lease, which was made the subject of the subsequent proceedings out of which this appeal has arisen.

The learned Additional Judge before whom the matter first came found that the lease was one which the father could properly execute in discharge of his position as manager of the joint family estate. He examined all the rather unusual conditions of the lease with extreme minuteness, and came to the conclusion that upon the whole it was not possible for the infant to assert that the terms were so unreasonable that the lease should be set aside, but in his minute examination of the actual literal contents of the document he appears to have overlooked what is the fundamental question that lies at the root of the whole of these proceedings, that is, whether the lease, as it was drawn with its provisions for application of the rent, was a lease which could be regarded as fair and reasonable and in proper exercise of a manager's powers. As has already been pointed out, the lease was really in effect a collateral security for the mortgage-debt, and the result was that the infant's property was put into pledge to secure the re-payment of the moneys in respect of debts improvidently contracted by his father. Their Lordships think that the whole of this matter is effectively summed up in a sentence of the judgment of the High Court where they say that they regard the lease as 'an unfair and inequitable lease in regard to the Plaintiff's rights, and that the offer put forward on behalf of the Appellant that he is prepared to make all necessary alterations in the lease, in order to reduce it to a proper and reasonable form, is one that cannot be considered for the purpose of influencing their judgment, and with that opinion their Lordships agree. It is impossible to do what Counsel on behalf of the Appellant have ingeniously urged, to regard this provision for payment of the interest and any other provision that might be regarded as objectionable in the lease as in the nature of an independent bargain between the lessee and the lessor which can be cut out and separated from the general structure of the lease, and then can be so dealt with that the infant's property is relieved from these offensive provisions. The lease must be regarded as a whole. It must be regarded as it was drawn on the 12th September 1913, and so regarding it their Lordships think it is impossible successfully to contend that this lease is of such a character that would justify the manager of a joint family estate binding the joint family property by means of its terms.

There only remains the consideration of one or two trivial points that have been raised with regard to the claim for possession, and the arrangement for payment of interest on certain sums of money to which reference will be made.

The claim for possession can be dealt with very simply. This estate has not been partitioned, though the decree for partition has been made. The decree appealed from cannot reasonably be intended as a decree to put the Plaintiff into physical possession of that which still remains one undivided half of the whole. It only means that he has been excluded from his proper share of the property jointly held, and that he is entitled to possession for the purpose of securing his position.

With regard to the other matters one question is as to the sum of Rs 1,100 paid into the Bank by the Appellant consequent upon a tender that he made to the first Respondent. The tender was accompanied by a condition which prevented it being a perfect and complete tender, and the Respondent was under no obligation to accept it. It follows, therefore, that that cannot be regarded as the equivalent of payment, and that sum, if it is still in the control of the Appellant, should be handed over to the Respondent as part of the payment which he has to make. If, in fact, it is in any way in joint control so that it can be affected by an order of the Court, the Court will order that it be released and the money paid over to that Respondent.

With regard to the interest upon it, there is nothing in the circumstances in which it was paid that can relieve the Appellant from his liability to pay interest upon that sum. If it has earned interest that will go pro tanto in reducing his liability, but subject to that his liability remains.

The final question with regard to the amount of interest that has been allowed against the Appellant can be disposed of in a few sentences. The rate is 12 per cent. It appears, according to our notions in this country, a high rate of interest, but that has nothing whatever to do with the matter which their Lordships have to consider. It may very well be that, having regard to the local conditions in India, it is a very proper and reasonable rate to impose, and their Lordships see no reason whatever why any alteration should be made as to the amount.

NARAIN DAS v. ABINASH CHANDAR.

It follows, therefore, that this appeal must fail, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that it be dismissed with costs.

Benami transaction—Nature of evidence necessary to establish benami discussed—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 66, operation, of retrospective—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 317.

Where it is asserted that an assignment in the name of one person is really for the benefit of another, the most important test to be applied is the source from which the consideration came. Where from the lapse of time, direct evidence of a conclusive or reliable character is not forthcoming as to the payment of the consideration, the Courts will deal with the case on reasonable probabilities and inferences arising from proved or admitted facts, having regard to the surrounding circumstances, the position of the parties, their relations to one another, the motives which could govern their actions and their subsequent conduct, including their dealings with or enjoyment of the disputed property, not permitting the real question to be obscured by the form of expression used in the deeds of transfer or by recitals therein of obviously untrue statements.

Where, however, the Plaintiff contended as in the present suit that the purchaser at an execution sale which took place sometime ago was a benamidar for the judgment-debtor and all that he was able to prove was that the judgment-debtor was at the time of the sale in involved circumstances, that certain voluntary transfers by him were fictitious; that the auction-purchaser was distantly related to him and paid a small sum as purchase-money, and there was evidence that the properties sold were heavily encumbered and no evidence that the judgment-debtor continued to be in possession after the execution sale . . .

Held—That although there might be ground for suspicion and although some of the circumstances might engender doubt, no inference could be drawn, based on legal testimony, that the auction-purchaser was a benamidar for the judgment-debtor.

PROMODE KUMAR RAY v. KALI MOHAN SAHA PRAMANIK.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiffs in a suit for partition of land upon establishment of title. The subject-matter of the litigation is described in the plaint at 6 gds. 2 k. 2 kr. share in sikmi taluk Muhammad Amiruddin including, amongst others, released mouzahs Champaknagar and Kalai Gobindapur known as Budhiamara reformed after diluvion of Alinagar. The case for the Plaintiffs is that the disputed property belonged at one time to a wealthy Mahomedan lady of Dacca, by name Akikannessa Bibi, and that by successive devolutions, the share mentioned has vested in them. The case for the first four Defendants, who alone contested the claim, is that the interest has devolved on them, and that this litigation has been engineered by the fifth Defendant, Lalitmohan Ray, a pleader at Dacca, because he was unsuccessful in his effort to secure the property for his own benefit. The lands in controversy have a long and complicated history; but upon an examination of the evidence and a review of the relevant facts, the Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that the Plaintiffs had no vestige of a title and that they had failed to establish their possession within 12 years antecedent to the suit. In this view, the Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit with costs. On the present appeal, the arguments have been directed towards two fundamental questions, namely, first, whether successive purchases of the interest of Akikannessa by Abdul Majid and Abdul Azim were genuine or fictitious transactions; and, secondly, whether one Asmatannessa had a share in Champaknagar and Kalai Gobindapur, known as Budhiamara Khalasimahar, and if so, how much. A subordinate point has also been argued with regard to the title to an indigo factory and lands appertaining thereto.

As regards the first point, it is not disputed that one Kalachand Mukherjee obtained a decree for money against Akikannessa in 1891, and in execution brought the disputed properties to sale on the 9th March 1892, when Abdul Majid became the purchaser of three lots, two for Rs. 45 and a third for Rs. 42 making an aggregate of Rs. 87. The sale was confirmed on the 13th May. The Plaintiffs contend that the purchase was made by Akikannessa herself in the name of Abdul Majid. In support of this conclusion reliance is placed upon the surrounding circumstances, and it is urged that as Akikannessa was heavily indebted at the time, she had a motive to place her properties in the name of an ostensible owner. Our attention is drawn to the fact that on the 3rd February 1882, she borrowed Rs. 30,000 on mortgage from Ruplal Das and Raghunath Das, two well-known bankers of Dacca, and that the mortgagees sued on the 9th April 1891 to enforce their security, which resulted on the 30th June 1892 in a decree for over Rs. 88,000: besides this, in 1890 Nawab Asanullah of Dacca obtained a decree against her for more than Rs. 4,000 and when he attempted to realise his dues in execution, claims were preferred by her relations who had taken from her three deeds of gift or release on the 5th March 1891. These claim cases were unsuccessful, and the suits which were thereafter instituted by the disappointed claimants on the 22nd January 1892, were all ultimately dismissed on the 11th January 1913. There can, we think, be little doubt that Akikannessa was pressed by her creditors in 1891 and was in considerable embarrassment at or about the time when Kalachand

PROMODE KUMAR RAY v. KALI MOHAN SAHA PRAMANIK.

Mukherjee obtained his decree against her. There is also little doubt that she had recourse at the time to fictitious transfers, as is sufficiently indicated by the result of the claim cases mentioned. The Defendants urge, however, that it does not necessarily follow that the purchase by Abdul Majid was fictitious, merely because the judgment-debtor was involved in litigation and made ineffectual efforts to place her estate beyond the reach of her creditors. But we are pressed to take into consideration also other events which happened immediately afterwards. In 1895, one Ayesha Akhtar Khatun, a co-sharer zemindar, obtained a rent-decree against Akikannessa and others. The decree was executed, and the disputed properties were purchased on the 15th December 1896 by one Chandra Kumar Ray, on behalf of the fifth Defendant Lalitmohan Ray, for a sum of Rs 500. This sale was confirmed on the 24th February. At the same time, a similar decree was obtained by the same Plaintiff against Golamullah and others with the result that, at the time which followed, Chandra Kumar Ray became the purchaser as before for Rs. 805 and the sale was confirmed on the 24th February 1897. Before confirmation of the sales, Chandra Kumar Ray and Lalitmohan Ray, however, jointly executed a conveyance in favour of Abdul Azim on the 13th January 1897 for a sum of Rs. 1,605, that is, upon a profit of Rs. 300 on the purchase-money actually paid at the execution sales. Meanwhile, Jabinda Khatun and others, another set of co-sharers, zemindars, had obtained two rent decrees in 1895 against Golamullah and others. The decree-holders took out execution, whereupon Abdul Azim preferred two claims. On the 4th January 1898, the claims were allowed, except in respect of the share of Akikannessa in taluk

Muhammad Amiruddin. On the 24th February 1898, Abdul Azim, whose claim had thus proved abortive in part, took a conveyance from Abdul Majid for a sum of Rs. 199. The substance of the transaction was that Abdul Azim who had failed in his claim, in respect of the share of Akikannessa, acquired the outstanding title from Abdul Majid so that he might be able to rely thereupon in the event of future dispute. The decree-holders, Jabinda Akhtar Khatun and others proceeded with execution of their decree in so far as the claim order allowed, and on the 14th March 1898, Tarini Charan Saha became purchaser for Rs 625 of the share of Akikannessa in taluk Muhammed Amiruddin. On the 24th April 1902, Abdul Azim executed a conveyance in favour of Nurennessa, the daughter-in-law of Akikannessa, in respect of the taluks together with arrears of rent, for a sum of Rs. 6,000. On the 2nd June 1902, Nurennessa granted a mirash tenure of the properties to Abdul Azim and his brother Abdul Halim on receipt of Rs. 2,500 as bonus and on a net annual rental of Rs. 600, the lessees undertaking to pay in addition the head rent direct to the zemindars. On the 17th March 1904, Nurennessa conveyed her right to receive rent under the lease of 2nd June 1902, to the fifth Defendant Lalitmohan Ray, for a consideration of Rs. 6,000. Thereafter, on the 3rd December 1909, Tarini Charan Saha and his brother Chandra Nath Saha conveyed their interest to the present Plaintiffs and others for a sum of Rs. 500. On the 27th September 1913, the Plaintiffs instituted this suit on the strength of their purchase. The history outlined above makes it plain that the title of the Plaintiffs is dependent upon the true effect of the purchase by Tarini Charan Saha on the 14th March 1898. That title is ineffectual against the contesting Defendants, if a real interest has already vested in Abdul Azim by virtue of his purchase, dated 24th February 1898, from Abdul Majid, who had acquired the interest of Akikannessa under the sale which was held on the 9th March 1892 in execution of the decree obtained by Kalachand Mukherjee and was confirmed on the 13th May 1892. The Plaintiffs are, consequently, driven to assert that the purchase by Abdul Majid on the 9th March 1892, as also the purchases by Abdul Azim on the 13th January 1897 from Lalitmohan Ray and on the 24th February 1898 from Abdul Majid were fictitious transactions, which left the title of Akikannessa wholly unaffected and free to vest in the Defendants through the purchase of Tarini Charan Saha. The Subordinate Judge has held that the purchases by Abdul Majid and Abdul Aziz were all genuine transfers. In our opinion, no good grounds have been established to justify our dissent from this conclusion.

It is important to bear in mind in this class of cases that, as pointed out by Lord Phillimore in Seth Maniklal v. Raja Bijoy Singh (1), the decision of the Court should rest not upon suspicion but upon legal grounds established by legal testimony. This recalls the earlier pronouncements to the same effect by Lord Westbury in Sreeman Chunder v. Gopaul Chunder (2) and by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Mina Kumari v. Bejoy Singh (3). But we are not unmindful that in the words of Lord Hobhouse in Uman Prasad v. Gandharp Singh (4) and of Lord Shaw in Mohammad Mahabub Ali v. Bharat Indu (5), as benami transactions are very familiar in Indian practice, even a slight quantity of evidence to show that it was a sham transaction may suffice for the purpose. The person who impugns its apparent character must not rely, however, solely on probabilities, as Lord Buckmaster observed in Irshad Ali v. Kariman (6). He must show something definite to establish that it is a sham transaction, on the principle that the burden of proof lies upon the person, who claims contrary to the tenor of a deed and alleges that the apparent is not the real state of things, Azimut Ali v. Hardwaree Mull (7), Faez Baksh v. Fakiruddin (8), Suleman Kader v. Mehdi Begum (9), Nirmal Chunder v. Mahomed Siddiq (10) and Matulal v. Kundan Lal (11). The most important test to be applied in these cases is, as observed by Mr Ameer Ali in Nrityamoni v. Lakhan Chandra (12), the source whence the consideration came. Sir George Fairwell formulated the same test in different language, when he observed in Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Ram (13), that where it is asserted that an assignment in the name of one person is really for the benefit of another person, the principle that the trust of the legal estate results to the man who pays the purchase-money applies. To the same effect is the decision of the Judicial Committee in Parbati v. Baikuntha (14), which recalls the earlier pronouncements by Lord Campbell in Dhurumdas v. Syamasundari (15) and by Knight Bruce L. J., in Gopee Kristo v. Gunga Prosad (16). Where, however, from the lapse of time, direct evidence of a conclusive or reliable character is not forthcoming as to the payment of consideration, the case must be dealt with on reasonable probabilities and legal inferences arising from proved or admitted facts. Sir Arthur Wilson emphasised this when he observed in Dalip Singh v. Nawal Kunwar (17) that if the evidence on neither side is wholly convincing as to the fundamental criterion, namely, the source of the purchase money, if the evidence given and withheld is open to adverse criticism, the Court must rely on the surrounding circumstances, the position of the parties and their relation to one another, the motives which could govern their actions and their subsequent conduct, including their dealings with or enjoyment of the disputed property, see Upendra Nath v. Purendra Nath (18). We must further look to the substance of the transaction as evidenced in the deeds of the parties, not permitting the real question to be obscured by what Knight Bruce, L. J., calls, in Hunooman Pershad v. Babui Moonraj Kunwaree (19), the form of expression, the literal sense, nor by what Lord Macnaghten describes in Lal Achal Ram v. Kazim Husain (20), as exhibitions of the art of the conveyancer in the shape of recitals of obviously untrue statements introduced to impart some additional solemnity to an instrument.

Keeping these well-established principles in view in the consideration of the evidence, the Subordinate Judge has interpreted the surrounding circumstances as unfavourable to the theory that Abdul Majid and Abdul Azim were shadows of Akikannessa and never really acquired her interest in the disputed property. It is not questioned that Akikannessa was heavily involved at the time, but that is consistent with the theory that there was a real sale at the instance of Kalachand Mukherjee, who found it otherwise impossible to recover his dues. Stress has also been laid on the circumstance that Abdul Majid made the purchase for a small sum, but the fact cannot be ignored that the properties sold were heavily encumbered, while no evidence is forthcoming to establish accurately the relation the purchase money paid bore to the real value of the right, title and interest brought to sale. There is also the circumstance that the purchaser and the judgment-debtor were distantly related; but it must be remembered that strangers, unless speculative purchasers, would hardly be anxious to step in when the entire estate of Akikannessa and her co-sharers was involved in what the Subordinate Judge calls a general overwhelming ruin. As regards the source of the purchase money, there is no room for suspicion that the purchaser was not able to provide the sum. Nor can much weight be attached to the fact that Akikannessa did attempt to effect colourable transfers in favour of some of her relations; that does not show that all the transfers, voluntary or compulsory, were of the same character. As was observed by Lord Westbury in Sreeman Chunder

v. Gopaul Chunder (2), if we were to take away men's estate upon inferences derived from such circumstances as these, it would be impossible that any property would be safe. The Subordinate Judge has observed that the considerations applicable to the purchase by Abdul Majid at the execution sale apply also more or less to the purchases by Abdul Aziz from Abdul Majid and from the fifth Defendant Lalitmohan Ray. We may add that upon the fundamental test of possession, the Plaintiffs are in inextricable difficulty; for the evidence does not establish that Akikannessa continued in occupation notwithstanding all the transfers mentioned, nor that the Plaintiffs have custody of the title deeds. On a review of the whole evidence, we are not prepared to dissent from the view taken by the Subordinate Judge that although there may be ground for suspicion and although some of the surrounding circumstances may engender doubt, no inference can be drawn from legal testimony that Abdul Majid and Abdul Azim were the benamidars of Akikannessa. In this view, it is not necessary to consider whether sec. 317 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 which was in operation when Abdul Majid became purchaser at the execution sale on the 9th March 1892 governs the case, or whether the Plaintiffs are debarred from raising the question of benami under sec. 66 of the Code of 1908, which is now in force. The decision of this Court in Pro-matha Nath v. Mohini Mohan (21) shows that the stringent rule in favour of the certified purchaser, enunciated in the Code of 1908, has not retrospective operation and cannot be utilized by an execution purchaser whose title was perfected when sec. 317 of the Code of 1882 was in force. This, however, is immaterial, because we have held that the execution purchaser Abdul Majid was the real purchaser, and the subsequent purchases by Abdul Azim also were real transfers. This renders it superfluous for the Plaintiffs to invoke the aid of the principle formulated by the Judicial Committee in Ram Coomarr Koondoo v McQueen (22) and Mohamed Mozaffer Hoosin v Kisor Mohan (23), which would protect them as bonâ fide purchasers for value without notice from ostensible holders, even if Akikannessa were shown to have utilised Abdul Majid and Abdul Azim to carry out a scheme of benami.

As regards the second point, the Subordinate Judge has pointed out that the question of the nature and extent of the rights of the parties in Marzaha Champaknagar and Kalai Gobindapur known as Budhiamara Char is involved in considerable obscurity. This is chiefly due to the fact that as the village had been diluviated many years ago and reformed only in part, the parties themselves had no clear knowledge of their rights and dealt with them in a reckless manner. The three documents which throw light on this matter are the partition deed and the ekrarnama of the 3rd March 1843, and the robakari of Mr H. N. Metcalfe, Collector of Tippierrah, dated the 2nd April 1845. In the partition deed, the villages Kalai Gobindapur, Champaknagar, Budhiamara and Alinagar are treated as distinct villages, and the first three are taken to appertain to more than one distinct mahal. This confusion is reproduced in the robakari. But the thak papers as also the settlement papers show that there is no separate mouza of the name of Budhiamara; it appears to be only another name of Kalai Gobindapur and Champaknagar, which are in reality the names of two different parts of Alinagar. The partition deed and the ekrarnama leave no room for doubt that such of the lands as at the time were either not in possession of the parties or were the subject-matter of litigation were left unpartitioned. The lands of Alinagar were given to Khatunjan, and consequently, the title to the released lands would vest in her. Her title could not be affected by reason of assertions in derogation of her undoubted right made by her co-sharers and others in documents of a later date. The inference follows that the Shikmi taluks are now vested in the fifth Defendant, and the first four Defendants are the mirashdars. Consequently, neither the Plaintiffs nor the Defendants, other than those mentioned, have a share in Budhiamara, and the claim in this respect has been rightly dismissed.

Next, as regards the indigo factory there is no doubt that the partition deed of the 3rd March 1843 implies an under-tenure in respect thereof under Khatunjan, and this is supported by the ekrarnama. But there is no evidence to show that this under-tenure was ever really in existence, or rent was at any time paid on account of it. We are unable to hold, in these circumstances, that an under-tenure ever came into existence or was in operation at the date of the institution of this suit.

Finally, we have to consider the question of limitation. The Subordinate Judge has pointed out that complete sets of collection papers have not been produced on either side and that what has been placed before the Court does not indicate that either side was in peaceful occupation. He has held, however, that, on the whole, the balance of evidence as to possession is in favour of the Defendants who are proved to be the rightful owners. In such circumstances, the rule enunciated by the Judicial Committee in Rampram Pande v Gobardhan Pande (24) may be applied, namely, that where there is strong evidence of possession on the part of the Respondents, opposed by evidence apparently strong also on the part of the Appellant, in estimating the weight due to the evidence on both sides, the presumption may well be regarded that possession went with the title, and that with the aid of it, there is a stronger probability that the Respondents' case is true than that of the Appellant; see also Secretary of State v Chellikani (25), Krishnen v. Peringati (26), Raja Shuaprasad Singh v Hira Singh (27), Jai Chand v Girwar Singh (28), Innasimuttu v Upakarath (29) and Lala Singh v Mir Latif (30), which points out that in the judgment in Mirza Shamser v Kunjabhavi (31), the word "satisfactory" is misprinted as "unsatisfactory" in the passage summarising the rule in Rampram v. Gobardhan (24).

The result is that the decree made by the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

APPEALS FROM ORIGINAL DECREES

NOS. 79 AND 167 OF 1922.

MOOKERJEE, J. | RAGHUNATH SARMA and
CHOTZNER, J. | ors., Appellants,
v.
1922, | JIBAN CHANDRA SARMA,
7, July | Petitioner, Respondent.

Election of temple trustees—English law, how far applicable in India - Persons not entered in voters' list, if can vote.

Where the validity of the election of Daloi or the head priest of the Madhub temple at Hajo in Kamrup who is elected by the Burdeories whose names are recorded in a list prepared for that purpose was assailed on the ground that persons whose names were not entered in the list of voters were permitted to participate in the election Held—That there was nothing in the scheme of election which ordained that the right to vote was dependent on the entry of the names of voters in the voters' list, nor did it provide or follow, in the absence of an express direction to that effect, that those not so entered could not vote. There was therefore no infringement of any mandatory rule.

SHYAM CHAND BASAK v CHAIRMAN, DACCA MUNICIPALITY (1) referred to.

Held also—That the English common law of parliamentary elections should not be applied to regulate the election of temple trustees in this country though the principles which underlie that law may be involved if they appear to the Court to be in conformity with the rules of justice, equity and good conscience.

This was an appeal against the decrees of S. E. Stinton, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Assam Valley Districts, dated the 4th of March 1922.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Dr Sarat Chandra Basak, Babus Prokash Chandra Majumdar, Mohesh Chandra Banerji and Manmatha Nath Roy II for the Appellants.

Babus Ram Chandra Majumdar and Bryan Kumar Mukherjee for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :

This appeal is directed against a determination of the question of validity of an election to the headship of the Madhub temple at Hajo in the District of Kamrup. The high priest is named Daloi and the last incumbent of the office died on the 21st December 1917. This religious endowment is described in the proceedings as ancient and its management is now regulated by a scheme drawn up by this Court on the 1st May 1911 in modification of a scheme prepared by the District Judge on the 9th December 1908, in a suit instituted under sec. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 for the administration of the trust.

This scheme directs that the Daloi be elected as before by the Burdeories of the temple, to hold the office for life unless removed by the Civil Court in a suit instituted for that purpose. There will also be a Committee of five elected members besides the Daloi who will hold office for three years. Three of the members will be elected by the Burdeories and two by the Shebais; the Daloi will be the sixth and will have a casting vote. The scheme further directs that a Commissioner be appointed by the Court to prepare a list of the Burdeories living within 5 miles of Hajo, who will be entitled to vote at the election of a Daloi and of the members of the Committee. There will also be a list of the Shebais entitled to vote for the Committee; and the Court will indicate the manner in which such election should be held for future guidance. The Committee will revise the list of voters once a year after the publication of notice and will arrange for the election of their successors and of a Daloi when there is a vacancy.

In accordance with this scheme, steps were taken for the election of a Daloi and the election was in fact held on the 15th January 1918. The result was that the present Appellant received 203 votes and the Respondent 48 votes. The validity of the election was consequently challenged by the Respondent. The District Judge allowed the objection and cancelled the election. On appeal, this Court reversed the decision of the District Judge and remitted the case for further consideration. The District Judge thereupon upheld the objection that the election had been held in an objectionable manner and again cancelled the election. There was a further appeal to this Court which was dismissed on the 10th February 1921. But this Court directed that a list of voters be framed and that a fresh election be held after the Committee had been reconstituted. The election was held on the 19th and 20th February 1922, and we are now called upon to decide whether the election was valid in law.

The validity of the election is assailed on the ground that persons whose names were not entered in the list of voters were permitted to participate in the election. This objection has been overruled by the District Judge and has been re-iterated here as a matter of principle. On behalf of the Appellant the position has been maintained that the Commissioner who held the election was not competent to permit any person to participate in the election whose name had not been previously entered in the electoral roll. We are of opinion that there is no force in this contention. There is nothing in the scheme which ordains that the right to vote is dependent on the entry of the name in the voters' list. Although the scheme states that those Burdeories whose names are entered in the list are entitled to vote, it does not provide nor does it follow in the absence of an express direction to that effect that those not so entered cannot vote. There is consequently no infringement of a mandatory rule, Shyam Chand Basak v. Chairman, Dacca Municipality (1). This view of the effect of this scheme was incidentally adopted by Mr. Justice Woodroffe and Mr. Justice Smither in an earlier stage of these proceedings. But it has been urged before us that the question was not at that stage directly and substantially in issue. This may be conceded. We are of opinion, however, that the view then taken was undoubtedly well-founded on principle.

Under sec. 7 of the Ballot Act, 1872, it is provided that at any election for a county or a borough, a person shall not be entitled to vote unless his name is on the register of voters for the time being in force for such county or borough, and every person whose name is on such register shall be entitled to demand and receive a ballot paper and to vote; provided that nothing in this section shall entitle any person to vote who is prohibited from voting by any statute or by the Common Laws of Parliament, or relieve such person from any penalties to which he may be liable for voting. The effect of this provision was examined in the case of Stowe v. Jolliffe (2), where it was ruled that the register is conclusive not only at, but after, the election, so that the votes of persons whose names are on the register cannot be struck off on a petition unless the persons come within the proviso. Lord Coleridge reviewed the history of the establishment of register of voters and pointed out that it was not till the register was established by the Reform Act that the view was adopted that the entry of the name of a voter on the register was a condition precedent to the exercise of franchise by him. A similar provision will be found in the rules framed on the 21st November 1896 under the Bengal Municipal Act. These rules are so framed as to make no person eligible to vote, unless he has been previously duly registered in accordance with the rules prescribed for the maintenance of register of voters. In the case before us, there is no provision in the scheme to the effect that the right of a person to vote at the election is dependent on the entry of his name in the register. We are consequently of opinion that it cannot be maintained as a matter of principle that the election in this case is invalidated by the fact that persons were permitted to participate in the election, though their names had not been previously placed on the register of voters. In this connection reference may be made to the decision in Ramau Julu v. Partha Sarathi (3), where it was pointed out that the Common Law of England relating to parliamentary elections should not be applied to regulate the election of temple trustees in this country, though the principles which underlie that law may be invoked, if they appear to the Court to be in conformity with the rules of justice, equity and good conscience.

In the view we take, the only question which remains for consideration is, whether the facts found by the District Judge show that the election has been fairly held. As regards the voters who recorded their votes in favour of the Respondent, objection has been taken on the ground that two of them, who were originally infants but had attained majority at the time of the election, were allowed to take part in the election and that two other persons whose father was a voter and recorded as such in the register, but had died before the election, were also allowed to take part in the election. The course adopted by the Commissioner in these circumstances was manifestly correct. It is not disputed that each of these persons possessed the necessary qualifications at the time when the election took place.

As regards the voters who were excluded from the election and who, it is asserted, would have recorded their votes in favour of the Appellant, the District Judge has found that the objection is groundless. These persons did not appear at the proper time and at the proper place to record their votes. They visited the Commissioner at a time when the election was not in progress and at a place other than that fixed for the election. The Commissioner also was not satisfied as to some of them that they are the persons whose names were recorded as voters. We are of opinion that the course adopted by the Commissioner cannot be successfully challenged.

It has finally been urged on behalf of the Appellant that opportunity was not granted to him to establish his objection at the time of the scrutiny of the votes recorded. There is no substance in this contention. There are no rules prescribed as to the mode in which the scrutiny is to be conducted. The only test to be applied is, whether the party who takes exception to the voters' record has been prejudiced by the procedure adopted. We are unable to say that there was any genuine attempt made by the Appellant to support his allegation by the production of evidence. There is nothing to show that he asked the Commissioner or the District Judge to take evidence in support of his assertions. In these circumstances we are not satisfied that he has a real grievance in this matter.

The result is that we affirm the decree made by the District Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs, 5 (five) gold mohurs.

F. A. No. 167 of 1922

In view of our judgment in F. A. No. 79 of 1922, the Appellant does not wish to proceed with this appeal, which is consequently dismissed but without costs.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE No. 213 OF 1922.

RICHARDSON, J.	LAL BEHARI BASAK,
B. B. GHOSE, J.	Plaintiff, Petitioner,
1922,	v.
2, August.	AKHIL CHANDRA
	SANTRA, Defendant,
	Opposite Party.

Bengal Tenancy Act, (VIII of 1885), sec. 153, proviso, revisional powers of the Additional District Judge in rent suits—Civil Courts Act (XII of 1887), sec. 8, Additional District Judge's power to hear an application under the proviso to sec. 153, transferred to him by the District Judge.

Where an application under the proviso to sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act presented to the District Judge was transferred by him to the Additional District Judge for hearing and was dismissed by the latter:

Held—That the District Judge in transferring the application to the Additional District Judge no doubt acted under the general powers conferred on him by sec. 8 of the Civil Courts Act, the provisions of which are wide enough to enable an Additional District Judge to hear an application under the proviso to sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act transferred to him for disposal by the District Judge. The jurisdiction conferred by the proviso on the District Judge is a function of the District Judge which under the Civil Courts Act he may assign to an Additional Judge.

GAUDNA BIBI v. JABANULLA MANDOL
(1) distinguished.

This was a Rule issued by this Court, on the 5th April 1922 against an order of the Additional District Judge of Howrah, dated the 3rd January 1922, dismissing the petition of revision presented by the Petitioner against the decree passed in Rent Suit No. 265 of 1920.

The facts of the case are briefly as follows—The Petitioner brought a rent suit against the Opposite Party in the Munsif's 2nd Court at Howrah, which was, however, eventually dismissed. Thereupon the Petitioner moved the District Judge of Hooghly against the said decree under the proviso to sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The District Judge transferred the application to the Additional District Judge of Howrah for disposal and the latter dismissed it on 3rd January 1922. Thereupon the Petitioner moved the High Court and urged inter alia that the District Judge exercised his jurisdiction illegally and with material irregularity in transferring the case to the Additional District Judge and that the latter exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him in hearing and dismissing the application.

LAL BEHARI BASAK v. AKHIL CHANDRA SANTRA. -

Babus Hari Charan Ganguli and Monmohon Dose for the Petitioner.

Babu Hira Lal Chakravorty for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Rule relates to an order, dated the 3rd January 1922, made by the Additional District Judge of Howrah whereby he dismissed the application of the Petitioner presented to the District Judge of Hooghly under the proviso to sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and transferred by the District Judge to him for hearing.

The Rule obtained by the Petitioner calls upon the Opposite Party to show cause why the Additional District Judge's order should not be set aside for the reasons set forth in ground (a) of the petition. Ground (a) of the petition is to the effect "that the learned District Judge exercised his jurisdiction illegally and with material irregularity in transferring the case to the Additional District Judge and the latter exercised jurisdiction not vested in him in proceeding with the trial and dismissing the motion."

In support of the Rule reliance was placed on the case of Gaudna Bibi v Jabanulla Mandul (1). We have referred to the record of the case in this Court and we find that there the Additional Judge of Jessore had before him an appeal described in the title as a miscellaneous appeal. The learned Additional Judge dealt with the matter not as an appeal but as an application under sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and it was held by this Court that he had no jurisdiction in those circumstances to deal with the case as an application under sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the present case the application of the Opposite Party tenant was properly made to the District Judge of Hooghly who appears to have transferred it for disposal to the Additional District Judge of Howrah.

In so doing the District Judge no doubt acted under general powers conferred on him by sec. 8 of the Civil Courts Act, XII of 1887.

Sub-sec (2) of that section provides :—

"Additional Judges . . . shall discharge any of the functions of a District Judge which the District Judge may assign to them, and in the discharge of those functions, they shall exercise the same powers as the District Judge."

We are of opinion that the case cited is distinguishable from the present case on the facts and that the provision in the Civil Courts Act to which we have referred is wide enough to enable an Additional Judge to hear an application under the proviso to sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act transferred to him for disposal by the District Judge. No doubt the jurisdiction conferred by the proviso is conferred on the District Judge but in our view the hearing of an application under the proviso is a function of a District Judge which under the Civil Courts Act, he may assign to an Additional Judge. If that be so, the order of the learned Additional Judge to which the Rule relates was not made without jurisdiction and this Rule must be discharged with costs (hearing fee one gold mohur).

VISCOUNT CAVE. T. P. SRINIVASA CHA-
 LORD SHAW. RIAR, since deceased SIR JOHN EDGE. (now represented by MR. AMEER ALL. T. P. Rangachariar 1922, and anr), Appellants, Heard, 2, 3, 6, 7 and v.
 9, March. C. N. EVALAPPA Judgment, MUDALIAR,
 6, April. Respondent.

Trust property, later on held by trustee as personal property—Property whether legitimately or improperly converted into personal property—Onus—Trustee concocting false accounts to support claim to trust property adversely to trust, liability to removal—(Dharmakartha), position of, distinguished from that of shebait or mohant—Survey and Settlement Register, value as evidence.

Where property is found originally to have been trust property, the onus does not rest on the beneficiaries to prove that they have been illegitimately converted into personal property by the trustee. The onus rests heavily, on the other hand, on the trustee to show by the clearest and most unimpeachable evidence the legitimacy of his personal acquisition.

Survey and Settlement Registers are important but not conclusive evidence of ownership, being official documents made after minute inspection and enquiries on the spot, though they do not commit parties to the statements recorded therein as admissions or affirmations.

The position of a Dharmakartha is not that of a shebait of a religious institution or of the mohant or head of a mutt. These functionaries have a much higher right with larger power of disposal and administration and they have a personal interest of a beneficial character. But a Dharmakartha is literally, and no more than, the manager of a charity, and his rights, apart it may be in certain circumstances from the question of personal support, are never in a higher legal category than that of a mere trustee.

A trustee who set up unfounded assertions of personal title in endowed properties and strenuously supported them by even concocting accounts cannot be continued in the office in the interest of the trust and should be removed by the Court.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Madras, dated the 6th March 1917, which varied a decree of the District Judge of Chingleput, dated the 11th December 1914.

The suit was instituted by the Plaintiffs as Tirthan Mirasidars and Ubhaya-kars of the Vishnu temple of Jagannatha Perumal and Trumushi Alwar at Madavilagam, asking for the removal of the Defendant (Respondent) from his position as Dharmakartha of the temple on the ground that he had misappropriated the temple properties, failed to keep accounts, and interfered in the ceremonies.

The Defendant contended that he was hereditary trustee of the temple, that the temple had never owned the major portion of the lands claimed, and he denied the various charges of misfeasance.

The trial Judge found that the Plaintiffs had not established the title of the temple to any of the land in question, but held that the Defendant had produced false accounts and wrongfully interfered in the temple ceremonial and festivities and ordered his removal, and the formation of a scheme for the proper management of the endowment.

From this decree the present Respondent appealed to the High Court of Madras and the Appellant filed cross-objections.

The appeal was heard by Sir J. Wallis, C. J., and Seshagiri Ayyar, J., who passed a decree declaring certain of the property claimed by the Respondent to belong to the temple, but held that there were not sufficient grounds for dismissing the Respondent though they ordered him to pay the costs throughout. The Plaintiffs were now the Appellants to His Majesty in Council.

Sir George Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Appellants.—The whole of Madavilagam was "miras" land, and the temple was sole "mirasdar" of the village. Now the mirasdar is bound to cultivate hence the appointment of the Dharmakartha who has been cultivating on behalf of the temple.

The rights and history of mirasdars will be found in the Chingleput Manual, 1879, at pp. 222, 258, 288, 300 and Fifth Report of the Select Committee on the Affairs of the East India Co., Vol. 3, p. 199.

See too Place's Final Report, para. 189.

Having regard to the nature of mirasi tenure the onus is on the Defendant to show that these mirasi lands became his property, and he has failed to discharge it.

The Dharmakartha is to all intents and purposes a trustee. He is distinguishable from a shebait in that he has no beneficial interest in the property. The Defendant here apparently thought he was a shebait and was entitled to any surplus and accordingly kept no accounts.

A trustee's first duty is to keep accounts.

Lewin on Trusts, 11th Ed., p. 866.

Further, he has contended throughout that the trust property is his own and has fabricated accounts.

He has also admittedly mixed his own property with the trust property which raises a presumption against him.

Lupton v. White (2)

These acts constitute a wilful breach of trust for which the trustee should be removed.

See Tudor's Charitable Trusts (1899), p. 194 and Pearry Mohan Mukerji v. Monohar Mukerji (3).

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., Kenworthy Brown and Palat for the Respondent—The Dharmakartha cannot be said to be a trustee, nor can the English law of trusts be applicable to him. He is merely a manager representing the property.

Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar (4) and Bombay, Burmah Trading Corporation, Ltd. v. Smith (5).

Mayne's Hindu Law, 7th Edn., para. 437.

The Dharmakartha is in fact identical with a shebait.

A "miras" tenant is only a tenant with a permanent right of occupancy as distinguished from a "paikari." Admittedly we are hereditary Dharmakarthas, that is so, because we are the heirs of the founder. Certain lands were granted by Government for the support of the temple, but not the lands in suit which have always been the private property of the Dharmakartha's family. The income of this property has never been applied to the temple so that if there has been a breach of trust it took place over 100 years ago.

The temple was taken over by Government in 1814 and the endowments applied to charitable purposes.

See Madras Regulation, VII of 1817.

Yet in the subsequent records the ancestors of the present Dharmakartha are shown as owners.

There is in any case no substantial question of law in this case and no appeal lies to the Privy Council.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal against the judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated the 6th March 1917, which varied a decree of the District Judge of Chingleput, dated the 11th December 1914.

This suit was instituted by the present Appellant and another, under the Civil Procedure Code, sec. 92. The prayer of the plaint was for an account of the Respondent's management of a temple in the District of Chingleput since his assumption of office, and that he be made accountable for all losses occasioned to this temple by his breaches of trust, for his removal from office, and for the settlement of a scheme for the management of the Devasthanam and its properties." Incidentally, the judgment for accounts made in the suit has raised a question of complexity and importance as to the ownership of lands of considerable extent and value. The issue upon that topic is the principal one raised in this appeal. It is whether those lands belonged to the temple or are the private property of the Respondent, who, in point of fact, is its Dharmakartha or hereditary trustee.

The grounds for the removal of the Respondent from the position of Dharmakartha have been added to by the conduct of the Respondent in the course of the suit, and now include not only misfeasance and breach of trust, but the proved falsification of the temple accounts.

This question of removal from the position of trustee will be afterwards dealt with, but it may here be mentioned that the former question, viz, the question of the true ownership of the temple properties, so keenly contested by the Respondent, has not only to be determined on its merits, but may turn out to have a bearing upon the question of his removal from office.

The case is very involved, and their Lordships have to acknowledge the care which has been manifested with regard to it in the Courts below, and in particular the elaborate investigations of the history of this property made by the District Judge.

As it is desirable that the Board should endeavour to exclude from this judgment all such details as might obscure the question of principle dealt with, it may be well to consider the respective positions of parties in the clear language adopted by the District Judge. His narrative of the Plaintiff's case is this:—

"2. The Plaintiffs allege that they are the tirtham mirasidars and ubhayakars of the said temple, that the Defendant is its trustee, that its management since 1842, when the Government handed over the same, has been in the family of the Defendant, that the endowments to the temple consist of meras from Government, income from lands and contribution from ubhayakars, that the administration of the temple by the Defendant has been unsatisfactory and that he is guilty of various acts of misfeasance, malfeasance, nonfeasance, breach of trust and neglect of duty. The instances of misconduct are set forth in para. 9 of the plaint, the main item being with reference to the lands wet and dry and manyams described in A (1) to A (8) schedules of the plaint which it is alleged to belong to the temple, and the Defendant is charged with misappropriation of the income from them without bringing the same into the temple accounts, and it is alleged that these accounts are not regularly and correctly kept."

His narrative of the Defendant's case is as follows:—

"3 The Defendant contends that he is the hereditary trustee of the temple and that his ancestors were the trustees even before the Government assumed management thereof, and denies that he is guilty of any act of misfeasance, etc., alleged in the plaint. He further states that the plaint temple never owned or enjoyed any of plaint A1 or A2 schedule lands, that item 1 of A3 schedule is enjoyed by the temple, and that, in item 2 of A3 schedule and in the first seven items of A5 schedule, the melwaram right alone belongs to the temple, that lands in A1, A2, A7, A8 were always exclusively owned and enjoyed by the Defendant and his ancestors as their absolute property. The Defendant further states that all the incomes arising from the lands belonging to the temple have been regularly entered in the temple accounts and duly accounted for, that the said income is not sufficient for the upkeep of the temple, and that the Defendant has been meeting the deficit from his private funds, and that the accounts filed in Court were regularly maintained by the temple karnams."

These statements show broadly and correctly the attitude of the parties to this litigation.

The temple in question is an endowment or institution for the worship of the God Vishnu. It is dedicated to a Saint or Incarnation called Tirumushi Alwar. The temple lands are at Madavilagam and other villages in the District of Chingleput, in the vicinity of the City of Madras. As the Plaintiff in Head 3 of the plaint avers:—

"There is a Public Vishnu Temple at Madavilagam, a hamlet of Tirumushi, in Poonamalle Division, Saidapet Taluk, dedicated to Sri Jagannatha Perumal and Tirumushi Alwar."

That, in point of fact, a temple did exist there from ancient times, and that it was in possession of certain endowments in the shape of lands, seems to be undoubted.

The Board has had a reference to various historical authorities upon the subject of the Chingleput District, and upon the mirasi tenure therein. These records are voluminous. It is too much to expect that anything definite can be obtained prior to the devastation of the District by Hyder Ali in the latter half of the eighteenth century. The most valuable document is the Fifth Report of the Select Committee on the Affairs of the East India Company of the year 1812. Says the Report:—

"The Jaghire (Chingleput) appears to have been obtained in the years 1760 and 1763, from the Nabob of Arcot, in return for the services rendered him and his father, by the Company. . . . The Jaghire was twice invaded by Hyder Ali; in 1768, and in the war of 1780, when he entered it with fire and sword. On the termination of the latter war, in 1784, hardly any other signs were left in many parts of the country of its having been inhabited by human beings, than the bones of the bodies that had been massacred, or the naked walls of the houses, choultries, and temples, which had been burnt. To the havoc of war, succeeded the affliction of famine; and the emigrations arising from these successive calamities, nearly depopulated the district."

"The system of management in the Jaghire, while it was rented by the Nabob, was of the same oppressive and unjust character, which marked the administration of affairs in his territory, the Carnatic."

T P SRINIVASA CHARIAR v C. N. EVALAPPA MUDALIAR.

A period of no little confusion ensued, even after the Company Government assumed the Jagheer in the years previous to 1780, the confusion being much relieved in 1794 when the country was placed under the management of Mr. Lionel Place, who continued as administrator until 1798, and whose Final Report respecting the Jagheer is dated the 6th June 1799. Mr. Place's views with regard to mirasi are stated to have undergone a material change, and in the language of the Report:—

“He had become convinced that the mirasidar had an undoubted hereditary property in the soil; that he derived this right originally from the Sovereign to whom he acknowledged obedience, and the rendering of a stated proportion of the produce, as the tenure by which he held it; that he sold, mortgaged, gave away, and left his lands to his posterity.”

It would not elucidate the points at issue in this suit to enter further into the development, historically, of the adjustments of the rights regarding the land and its tenure and cultivation. This following excerpt, however, may be made from Mr. Place's Final Report.—

“702 The following definition, therefore, of meerassce, or property in land, seems to be deducible from the discussions that have passed on it

“703. That it is a right to the use and substance of the soil, vested in the present proprietor, his heirs and successors, so long as he does or can cultivate it, and pays the dues of Government and is obedient to its authority; and that when he does not, or cannot, cultivate his lands, when he withholds the dues of Government, or is disobedient to its authority, such part as he neglects, or in the latter case the whole, escheats to Government, who may confer it on whom it pleases.”

These excerpts have been given because the fact has been acknowledged that the village, afterwards referred to,

with the lands in suit in the present case, are held under the mirasi tenure. Nor, secondly, is it disputed that Vishnu as a juristic entity, and, as such, owner of the temple dedicated to and appearing under the following names: Sri Jagannatha Perumal and Tirumushu Alwar, can according to law and must if it accord with fact, be reckoned as a mirasidar holding a village mirasi. The point in the case is: Was the property in suit held under mirasi tenure by this mirasidar in the interests of the institution and worshippers of Vishnu attached to it, or was it held by the Respondent personally?

The Respondent founds, and strongly founds, upon the state of the records of this property as for the year 1825. He maintains that there is sufficient indication from this record that the property in suit had wholly belonged, not to the temple as part of its endowments, but to Evalappa, his grandfather, as his own personal property.

The date of the origin of this temple is not apparently now ascertainable, but the first broad and fundamental fact appearing from the record founded upon is that in 1825 de facto such a temple did exist; secondly, that the institution was at that date managed by a Dharmakartha; and thirdly, that it was the owner of some lands. What were those lands; and, in particular, did they include those in suit in the present case? On that point the singularity of the position is that it appears to be, and that very rightly, assumed in the judgment of the Courts below, that originally the temple did own the lands, but that the state of affairs crystallized in the paimash of 1825 left it at least doubtful whether some change had not been effected under which a personal acquisition by the Dharmakartha had taken place.

T. P. SRINIVASA CHARIAR v. C. N. EVALAPPA MUDALIAR.

And it is the fact, with regard to the large majority of the items composing the village lands, that the plots and portions are set out in detail in the name of Evalappa Mudalia, without describing him as trustee, and without giving any indication contrary to that of personal ownership. It is this circumstance upon which the Respondent in the appeal strongly relies.

It may be said of the 1825 paimash or record, taken as a whole, that it does involve certain self-contradictions which contribute to leaving the point at issue in considerable doubt.

It will serve no useful purpose to load this opinion with details, although all these details have been carefully considered. It may suffice to say as follows. The Paimash Jariff Taram chitta for Mandavilagam village, dated the 31st August 1825, forms the Ex. A, and its headings and general preliminary statements must be attended to. It states the "persons who were present at the Jariff," mentioning by name the Government Officer. Then follows this entry: "Alwar temple village miras." This appears to describe in general terms the ownership by the temple of all the village miras. Then there appears this entry: "Appasami Mudali and Arunachala Mudali, gumasthas of Evalappa Mudali, Dharmakartha of the aforesaid temple—total, two persons." Up to this point it seems plain enough that the lands are owned by the temple, and that Evalappa is its Dharmakartha. When the specific entries begin there occur the following "remarks": "village Miras—Sri Tirumushi Alwar," and a little further down, "No. 1 Miras. Tirumushi Alwar Devastanom Dharmakartha Nattu Evalappa Mudali." Then still another: "Alwar mantapam tope, No. 1 Miras Tirumushi Alwar Devastanom." Up to this point the doubt as to the lands being temple lands—it being admitted that they are part of the village miras—has not arisen. When these items came to be entered, the column of remarks shows "village miras," and by far the most important of the entries are those referring to the miras itself, viz., "No. 1 Miras," and one of the most important pieces of the property is a tope or grove, which is entered as punya, and in the remarks is stated to be Alwar mantapam tope. So far all is clear.

The confusion arises, however, from another document, Ex A1, called "Register of lands as per paimash or mamul account." It is to be observed that in it again occurs "No. 1 Village Miras Tirumushi Alwar," and in No 83, "No. 1 Miras Tirumushi Alwar Devastanom," there being added the words "Dharmakartha Nattu Evalappa Mudali."

While this is so, the remarkable thing is that all the other entries, with perhaps one or two exceptions, are stated to be "No. 1 Patta Evalappa Mudali," with no indication that those particular items are temple lands or that Evalappa holds them as Dharmakartha. This fact, and practically this fact alone, forms the foundation of the Respondent's claim that he is personal owner of these numerous items. The inconsistency of this with the other entries above referred to is unexplained, and in particular it is unexplained how property originally temple property ever came into his private ownership. No express grant is produced; no legal authority for a conversion so singular is suggested.

In these circumstances their Lordships are not prepared to say that if the records had stopped here they would have agreed with the judgments of the Courts below and would have attributed the entries opposite Evalappa's own name as entries certiorating private property. It is unlikely; but for the reasons to be hereafter stated it is not necessary to decide the question.

Let it be assumed, however, that the point of ownership stands doubtful upon the 1825 records. To such a situation it is conceivable that the observation of the learned Chief Justice would apply. He says:—

"It is of course impossible at this distance of time to say exactly how it was that these properties passed from the temple into the hands of the trustee's family, and the case may undoubtedly appear to be one of suspicion. But we cannot say, at this distance of time and in view of this long enjoyment, that the title of the temple has been sufficiently established in the present suit as to the great bulk of those properties, that is to say, in respect of those properties which, in the paimash, are not entered as temple properties. Where we find in the paimash properties entered as temple properties, that is sufficient to throw the onus on to the trustee of showing how these properties ceased to belong to the temple."

Their Lordships must dissent entirely from the view that where the discoverable origins of property show it to be trust property the onus of establishing that it must have illegitimately come into the trustee's own right rests upon the beneficiaries. Upon the contrary, the onus is, and is heavily, upon the trustee to show by the clearest and most unimpeachable evidence the legitimacy of his personal acquisition. Even upon the records of 1825 their Lordships would have inclined to this view.

But the records did not end here. In their Lordships' opinion it is necessary in a case of this kind to view the records, transactions and proceedings as a whole.

And in their view the greatest weight must be attached to the elaborate proceedings of 1876, and in particular to the Survey and Settlement Register of the village of Madavilagam. That Register contains 169 items, including among other particulars an identification, so far as possible, of each item with the old number or name of fields, and in particular the extent and assessment of each plot of land in the whole list. The Register is signed by Major, C. J. Stuart, Acting Deputy-Director of Revenue Settlement, and is dated from the Revenue Settlement Office. It cannot be too clearly premised, however, that the Board would not hold any such record to be conclusive evidence of ownership; but, upon the other hand, their Lordships cannot be blind to the importance of such a document which appears, de facto, to have settled the bounds of the possessions of these plots for a period of thirty-five years—that is to say, from 1876 to 1910. This is especially important in any case where the personal as against the trust claim is supported also, and alone, by a reference to an earlier record of a similar character, marred as that record happens to be by the contradictions to which reference has been made.

It is, however, unnecessary, it may again be said, to enter into details. But the facts as to the 1876 records are outstanding and make the position much clearer. Evalappa had been succeeded by Varadappa, and numerous cases, including those in which in 1825 the entries of the owner had only been the name of Evalappa Mudaliar, with nothing added thereto, now appear with the point as to the character of the ownership cleared up.

The Survey is headed "Descriptive Memoir of Madavilagam of the Saidapet Taluq." Extracts from it form Ex. B of the present proceedings.' Their Lordships have, however, seen a print of the Descriptive Memoir itself, bearing to be signed by Major Stuart, "Acting Deputy-Director of Revenue Settlement." The following entries are important :—

"Mirasi Tenure. As the Government have recognized the Mirasidar's claim to a percentage fee (swatantham) on the taram assessment, the following arrangements are made for its future collection and payment."

This entry speaks for itself. The tenure was mirasi tenure, and there was one mirasidar. Then occurs the following :—

"The fee is fixed at 2 annas in the Rupee of assessment of both dry and wet lands for which the lands are divided into (I) Pangu, (II) Durkast, and (III) Waste."

The word "Pangu" refers to the original cultivated land—that is to say, land cultivated by persons or a person, or institution, belonging to the village. "Durst" refers to lands granted by the Government for cultivation not by villagers, but by outsiders. "Waste" refers to jungle or uncultivated land.

The main point to be kept in view is the form of the entries of the lands, the issue as to which is whether they are temple lands, or are private property or pangu lands. The importance, accordingly, of special reference to pangu lands is clear. That entry is as follows :—

"Pangu Lands This is an Ekabogam village and the lands have hitherto been held by 1 Pattadar. The fee registered against these lands is at present a mere matter of account and need not be collected, as the Mirasidar himself holds the lands. But if these lands hereafter become waste by relinquishment and are taken up again by a stranger, they will be chargeable with the fee, plus the taram assessment, and the fee thus collected will be payable to the Mirasidar."

The village is spoken of as an ekabogam village. "Ekabogam" according to Wilson is :—

"The possession or tenure of village land by one person or family without any co-sharer. The appellation is continued in some instances where other parties have been admitted to hold portions under the original tenure as long as that remains unaltered."

It is stated that the lands have been hitherto held by one pattadar, and that the mirasidar himself holds the lands. The extreme importance of this entry arises from the events which had taken place in and about the early sixties of last century.

It seems fairly plain that by the middle of the nineteenth century various demands were being made to obtain a statement of the rights of mirasidars in this part of India. In the volume named "Chingleput, late Madras District," compiled under the orders of the Madras Government by Mr. Charles Stewart Crole, the position is thus described :—

"In 1834 it began to induct outsiders into the permanent possession of lands, and issued pattas to such persons. In 1859 it compelled the Mirasidars to declare once for all the extent of their individual holdings, and proceeded to issue pattas accordingly, which it at first styled mirasi pattas."

"In the same and following years it warned Mirassidars that they would have to pay the assessment on all lands in their holdings, whether they cultivated or not, and limited by new rules, which have since increased in stringency, the occasions on which, and then only as a matter of grace, remissions would be given."

"In 1863 the Government directed the abolition of the words 'Mirassi putta' and 'Payikari putta,' which had previously appeared as a heading on those documents in order to distinguish mirassi from ordinary tenure, and it ordered the 'name of the Pattadar' merely to be inserted, thus distinctly proclaiming that it would no longer recognize any difference in tenure."

T. P. SRINIVASA CHARARIAR v. C. N. EVALAPPA MUDALIAR.

This historical circumstance gave great weight to the Settlement and Survey, about to be referred to, made in the year 1876. It is in particular noticeable that a special column of pattadars, with a demand for their names, appears in the Return, and that this coincides with the acknowledgment of the mirasi tenure. The application of this to the situation of the village, whose ownership is in suit, will be immediately seen. It would rather appear that no public document of anything like equivalent value to that of the Report of 1876, with regard to the details of any properties which were at once mirasi and patta, had ever been previously issued.

It is accordingly of special importance to know who was the mirasidar holding a patta, and therefore pattadar of those particular lands in suit. Appended to each entry of grants of land in the village is a column headed "Pattadar's Name and No." It cannot be seriously disputed that the patta was No. 1 Patta.

Who, then, was the holder of these lands, occupying the position at once of mirasidar and pattadar No. 1? Item by item the entries under "Pattadar's Name and No." are "Nattu Varadappa Mudaliar, Trustee of Tirumushi Alwar Pagoda." The entries are repeated and repeated in the same sense. And, in short, there is here an official affirmation that these lands are temple lands; that they are held in No. 1 Patta; and that the trustee of the temple is Varadappa.

It would accordingly appear to be clear that this official document, which it cannot be doubted was prepared after minute inspection and enquiries on the spot, sets at rest any doubt as between private and temple ownership, and clearly affirms the latter. Varadappa was not the private owner; he was the Dharma- kartha or trustee. It, however, must be admitted that although this was the official view, the record does not commit Varadappa himself to such an affirmation or admission.

Most fortunately, however, there are elements of probation existing applicable to the regime of Varadappa, which greatly help to clear this difficulty away. These instances may be given:—

(1) On the 8th February 1888, Varadappa brought a suit against the Government in regard to certain lands and trees, which he alleged he was debarred from cultivating. He desired a declaration to establish his right "to the said property as absolute owner thereof." It is, however, an entire mistake to reckon this an assertion of private ownership, because Varadappa describes himself as Plaintiff and as Dharmakartha of the temple at Madavilagam village, and the first three statements of his plaint are as follows:—

"1 The village No. 137, 112, Madavilagam and all its miras appertain to, and form portion of the endowments of the temple of Tirumushi Alwar situated in the said village, Poonamallee Division, Saidapet Taluk, Chingleput District."

"2 The Plaintiff above named is the hereditary Dharmakartha, of the said Devasthanom."

"3. Plaintiff's ancestors have, from time out of mind, been enjoying the lands under Nos. described below by building choultry, cultivating the soil and raising a tope, &c. paying revenue to the Government for the said lands."

As mirasidar and as trustee of the temple his grievance against the Government was that he was not entitled to extend the rights which he asserted over certain further lands and trees, and accordingly the suit was substantially for the purpose of enabling that extension to be made, presumably for temple purposes, and accompanied with the assertion that

T P SRINIVASA CHARIAR v C N. EVALAPPA MUDALIAR.

—quoad the temple—the village of Madavilagam “and all its miras” were the endowments of the temple of which Varadappa was the Dharmakartha.

(2) A statement signed by “Nattu Varadappa Mudaliar, Dharmakartha,” and made before the Deputy Tahsildar, Poonamallee Division, is also produced. This statement refers to the Paimash of 1876, and is to the effect that the entire village is the ekabogam village of the temple, viz, of Tirumushji Alwar, that he, Varadappa, is the Dharmakartha of the temple, and he goes on to state “Whenever anyone wants to build a house on vacant lands other than the land on which houses have been in existence from time immemorial in the village nattam of this village, it is usual for me to grant lands to such persons, and to get deeds executed therefor.”

(3) This was quite true, and various deeds of that character are referred to in the proceedings—that is to say, they are called rental agreement deeds, and are addressed to Varadappa, as on the 27th March, 1876, and signed “Nattu Varadappa Mudaliar, Dharmakartha of Tirumushji Alwar Devasthanom,” or, as in that of the 7th March 1904, after Varadappa’s death, to Evalappa the second, his son, thus named “S Nattu Evalappa Mudaliar Avergal, son of S Nattu Varadappa Mudaliar, Shrotriendar, Kondaikattu Vellala, Vaishnavite, Mirasdar of the village of Madavilagam as well as Dharmakartha of Tirumushji Alwar Devasthanom.”

It is of importance to observe that Varadappa is named, and names himself the Dharmakartha. This is in truth the legal equipollent to trustee. The position of Dharmakartha is not that of a shebait of a religious institution, or of the mahunt, or head of a mutt. These functionaries have a much higher right with larger power of disposal and administration, and they have a personal interest of a beneficial character.

In the very learned judgments delivered in Vidyapurna Tirtha Swami v Vidyamdhuri Tirtha Swami (1), the distinction between those functionaries is explained. But a Dharmakartha is literally and no more than the manager of a charity, and his rights, apart it may be in certain circumstances from the question of personal support, are never in a higher legal category than that of a mere trustee.

The details need not further be entered upon as to these deeds, which appear to be numerous, and to assert clearly the fiduciary position in which Varadappa and even his successor, the present Respondent, stand. They are by no means confined to a period subsequent to Major Stuart’s Report in 1876; one, for instance, is dated the 22nd January 1870, executed to Varadappa as “Dharmakartha of Tirumushji Devasthanom,” and describes Madavilagam as “the miras village of the said Alwar.” In fact, there are documents extending over a period of about forty years, all framed on that footing, a footing which negatives private but affirms temple ownership. Their Lordships do not doubt that that was a public fact in 1876, when the report was made, and the subsequent transactions in the life of Varadappa, and even of his successor, the present Respondent, confirm that view. This was plainly the state of affairs when, on Varadappa’s death, the Respondent succeeded him as hereditary Dharmakartha.

A separate argument involving some detail was submitted with regard to the topes, or groves, belonging to the temple, on which their Lordships will only say that after full investigation they are convinced the topes in suit have been sufficiently traced to temple ownership.

The doubts, accordingly, which would have warranted the line of judgment indicated from the opinion of the High Court, above cited, have now disappeared. In the opinion of the Board the properties in suit are established to be temple properties. The statements and records made in the year 1910 do not substantially bring any fresh light on the situation. It must, of course, be plain that it would require circumstances unique to warrant the transfer or transformation of those endowment lands into the private property of the trustee. There is, in fact, nothing of the sort. In the present suit the Respondent's right and title as personal owner have been successfully challenged, and the lands in question must, all of them, be restored as endowments of the temple.

In case it should be thought to have been omitted, their Lordships merely further observe on this head that during the period extending from 1825 there were clearly established several items of the property in dispute which could be identified as still remaining as temple lands. To these items there were added, in the course of discussion, several further items which were traced from register to register, and clearly and separately identified as temple lands by name, and freed from the doubt as to the personal ownership of the former mirasidar, Evalappa. They, too, have been claimed by the Respondent as his own, and this is a notable circumstance. These facts might have proved obstacles to the learned Judges of the High Court in forming their conclusion and assisted in removing any doubt which they felt; but the view which has been taken by their Lordships of the larger issue, namely, of the effect of the 1876 register on the transactions to which Varadappa was a party, affects the whole of the lands in suit, and makes it unnecessary to deal with the individual items referred to.

It will now be seen how serious is the position of the Respondent as a claimant for the continuance of the trusteeship of this temple and its endowments. The doubts in the minds of the Courts below, on the subject of his being allowed to continue in office, are sufficiently plain. But when it is now decided that the whole of this litigation has substantially been occupied by an unfounded assertion, supported by the concoction of accounts—an assertion by the trustee of private ownership in himself and a powerful resistance to the recovery of these properties for the trust which he administers—it does not appear to their Lordships to be open to them, on any sound principles either of administration or of law, to permit the continuance of the Respondent in the office of Dharmakantha.

The conduct of the Respondent, even in the course of the present suit, has been sufficiently grave to be thus noted by the Judges below. Says the District Court Judge—

“My finding is that the Exs K series were got up for the purpose of this suit, and that they have been proved to contain false entries in many instances.”

In the High Court the pronouncement was quite as strong. The learned Chief Justice observes.—

“The District Judge has found that the Defendant failed to keep proper accounts and that the accounts which he has brought into Court in this case were written up for the purposes of this case. We have ourselves examined the accounts, and we regret to say that there are very serious reasons for believing that that has been the case and that the accounts have been largely written up for the purposes of this case.”

T. P. SRINIVASA CHARIAR v. C. N. EVALAPPA MUDALIAR.

Their Lordships have considerable doubt as to whether any litigant found to have been guilty of seriously reprehensible conduct of this description could ever have been retained in the office of Dharmakartha. The worshippers of the temple, the true beneficiaries in the endowments, are entitled, at least in regard to the trusteeship thereto, as also is a Court of Law before whom such delinquencies are established, to insist upon the first step towards trustworthiness in administration being taken by the removal of the trustee. Most unhappily the guarantee for that trustworthiness has been destroyed. Although the Board very willingly admits that much allowance must be made for the inaccuracy of karnams, and of other officials who may have been anxious to fortify the trustee's personal rights by methods which were unwarranted, the Respondent must, however, stand answerable for such conduct.

Their Lordships do not doubt that if the High Court had been of the opinion now delivered with regard to the merits of the suit, the trustee would have been removed from office. The Board desires that in the remit, which their Lordships will humbly recommend to His Majesty to make, the High Court shall select as trustee a person or persons of such sufficient standing in the District as will enable the transfer from the Respondent of the property to be effectively made, and the administration thereof purely for the purpose of the endowment effectively secured.

The scheme drawn up in the District Court, and referred to in the proceedings of the High Court, would appear to be not unsuitable for the case, but these two fundamental alterations must be taken into account. In the first place the list of endowments must, of course, be enlarged to suit the affirmation as to the extent of the temple property made in the plaint and here affirmed, and secondly a new and independent trustee will be nominated to administer the scheme.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty to remit the case accordingly to the High Court, with a finding that the properties in suit belong to the endowments of the temple; that the Respondent as Dharmakartha and trustee thereof be removed from office; that a scheme be framed for trust administration under a new trustee, and that the judgment of the High Court of the 6th March 1917, except as regards costs, be recalled, and that the Respondent do pay the costs of this appeal.

SETURATNAM v. VENKATACHALA (6) referred to.

These were appeals preferred on the 7th May 1920 from a decision of Babu Amrita Lal Mukerjee, Special Judge, Noakhali, dated the 5th January 1920, reversing that of Babu A. K. Sen, Assistant Settlement Officer, Noakhali, dated the 16th September 1918

The facts of the case are as follows:—Certain tenures were originally comprised in a revenue-paying estate which was permanently settled in 1793. The proprietors having defaulted, the estate was sold for arrears of revenue in 1834, when Government became the purchaser. The lands were kept under the direct management of the revenue authorities from 1834 to 1861, when a permanently settled estate was created in favour of the predecessors of the present Plaintiffs-Respondents. In 1836, while the lands were under the direct management of the revenue authorities, settlements were made with tenure-holders who had been in occupation, in many instances, from before the date of the Permanent Settlement of 1793. In some instances, the grant included culturable fallow lands, and in other cases, all the culturable lands were under cultivation. The cultivated lands were assessed at the full rate from the commencement and the culturable fallow was not assessed with rent during the first two years, the full rent for which lands therefore became payable after the expiry of two years. The vernacular word used in the documents for full rent were "jamakamel" meaning "the full amount of rent or the highest rent leviable." This word was preceded by the word "saliana" (annual) and followed by the word "harshal" (every year). In the record-of-rights as finally published these tenures were recorded as held at fixed rates of rent. The landlords therefore applied under secs 105 and 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act for settlement of fair and equitable rent in respect of the lands held by their tenants. The Assistant Settlement Officer held that the tenures were held at fixed rates of rent and accordingly the rents were not liable to enhancement. On appeal the Special Judge reversed this decision and assessed fair and equitable rents, inasmuch as the tenures were, in his opinion, not held at rates of rent fixed in perpetuity. Hence the present appeals to the High Court by the tenants.

Babus Asiranyan Chatterjee and Satyendra Nath Mitra for the Defendants-Appellants.

Babu D. L. Kastgir* for the Plaintiffs-Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, J.—These twenty-one appeals arise out of as many applications made by landlords under secs. 105 and 105A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, for settlement of fair and equitable rent in respect of the lands held by their tenants. In the record-of-rights as finally published, entries had been made to the effect that each tenure was held at a fixed rate of rent. The tenants accordingly contended that the rents were not liable to enhancement. The Assistant Settlement Officer gave effect to this contention, subject to the reservation that excess lands were liable to be assessed with additional rent. Upon appeal the Special Judge has reversed this decision, and has assessed fair and equitable rent, inasmuch as the tenures were, in his opinion, not held at rates of rent fixed in perpetuity. In this Court, the decision of the Special Judge has been assailed on a four-fold ground, namely, first, that upon a true construction of the grant in each case, it should have been held that the tenure was held at a rate of rent fixed in perpetuity; secondly, that the tenants were entitled to the benefit of the presumption formulated in sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; thirdly, that the tenures were protected from enhancement, as they had been continuously in existence and had been held at a uniform rate of rent from a date anterior to the Permanent Settlement of 1793; and, fourthly, that if the rent was liable to enhancement, the provisions of sec. 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act must be strictly followed. It is plain that if the first of these grounds be substantiated, the others do not require examination.

There is no controversy that the lands of the disputed tenures were originally comprised in a revenue-paying estate which was permanently settled in 1793. The proprietors defaulted, with the result, that the estate was sold for arrears of revenue on the 29th March 1834, when the Government became the purchaser. The lands were kept under the direct management of the revenue authorities from 1834 to 1861, when a permanently settled estate was created in favour of the predecessors of the present Plaintiffs. In 1836, while the lands were under the direct management of the revenue authorities, settlements were made with tenure-holders who had been in occupation, in many instances, from before the date of the Permanent Settlement of 1793. The question thus arises, whether the rents so settled in 1836 are liable to enhancement or must be deemed to have been fixed in perpetuity by the grants then made. In the construction of these grants, we are not concerned with the points, whether the tenures were in fact in existence in 1793, whether they had been held at a uniform rate of rent since then, or whether by application of sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act they may be presumed to have been so in existence and held at a uniform rate of rent during the period mentioned, nor are we called upon to consider, in connection with the question of construction, whether the tenures continued in fact and in law, notwithstanding the sale for arrears of revenue. The construction of the grants must depend upon the interpretation of all the terms of each instrument, and, except in a case of ambiguity, extrinsic evidence would not be admissible; see N. E. Railway v. Hastings (1), Hebbert v. Purchas (2) and Secretary of State v. Narendranath Mitter (3). As pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Upadrashta v. Dimi (4) and Chudambara v. Veerama (5), each case must be considered on its own facts; in order to ascertain the effect of the grant resort must be had to the terms of the grant itself and to the whole circumstances so far as they can now be ascertained. Nor does the question of burden of proof arise; for as observed in Setu Ratnam v. Venkata Chala (6), when the entire evidence on both sides is once before the Court, the debate as to onus is purely academical; the controversy has passed the stage at which discussion as to the burden of proof is pertinent, the relevant facts are before the Court and all that remains for decision is, what inference should be drawn from them.

The grant in each case was made by a document divisible into two parts; the first shows the details of assessment, the second sets out the terms of the settlement. In some instances, the grant included lands described as laik patit, that is, culturable fallow, in other cases, all the culturable lands were under cultivation and there was no culturable fallow. The cultivated lands were, in all cases, assessed at the full rate from the commencement, the culturable fallow was not assessed with rent during the first two years. Consequently, in the first class of cases, the full rent did not become payable till after the expiry of two years; in the second class of cases the full amount became leviable from the commencement. We set out here a specimen of a grant of each type.

(Sd.)—By Mark,
Tomjuddi."

It will be observed that in both A and B, deduction was allowed for Gar Laek patit, that is, unculturable fallow, there was also a deduction of 3 Kanis 4 Gandas per Drone, that is, 20 per cent according to talukdari practice. In "A" deduction was further allowed for Laek patit, that is, culturable fallow; but in "B" there was no such deduction, because all the culturable lands were hasil, that is, cultivated. The expression in A which has been rendered as "full amount of rent for 1245 B. S. and each year following" is in the vernacular, "San 1245 Sal 0 harsal purdastur." The term "purdastur" means "full customary rate," the word "harsal" means "all years to come." The two words taken together clearly show that the full rate was intended to be in operation so long as the tenure might subsist. Later on in the document, we find the rent for 1243 and 1244 described as saliana jama, that is, annual rent or rent per year. This is followed by the rent for 1245, which is described as jamakamel, meaning "the full amount of rent or the highest rent leviable." The expression "jamakamel" is preceded by the word saliana and is followed by harsal. The three terms taken together unmistakably point to the conclusion that the rent payable in 1245 was the highest rent ever leviable. When we turn to "B," we come across similar expressions which indicate fixity of rent. On a consideration, then, of the terms of the grants, we come to the conclusion that the disputed tenures are held at fixed rates of rent, but the total amount payable in respect of each tenure varies with the area, as the settlement was made on the basis of area determined by measurement according to a carefully specified standard.

We may add that our attention has been invited to judicial decisions which are helpful only in so far as they formulate canons for the interpretation of documents of this description. Amongst these, special mention may be made of the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Dhanpdt v. Gooman (7), Satyasaran v. Mahes (8), Soorasoonderree v. Golam Ali (9) and Port Canning and Land Improvement Company, Ltd. v. Katyani Debi (10), which were applied by this Court in Huro Prasad v. Chundee Churn (11) and Robert Watson & Co. v. Radhanath Singh (12). Much stress was, however, laid on behalf of the Respondents on the decisions in Bhurut Chunder v. Gour Monee (13) and Kasecmuddee v. Nadde Ali (14), where Loch and Hobhouse, JJ, declined to follow the decision of Bayley and Phcar, JJ, in Golam Ali v. Gopal Lal Thakoor (15), which was subsequently affirmed by the Judicial Committee in Soorasoonderree v. Golam Ali (9). The decision of the Judicial Committee in Bamasoonderry v. Radhika (16), does not advance the case for the Respondents. No doubt a suit to enhance rent proceeds on the presumption that a zamindar holding under the Permanent Settlement has the right, from time to time, to raise the rents of all the rent-paying lands within his zamindari, according to the pargana or current rates, unless either he is precluded from the exercise of that right by a contract binding on him or the lands in question can be brought within one of the exemptions recognised by Reg. VIII of 1793. Consequently, in each of these cases, the nature of the tenure and the conditions under which it is held is the primary question, to be determined with reference to the documents and the circumstances disclosed therein. Here we have the grants themselves, and they show, in our opinion, that the rate of rent was fixed in perpetuity. It is unnecessary in these circumstances to rely upon the doctrine that fixity of rent may be presumed from uniformity of rent for a long series of years; Gulab v. Kumar Kalanand (17), Nityananda v. Nanda Kumar (18) and Ramdayal v. Midnapur Zamindari Company (19). The question is, as put in Upendra Lal v. Jogesh Chandra (20), which was applied in Makbul Ali v. Jogesh Chandra (21), whether the landlord has precluded himself by his grant from claiming rent at an enhanced rate. The answer, on the documents in these cases, must be in favour of the tenants.

It was finally suggested that there was indication in the evidence that the rate of rent had varied from time to time and that on the principle recognised in Bamapada v. Midnapore Zemindari Co. (22), the tenures should be deemed to have been held at enhanceable rents. There is, however, no foundation for this contention. The total amount of rent in each case must, as we have seen, be dependent on the area. But even if we assume that the total rent has varied, it has not been proved that the rate of rent has varied. We conclude accordingly that the Assistant Settlement Officer correctly held that the tenures were held at fixed rates of rent. In this view, no other question requires examination.

The result is that these appeals are allowed, the decrees made by the Special Judge set aside and those made by the Assistant Settlement Officer restored with costs both here and in the lower Appellate Court. We assess the hearing-fee in this Court at one gold mohur in each case.

BHOLA NATH BHUYA
and ors., Defendants,
Respondents.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 92—Admissibility of evidence of conduct to prove contract not intended to be acted upon—Impossibility of performance.

The Plaintiff brought a suit for the recovery of damages on account of the Defendant's failure to deliver certain papers under the terms of a patni kabuliyat. The defence was that during 35 years since the execution of the kabuliyat the patnidar never submitted any paper nor did the zemindar demand the same and that the stipulation was never intended to be acted upon.

BALKESHEN DAS v. LEGGE (2) distinguished.

Held, upon a construction of the kabulyat—That the stipulation was impossible of performance.

This was an appeal preferred on the 14th November 1918 against a decree, dated the 22nd July 1918, of the District Judge of Zillah Midnapur (J A Ross, Esq.), affirming a decree, dated the 19th September 1916, of the Subordinate Judge of that District (Syama Charan Chackerbutty, Esq.)

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows —

This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of Rs. 1,290 from the Defendants as damages on account of the Defendants' failure to deliver certain papers under the terms of a patni kabulyat.

(1) 1. L. R. 25 Cal. 603. s. c. 2 O. W. N. 562 (F. B.) (1898).

(3) I. L. R. 28 Cal. 256 (1900).

(4) I. L. R. 28 Cal. 289; s. c. 5 O. W. N. 326 (1901)

(7) 20 O. W. N. 847 (1915).

(8) 20 O. W. N. 680 (1915).

The patni kabulyat is dated the 23rd February 1880 and was executed by the grand-father of the Defendants. There is a stipulation in the kabulyat which runs as follows:—"I shall deliver one set (or one copy) of the chita, khatrian jamabandi, and shcha, thoka and jama wasil baki and other lawazima papers of the patni mahals, signed by the persons preparing the same and bearing my signature, into your shershta after the expiry of two consecutive years at the end of every third year, and obtain receipt for the same, on failure to do so you will take from me Rs 215, the cost of preparing the papers at the end of every 3 years, and if I do not pay the same amicably, you will realize the same by having recourse to law and get the said papers prepared by making mofussil survey and tuniar by appointing Amin at the end of every third year. To this neither I nor my heirs will be able to make any objection."

The suit was instituted on the 21st September 1915. It is found that during the course of 35 years since the execution of the kabulyat the patnidar never submitted any paper as aforesaid, nor did the zemindar ever demand the same. The Court of first instance held that the stipulation was stringent and unreasonable and was never meant to be acted upon, and that in any case the Plaintiff was entitled only to compensation not exceeding Rs. 215, but there was no evidence to show the amount of loss actually sustained by the Plaintiff. In the result the suit was dismissed. On appeal the learned District Judge was of opinion that the terms of the kabulyat cannot reasonably bear the interpretation sought to be put upon it by the Plaintiff, that ever since the execution of the kabulyat the papers had never been demanded or submitted, and that the stipulation was never meant to be enforced. The appeal was accordingly dismissed. The Plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

It is contended that the evidence of conduct relied upon by the Courts below is not admissible in evidence having regard to the provisions of sec. 92 of the Evidence Act. The authorities upon the point are not uniform. A Full Bench of this Court in the case of Preonath Shaha v. Madhu Sudan Bhuiya (1) held that oral evidence of the acts and conduct of parties such as oral evidence that possession remained with the vendor notwithstanding the execution of a deed of out-and-out sale is admissible to prove that the deed was intended to operate only as a mortgage. A question was, however, raised in some later cases whether the Full Bench decision had not been affected by the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Balkeshen Das v. Legge (2). But the evidence which was held to be inadmissible by the Judicial Committee in the case was certain oral evidence of intention which had been admitted in the Court below and the ground upon which their decision is based is that such evidence is excluded by the provisions of sec. 92 of the Evidence Act. The evidence there consisted only of oral statements of the parties, and there was no other evidence of the acts and conduct of the parties adduced in that case which was considered by the Privy Council. It is upon these grounds that the decision in Balkeshen's case (2) was distinguished by Banerji and Brett, JJ., in Khankar Abdur Rahman v. Ali Hafiz (3) and the learned Judges held that Bal- keshen's case (2) did not in any way affect the rule laid down by the Full Bench in Preonath Shaha v. Madhu Sudan Bhuiya (1). The same view was taken by Maclean, C. J., Banerji and Brett, JJ., in Mahomed Ali Hossein v. Nazar Ali (4).

In the case of Radharaman Chowdry v. Bhowani Prosad (5), Rampini and Gupta, JJ., were of opinion that oral evidence of the subsequent acts and conduct of the parties is not admissible to show that the rent is less than what was stated in a registered kabuliyat. A similar view was taken by Rampini, J., in the case of Beni Madhub Gorani v. Lalmoti Das (6), but his decision was set aside on appeal by Maclean, C. J., and Macpherson, J., and the learned Judges held that certain rent receipts showing payment of a smaller rent than that provided in a registered lease were admissible to show either that the parties never intended the terms of the kabuliyat to be strictly carried out, or that as between the parties there had been a waiver of the strict terms of the lease. The case was followed in the case of Kailash Chandra v. Darbaria (7) and Manindra Chandra v. Durga Sundari (8), one of the members of the present Bench being a party to both the decisions. It may be open to doubt, however, whether there can be a waiver of the essential terms of a registered lease except by a registered instrument having regard to the decision of the Full Bench in the case of Lalit Mohan Ghosh v.

NARENDRA LAL KHAN v. BHOLA NATH BHUYA.

Gopali Chuck Coal Company (9), where, however, the variation was sought to be effected by documents. But in the cases mentioned above, the Court held, upon the evidence of the subsequent acts and conduct of the parties, that certain terms of the contract were never intended to be acted upon. On the other hand, in the case of Lakhatulla v Bishwambhar (10), Jenkins, C. J. and Doss, J., held that an agreement is none the less oral because it is to be inferred from the conduct of the parties.

The question was raised before the Judicial Committee in the case of Maung Kyin v. Ma Shwe La (11), but was not decided. Their Lordships observed:— "The evidence which the Appellants thus proposed to tender was described in general terms, and their Lordships have not the advantage of dealing with it in the form of questions specifically put and argued. So far, however, as it is still pressed, it, no doubt, consisted only of evidence relating to the acts and conduct of the parties as distinguished from evidence of oral statements and conversations constituting in themselves some agreement between them. Its object was to show that whatever the terms of the documents may have been, none of the parties had acted on them as effecting an absolute sale, but that through a long course of mutual dealings materially affecting their respective positions, they had always treated the business between them as one of loan secured by mortgage.

This may give rise to important and difficult questions under sec. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, which provides that when the terms of any contract required by law to be reduced to the form of a document (and sales or mortgages of land are, by secs. 54 and 58 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, included among such contracts), "no evidence of any oral agreement or statement shall be admitted, as between the parties to any such instrument or their representatives in interest, for the purpose of contradicting, varying, adding to, or subtracting from, its terms."

We have not referred to the decisions of the other High Courts, some of which have taken a view contrary to that taken by the Full Bench of this Court in Preonath's case (1) of the effect of the decision in Balkeshen's case (2). The question therefore is not free from difficulty nor settled. But the weight of authority so far as this Court is concerned is in favour of the admissibility of evidence of the acts and conduct of parties, and as stated above in some cases, this Court has held upon the subsequent acts and conduct of the parties that certain terms of a contract were never intended to be acted upon, i.e., from the very beginning.

It is unnecessary, however, to discuss the matter further having regard to the view we take of the construction of the kabuliyat. The covenant relied upon provides that one set (or one copy) of "chita, khatian, jamabandi, seha, thoka, jama wasil baki and other lawazima papers" are to be submitted at the end of every third year bearing the signature of the persons preparing the same. The tenure created by the kabuliyat was a patni tenure. Ordinarily no such papers are delivered by the patnidar to the zemin-dar. There is, however, nothing in the law to prevent the parties from entering into such a contract. But chita, khatian and jamabandi can be prepared only after measurement of lands. Such papers are not prepared every third year and under sec 90 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the landlord can (subject to any contract) cause a measurement of the lands of tenants only once in 10 years except in certain cases which do not apply to the present. The patnidar therefore cannot have such measurement made and therefore cannot have chita, khatian and jama-bandi prepared every third year. It was not possible therefore for the patnidar to comply with such a stipulation. The zemindar could not also for the same reason get a measurement of the lands by appointing an Amin every third year, even if he could realize Rs 215 every third year from the patnidar. It is probably for those reasons that such papers were never demanded nor submitted. It is true seha, thoka and jama wasil baki papers are prepared every year, but the sum of Rs. 215 agreed upon to be paid in the event of the breach of the contract includes the cost of preparation of the chita, khatian and jamabandi, as well as for preparation of seha, thoka and jama wasil baki papers. As stated above, the papers were never demanded nor submitted at any time during the 35 years that the patni is in existence, and the Plaintiff after having acted in a particular way for 35 years has instituted a suit for recovery of Rs. 1,290 as damages for failure to submit such papers for six years, claiming Rs. 215 for each year. We are of opinion that the Courts below are right in dismissing the suit. In this view it is unnecessary to consider the other contentions raised before us.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 1264 OF 1919.

CHATTERJEE, J. } BEHARI LAL NANDI and Judgment, (Morik alias Ghose), and 6, February. ors., Respondents.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 142, limitation for a suit for possession of uncultivated land over which both parties alleged exercise of definite acts of ownership—Resort to presumption in such cases, if warrantable

Where, according to both parties, definite acts of ownership were exercised over the land which though not cultivated was not incapable of possession, the Court must decide the case upon the evidence adduced by the parties without resorting to any presumption based on title.

SURESH SOHNUR ALI v J. HUTTMAN (1), JONES v. CHAPMAN (2) and RAM BANDHU v KUSU BHATTU (3) referred to and discussed.

This was an appeal preferred on the 25th of June 1919 against the decree of Babu Hem Chandra Bose, Officiating Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zillah Hooghly, dated the 19th of March 1919, reversing the decree of Babu Satya Charan Mukherjee, Munsif of Amta, dated the 15th of May 1916

The material facts of the case are briefly as follows:—The Plaintiffs were the owners of 16 cottahs of land of which they were in possession through tenants and subsequently by letting it out to grain-dealers, boat-makers or boat-repairers, etc. The present suit was brought by the Plaintiffs for declaration of title to, and recovery of possession of, one bigha of land which had been formed by accretion to the aforesaid 12 cottahs of land, but which the Plaintiffs alleged to be reformation in situ. The first Court observed that the nature of the disputed land was such that for some time both the Plaintiffs and Defendant No. 1 used the land, but neither party was in exclusive possession as none of the temporary tenants who actually used the land had any interest to question the right of entry of another person upon a different portion of the disputed land. The Plaintiffs alleged that before 1310 B. S. the land was actually in the cultivation of their tenants. The lower Appellate Court held that from 1306 B. S. the Defendant No. 1 was in possession on his own behalf and had dispossessed the Plaintiffs. The present suit was brought more than 16 years after 1306 B. S. The first Court decreed the suit, and the lower Appellate Court dismissed the suit. Hence the present second appeal was preferred to the High Court by the Plaintiffs.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy and Manmatha Nath Roy for the Appellants.

Dr. D. N. Mitter and Babu Asiranjjan Chatterjee for the Respondents.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of title to, and recovery of possession of, one bigha of land.

The disputed one bigha has been found to be an accretion to another 12 cottahs of land. The 12 cottahs of land was found by the Court of first instance to belong to the Plaintiffs. The lower Appellate Court, however, was of opinion that the Plaintiffs could not succeed because they had not set up a case of accretion, but had set up a case of reformation in situ and he gave also other reasons for deciding the question of title against the Plaintiffs.

It is unnecessary, however, to discuss the question of title as we think that the finding upon the question of limitation disposes of the case. It has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge that the Plaintiffs' suit is barred by limitation as they had failed to prove possession within 12 years of the suit.

It is contended before us on the assumption that the Plaintiffs are the rightful owners (as it must be assumed for the purpose of considering the question of limitation without deciding the question of title) that in order to constitute dispossession of the rightful owner by a trespasser, it is not sufficient to show the trespasser's possession, but it is also necessary to show the cessation of the owner's possession. Our attention is drawn to a finding of the Court of first instance, namely, that "the nature of the disputed land is such, that it is not improbable that for some time both the Plaintiffs and the Defendant No. 1 used the land, for neither party was in actual personal possession and none of the grain-dealers or boat-makers or boat-repairers who actually used the land was in occupation of the whole of the land, and as they had but transitory interest in the land in their occupation, they would not ordinarily question the right of entry of another person upon a different portion of the disputed land. The mere fact that the Defendant No. 1 through his tenants did some acts of possession on the disputed land would not necessarily amount to the Plaintiffs' dispossession."

It is true, as pointed out by Banerji,

BEHARI LAL NANDI v. NRITYANANDA GHOSE.

J., in the case of Sheikh Sohnur Ali v. Hazarika v. J. Huttman (1), that there is no dispossession unless there is termination of the possession of the rightful owner followed by the actual possession of another.

In the case of Jones v. Chapman (2), Maule, J., observed:—

“If there are two persons in a field, each asserting that the field is his, and each doing some act in the assertion of the right of possession, and if the question is which of those two is in actual possession, I answer, the person who has the title is in actual possession, and the other person is a trespasser.”

Upon the facts as found by the Court of first instance, both parties were in possession through temporary tenants, each exercising acts of possession over different portions of the land for temporary periods. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, on appeal, has not accepted that case for the Plaintiff. He has considered the evidence adduced by the Plaintiff and disbelieved it. He finds “There can therefore be no doubt that from 1306 at least the Defendant No. 1 has been in possession on his own behalf.” The suit was instituted 16 years after 1306. Further on, the learned Judge finds that the Plaintiffs were dispossessed by Defendant No. 1.

It is contended, however, that even if the Plaintiff's witnesses were disbelieved, the learned Judge ought to have considered whether the evidence of the Defendants as to possession was such as to constitute ouster of the Plaintiffs having regard to the character of the land and the nature of possession said to have been exercised, and if not, whether there was not any presumption in favour of the rightful owner.

But the case of the Plaintiffs themselves was that before 1310, the land was actually in the cultivation of their tenants, that in 1310 there was a surrender and that subsequently the Plaintiffs were in possession by letting out the land to grain-dealers and for the purpose of boat-repairs and other acts. The Plaintiffs' case, therefore, was not that the land was incapable of enjoyment though the land was not cultivated. The Defendant's case was that he was in continuous possession of the entire land (as part of his jama) through tenants. If therefore according to both parties, definite acts of ownership were exercised over the land, the Court must decide the case upon the evidence adduced by the parties without resorting to any presumption.

In the case of Ram Bandhu v. Kusu Bhattu (3), Garth, C. J., observed: “As long as reliable evidence of acts of ownership is forthcoming, there is no difference between the proof of possession in the case of jungle or uncultivated lands, and that in the case of cultivated lands and such proof is oftentimes forthcoming.” “But it does sometimes happen that neither party to a suit has exercised any acts of ownership at all over the land in question which are capable of proof; and then in the doubt by such absence of proof, or of reliable proof, the Court is obliged to resort to evidence of title, and to presume that the party who has the title has also the possession. But in the present case there would seem to be evidence of at least some acts of ownership; and if so, it would be right for the Court to decide the case upon that evidence, so far as the question of possession is concerned, without resorting to the proof of title.”

It may be pointed out that the words “reliable evidence” or “reliable proof”

(1) 1 C. W. N. 277 (1896).

(2) 2 Easch. Rep. 803 (1842).

(3) 5 C. L. R. 481, 482 (1879).

BEHARI LAL NANDI v. NRITYANANDA GHOSH.

in the decision quoted above appear to have been used in the sense of definite and unequivocal acts of ownership which can be acted upon, because the learned Judges observed: "But in the present case there would seem to be evidence of at least some acts of ownership." The matter was before this Court in second appeal, and this Court directed the lower Court to decide the case upon the evidence of possession. This Court in second appeal could not possibly express any opinion whether the evidence as "reliable" in the sense that the evidence could be believed.

In the present case the land was not jungly land, and although uncultivated subsequent to 1310, it was the case of both parties that the land was let out to grain-dealers and for the purpose of boat-repairs and other acts, and as stated above the finding of the Court of first instance that both parties exercised possession by letting out small and different portions of the land to different tenants for temporary periods has not been accepted by the Court of Appeal below.

We think, having regard to the definite findings that the Plaintiffs were dispossessed by the Defendants, and that the Defendants have been in possession (by which, we think was meant exclusive possession), for a period of 16 years before the suit, the suit must be held to be barred by limitation.

The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with cost.

[APPEAL FROM THE JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER OF THE CENTRAL PROVINCES AND BERAR.]

LORD BUCKMASTER.	SHANKAR GANESH
LORD ATKINSON.	DABIR, Petitioner,
LORD SUMNER.	v.
LORD CARSON	THE SECRETARY
SIR JOHN EDGE.	OF STATE FOR
1922,	INDIA IN COUN-
23, May.	CIL, Respondent.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), sec. 13 (f)—"Any other reasonable cause," if extends to other than professional misconduct—Pleader, urging people not to pay unpopular tax, and bound over to keep the peace under sec. 107, Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898)—Court, if has jurisdiction to deal with pleader under sec. 13 (f) of the Legal Practitioners Act—Discretion of Court—Privy Council—Special leave, application against order made within jurisdiction but in exercise of Court's discretion, if lies

Sec. 13, sub-sec. (f) of the Legal Practitioners Act is not confined to acts done in a professional capacity.

*When a pleader, in the course of an agitation against a local tax, did not confine himself to protests, however vehement, against the tax or against its injustice but urged an organised resistance to payment and attempted to establish a system which would have impeded and might have defeated its recovery with grave danger to public peace, and was bound over to keep the peace and later on dealt with by the High Court under the Legal Practitioners Act with the result that his sanaq of practice was cancelled "until such time as he satisfied the Court by his conduct that he was fit for re-admission":*

Held (without expressing either approval or disapproval of the order)—That the circumstances were sufficient to found jurisdiction under sub-sec. (f) to sec. 13 of the Act, and as it was entirely a matter for the discretion of the Court that made the order, no leave to appeal against it should be granted by the Judicial Committee.

This was an application for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from an order made by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces and Berar, dated the 12th October 1921.

The petition in support of the application set out the following facts :—

The Plaintiff was a pleader at Basim in Berar who was interested in the abolition of the Mahar Baluta revenue system and delivered speeches in the District from one of which the following is an extract :—

“The system of Baluta is unjust and illegal. People cannot afford to pay it as it is to be paid in kind. Instead of doing this the Government should pay it from the Jagha Cess.”

“If after reducing the number of Mahars the expenses could not be met from Jagha Cess the Cess should be enhanced or a separate one be levied. But in no case should it be given in kind.

“Government say that the people pay Mahar's Baluta willingly, but this is not true. It is paid through fear of Government. Then if you really wish that the injustice of Baluta should be stopped and that Baluta should not be paid let the Government recover it by attachment; do not pay it of your own will”

On the 6th April 1921 the Petitioner was served with a notice by the Divisional Magistrate of Basim under the provisions of sec. 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, to shew cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond for Rs. 500 with two sureties for Rs. 500 each for keeping the peace for one year.

On the 3rd May 1921 the Sub-Divisional Magistrate delivered judgment and ordered the Petitioner to execute a bond in terms of the said notice.

This order was affirmed by the District Magistrate and an application by the Petitioner for a revision thereof was refused on the 15th September 1921 by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner.

Two days later the Petitioner was summoned before a Bench of the latter Court and directed to shew cause why he should not be dealt with under sec. 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act.

The Petitioner filed a written statement and pleaded before the said Bench which gave judgment on the 12th October 1921. In the course of their judgment the learned Judicial Commissioners said :—

“It is clear that the pleader preached against the payment of Baluta and told cultivators not to pay that tax but to allow their property to be attached and sold for it. Baluta is a tax legally recoverable by distress: he has been, by delivering lectures in public and distributing placards headed the inquiry of Baluta, instigating one class of persons not to pay money legally due to another class, procedure reasonably calculated to lead to a breach of the public tranquillity, and the pleader's action seems to us incompatible with his obvious duties and responsibilities as an official of this Court. He has not expressed regret for what he has done but attempts to justify it. We learn that he has already suspended practice in the Courts. Suspension from practice in these circumstances would not be any punishment. We therefore cancel his sanad until such time as he satisfies us by his future conduct that he is fit for re-admission.”

From this order the present application -

was made on, amongst others, the following grounds :—

(a) That the ground on which the said Court has disbarred the Petitioner does not fall within the provisions of the Legal Practitioners Act, 1879.

(b) That the facts proved against the Petitioner did not warrant the application of the provisions of sec. 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898

(c) That the mere fact that the Petitioner was compelled to execute a bond under the provisions of sec. 107 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, is no reason, much less a sufficient reason, for disbarring the Petitioner

(d) That the appeal raised a substantial question of law of great public importance to legal practitioners in India.

Mr. B. Dubé for the Petitioner.—The Petitioner practised as pleader at Basim in the District of Akola, Berar, which was represented in the Legislative Council of the Central Provinces by one Mr. J. B. Sane of Berar. There had been a great agitation about a certain tax called the Mahar Baluta tax. The Government of India had appointed a Committee to consider the Mahar Baluta question in 1908. That Committee considered the question and recommended that the Mahar Baluta tax should not be abolished, but that it should be re-organised and recommendations were made. This Member of the Legislative Council thereupon introduced in the Legislative Council this Resolution: “(a) This Council, while disagreeing with the majority report of the Mahar Baluta Committee, recommends to the Government that the present Mahar Baluta system in Berar, which forms part of the land revenue system, should be abolished: (b) This Council, however, agrees with the view expressed by the Committee that the service of the Mahars and Jaghas is essential for the performance of Government duties in the villages, and that the idea of a watan, which is cherished by the Mahar community should be respected in the maintenance of the Mahar service in future: (c) This Council, whilst expressing its general approval of the principles laid down by the Committee for reducing the present number of Jaghas and Mahars which is excessive, recommends that it is absolutely necessary to re-organise the service of Jaghas and Mahars immediately, and to fix its remuneration on the lines and subject to the scale, suggested by the Committee, after making a village-to-village enquiry with the help of the panchayate mentioned in the Report: and (d) This Council further recommends that the expenditure over the service of Mahars and Jaghas be met in future from the proceeds of the Jagha Cess, the deficit, if any, being met from the public revenues.” Then in the course of his speech in support of the resolution, Mr. J. B. Sane said as follows. “In ancient times the population of Indian villages consisted mainly of the members of one family and as they could not do all the work necessary for agricultural purposes themselves, they brought in 12 Balutdars in the villages. These Balutdars ministered to the needs of the cultivators and were paid by annual contributions in grain. Mahar was one of the Balutdars and some private work and some communal work was entrusted to him. He was controlled by the representatives of the village community. The payment in kind that was made to these Mahars and other artisans was called Baluta. I object to the present Mahar Baluta system, first on the ground that it is unjust to the agriculturists of Berar. The second act of injustice is double taxation. In 1866 Jaglia service was introduced for the village service. Jaglia Cess, one anna cess, was imposed for the maintenance of the service. Thus the Mahar huqs were practically converted into Jaglia Cess. The Resident says: 'Hitherto he (i.e., the agriculturist) has paid for the village Dher and in requiring him to pay for the choukidar we only change the name of the official and the mode of payment. A new interpretation of the policy came in saying that the Jaglia Cess was not the commutation of the Mahar huqs, but the Jaglias were appointed in addition to Mahars. Against the clear orders of the Government of India and against the non-intervention policy of the Resident, Sir Alfred Lyall acted upon this interpretation and the people were held liable to pay both Jaglia Cess and Mahar Baluta. This policy was afterwards ratified by the Government of India. Thus the people of Berar have now to pay both the Jaglia Cess and the Mahar Baluta for the same service. It is double taxation. Thudly, up to 1876 the Mahar Baluta was not recognised by the British Government and enforceable under the law from the agriculturists. The Resident had clearly declared that 'they are neither recognised nor forbidden, and that no notice of the huqs need be taken either way.' But now, the non-payment of Baluta entitles the Mahar to have it recovered by a 'Japti' or attachment under the coercive processes of the Revenue Court. Now, I request you to compare the present position of the parties with that with which we started. Mahar is no longer the servant of the villagers but he is the servant of Government and his Baluta is, under the Revenue Law, exacted from the unwilling cultivators by coercive processes notwithstanding the fact that he oppresses them in matters of begar and sarbarat.

Practically the cultivators have to feed their oppressors for no service done to them. The second objection to the present Baluta system is that it is paid in kind. We are living in times far advanced in economic ideas. All objections that can be raised against barter are applicable to this payment in kind of the Mahar Baluta. No Government dues are recovered in kind in our days. Moreover, the patels and influential persons can avoid the payment in kind which is realised by Mahar and not by Government. Disputes occur very often regarding the quality of grain that is given by the villagers for the Baluta. Now, Sir, I have kept before you my resolution in a nutshell; before summing up, I shall deal with one or two important objections which have been levelled against my attitude. The first objection is that Mahar Baluta is a long standing custom; people have acquiesced in the wrong so long, and they have now no right to complain against it. I say that all wrongs cannot be cured by prescription'".

The point is this, that the recommendation made by this Member was passed by a majority of the House, 28 to 2, and it has subsequently been recognised by the Government that that is a resolution of the Legislative Council for the abolition of the Mahar Baluta. I will go on to para. 8: "That your Petitioner took great interest at the moment for the abolition of the Mahar Baluta system, and he delivered speeches in his constituency and other places in support of it. The following extract from one of his speeches delivered after the above-mentioned debate in the Legislative Council is illustrative: 'The system of Baluta is unjust and illegal. People cannot afford to pay it as it is to be paid in kind. Instead of doing this the Government should pay it (the Mahar's remuneration) from the Jaglia Cess. If, after reducing the number of Mahars the expenses could not be met from Jaglia Cess, the cess should be enhanced or a separate one be levied. But in no case should it be given in kind. Government says that the people pay Mahar's Baluta willingly, but this is not true. It is paid through fear of Government. Then, if you really wish that the injustice of Baluta should be stopped and that Baluta should not be paid, let the Government recover it by attachment, do not pay it of your own will. This was an appeal to the agriculturalists in Berar in his own constituency. That was disliked by the executive authorities and a notice was served upon him under sec. 107 of the Code.

[LORD SUMNER.—Is this a criminal proceeding?]

Yes, it is under sec. 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It will be convenient if I refer your Lordships to the section of the Code itself.

[LORD SUMNER.—Was this gentleman sentenced to something?]

He was not sentenced, he was bound over.

[LORD SUMNER.—It was the determination of a criminal matter.]

Yes.

[LORD SUMNER.—Is that what he is appealing against?]

No; he has been struck off the roll. After this order was made by the Criminal Court, the Court of the Judicial Commissioner called upon him to show cause why he should not be struck off.

[LORD SUMNER.—He was disbarred.]

Yes. He contended that the Code of Criminal Procedure has no application to a case of this kind, and that the order that was made was absolutely illegal, and a gross abuse of the process of the Court.

[LORD CARSON.—What order was illegal, the order holding him to bail?]

Yes.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—In the end what happened was this, that somebody having authority suspended him from practice until certain things were done, because they found that his conduct was not becoming to a member of the profession to which he belonged.]

Yes.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—How can we interfere with that?]

After I have stated the facts, I will show your Lordships that there is nothing which reflects the slightest moral delinquency on the part of the Petitioner or suggests that he has been guilty of any offence.

[LORD CARSON.—He was held to bail because he made speeches which were said might lead to a breach of tranquillity and he entered into the necessary bond. Then he was summoned before the disciplinary authority to show cause why he should not be dealt with under the Legal Practitioners Act, and they suspended him.]

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—He was delivering inflammatory speeches recommending people not to pay at all.]

He was contending that that particular tax was a tax which ought to be abolished.

[LORD SUMNER.—That might have been very material before the Magistrates who bound him over, but as long as that order which is a sentence, though a very mild one, stands, for the purpose of considering whether he has committed an act which no longer fits him to be a member of the Bar, you have to assume that that order was a good order, otherwise you would be appealing here against a criminal order, and if this is an order of a criminal nature made against a member of the Bar or a pleader, is it not within the disciplinary powers of the Court in their discretion to say whether he shall be suspended from practice or not?

I submit the binding over under sec. 107 of the Code is not a punishment. If your Lordships will refer to the Code of Criminal Procedure, Part IV, it deals with the prevention of offences; it is of a precautionary nature.

[LORD CARSON.—It is the same in this country; it is preventive.]

[LORD ATKINSON.—You may bind a man over to be of good behaviour because he has been guilty of conduct that may lead to disorder.]

It would be a very strong proposition to lay down in England that because a member of the Bar or a citizen expresses strong views with regard to the justice or injustice of a particular tax that he should be bound over.

[LORD ATKINSON.—That order is not under appeal.]

It is indirectly, in so far as I am contending that the order made under sec. 107 has absolutely no application to a case of this kind.

[LORD ATKINSON.—In this country under the Statute of Edward III a man of ill-fame can be bound over.]

Will your Lordships look at sec. 107 of the Code of Criminal Procedure?

[LORD ATKINSON.—It may be that is entirely different.]

It is entirely different. Sec. 107 says: "Whenever a Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate, Sub-Divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class is informed that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity." I submit that this section applies to a person who is about to commit a wrongful act.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—Not necessarily. The words are "is informed that any person is likely to commit a breach of the peace or disturb the public tranquillity."]

For the sake of argument supposing a man were disturbing the public tranquillity by, for instance, preaching in favour of the temperance movement in front of a liquor shop, it could not be held that because that man delivered a speech and was bound over it would be any discredit to him.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—That may well be. It may be that what you say is quite right, that what this man was doing was conducting a perfectly lawful agitation, but none the less it was an agitation which in the view of the local authorities was one that might cause a disturbance and breach of public tranquillity, and he was therefore bound over. Having been bound over in those circumstances why was it outside the jurisdiction of the body that looks after the affairs of these pleaders to say. You are a pleader and though you may be well within your rights in disturbing the public tranquillity we do not think as a member of your profession you ought to have done it?]

I submit there is no authority for laying down the proposition that if a man is bound over in the circumstances in which the Petitioner was bound over it is any ground for disbarring him.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—They have merely suspended him from practice until he satisfies them that he is not going to do it again. If he said to-morrow, I still say I am quite right in what I did, but none the less you point out that my action might cause a disturbance of public tranquillity and that is the last thing I want to do, I do not propose to do it any more, they might put an end to his suspension.]

Even if it is a temporary suspension, I submit this order was not warranted by the Act.

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—What right have these pleaders to appear in Court, is it not a license granted to them?]

In the first place they have the right by qualification.

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—Their right to appear is under license, is it not?]

They pass an examination and then they apply to the Court stating that they are fit and proper persons to be admitted, in very much the same way as a barrister who goes out to India applies and is admitted.

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—This man was not a member of the Bar. It is a license to plead and appear, is it not?]

I submit under the Legal Practitioners Act there is no difference between an advocate, a pleader and a vakil.

[LORD CARSON.—The Judicial Commissioners, however, control the practitioners. Are not they really the best Judges of what is necessary?]

No, I submit not, with respect.

[LORD CARSON.—It is very hard for us to know what standard of discipline they may have laid down there.]

If I may say so with respect, because a man makes a strong speech it would amount to be a travesty of justice to say he should be disbarred. It is no answer to say that one Court has done it.

[LORD CARSON.—They know the local conditions.]

The conditions in India are very much parallel to the conditions prevailing in this country or Ireland.

[LORD SUMNER.—You are asking us to deal with an order made by the Court in the exercise of their disciplinary powers under a statute. Supposing that a vakil who was brought up before them had undoubtedly committed some offence that you would not think could be defended, surely you could not say it was not a matter in the discretion of the Court in question whether he had so conducted himself as to be no longer fit to be an officer of the Court? It would be a question of the gravity of what he had done.]

It is not a question of degree. I contend that under the statute they have no power.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—I understand what you mean. This is what I understand you to say, that the power to suspend is under sec. 12 of the Legal Practitioners Act.]

Secs 12 and 13

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—That is where a man has been convicted of a criminal offence implying a defect of character which unfits him to be a pleader. You say when he was convicted merely because he had done something that might have caused a breach of public tranquillity, then, even though he had been convicted of a criminal offence, that did not imply a defect of character. That is the real point in the case. I do not see that they say anything about that.]

[Mr. Kenworthy Brown.—The High Court exercised their jurisdiction under sec. 13.]

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—They may suspend or dismiss.]

For professional misconduct. That does not mean at the sweet will of the executive authorities. The lower Court has not found the Petitioner guilty of any moral delinquency or any defect of character apart from the order which has been made.

[LORD CARSON.—Do you put it that they had no jurisdiction, that they have done something outside their jurisdiction?]

They were not competent.

[LORD CARSON.—That is a different proposition.]

It is not a question of degree. If it is conceded for the sake of argument that the Magistrate had jurisdiction under sec 107 for that purpose, it is quite sufficient to contend that the conduct complained of is not such which would have justified in any view the order that is made in this case.

[LORD ATKINSON.—At all events did he not advocate the non-payment of a legal tax?]

Yes.

[LORD ATKINSON.—Do you say that is not immoral and may not lead to a disturbance?]

It is not such as to show a defect of character.

[LORD SUMNER.—A defect of character not to be a member of Parliament, but a defect of character to be a pleader.]

If a member of the Bar without being a member of Parliament advocates that the employers' proportion of the Insurance Tax should not be paid, what is there in that to justify disbarring a legal practitioner in this country? The Act in question is the Act No. 18 of 1879 as amended by the Act No. 11 of 1896. I will read the whole of sec 13 as amended. (Reads same).

[LORD ATKINSON.—The whole question is whether there was reasonable cause.]

Yes, my Lord, if it is contended by the other side that it falls under the words "or for any other reasonable cause," I submit there is no shadow of ground for suggesting that there is a reasonable ground for suspending a barrister because he happens to express an opinion upon a political question which is disliked by the executive.

[LORD CARSON.—Was this order made because of that section in the Criminal Procedure Code or something else?]

Because he was bound over.

[LORD SUMNER.—It is "any other reasonable cause" that involves a question of degree first of all as to what he did, and secondly, how bad it was.]

The question of degree would be material if you found there was moral delinquency.

[LORD SUMNER.—If you first found there was reasonable cause.]

If you do not first find moral delinquency, there can be no reasonable cause. If you do find it, then the question of degree might be material.

Refers to Re Wallace (1). There the attorney and barrister was a party in the proceeding. The Judges gave judgment against him, and he said all sorts of things against the Judges, sent them letters and so on. At p 288 the Chief Justice says, this: "He then makes a general charge against the Judges in language too insulting to be repeated, and winds up with a criticism, in the same style, on some of the pettier matters which I had decided in Chambers." Disciplinary action was taken against the barrister and he was struck off.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—In what Court?]
That was in Nova Scotia.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—Under what authority?]

There seems to have been no statute there. I suppose it was the general disciplinary jurisdiction. The result was this Board held he would have been guilty of contempt of Court in his individual capacity, but the defect was not such that it can be said that he should not remain a member of the Bar in his professional status and capacity.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—Supposing a man here grossly insulted one of the Judges, his Inn of Court would have full power to remove him from the Bar.]

[LORD ATKINSON—More than that, a criminal information would lie against him at once.]

Then Lord Westbury says: "The Appellant in this case is an advocate, and also an attorney, admitted to practise in the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia. It appears that he was also a suitor in that Court. In two or three cases in which he was such suitor he seems to have supposed that he had reason to complain of the conduct of the Judges of the Court, and he accordingly wrote a letter, addressed to the Chief Justice, reflecting on the Judges, and on the administration of justice generally in the Court, which undoubtedly was a letter of a most reprehensive kind. This letter was a contempt of Court, which it was hardly possible for the Court to omit taking cognizance of. It was an offence, however, committed by an individual in his capacity of a suitor in respect of his supposed rights as a suitor, and of an imaginary injury done to him as a suitor, and it had no connection whatever with his professional character, or anything done by him professionally."

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—Supposing here a man insulted a Court in a case in which he was a private suitor and the Court sentenced him there and then to imprisonment for contempt of Court, do you say that would not be a perfectly good reason why they should suspend the man from practice, supposing there was a statute which said you could suspend him for a reasonable cause?]

In this case he refused to make any apology.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—Supposing that even a private litigant as in Wallace's case (1) grossly insulted the Court and was thereupon sent to prison for contempt of Court, and furthermore would not purge his contempt by apologising, which corresponds to the attitude your client has taken up, do you say there would be no jurisdiction to suspend such a person from practice upon the ground that he was not a fit person to exercise the duties of an advocate?]

I submit there would be no jurisdiction.

[LORD BUCKMASTER—Your proposition is, no jurisdiction.]

Lord Westbury delivering the judgment of the Board says: "It was not competent to the Court to inflict upon him a professional punishment for an act which was not done professionally, and which act, per se, did not render him improper to remain as a practitioner of the Court."

[LORD CARSON—You must go the length of saying that they had no jurisdiction under the practice in this case to do it. If it was a question of degree we could not interfere with it.]

I take a much wider standpoint and say in a case of this sort it would be monstrous if a professional man is going to be suspended from practice because he holds political opinions which the Magistrates do not like.

[LORD ATKINSON—I do not understand the distinction here when they say he did not do this thing in his capacity of a solicitor. If he committed a murder he might not do it in his capacity as a solicitor, but it would be a good reason for suspending him.]

Unless your Lordship is satisfied he has done something dishonourable I submit the order is unjust.

[LORD CARSON.—I thought when you read out the facts first that he was suspended for saying they were not to pay this tax. You say the whole judgment went on the binding over.]

Yes, simply binding over and nothing else.

[LORD ATKINSON.—What do they say?]

The material quotation is at para. 16

[LORD SUMNER.—They might reasonably take the view that they have, might they not? It depends upon the tax and the people and upon the advocate. They might have thought if the lectures were sufficiently energetic, they might be calculated to lead to a breach of public tranquillity.]

Yes, but would it be a reasonable cause?

[LORD SUMNER.—They might take the view that a speech is likely to lead to such an amount of disorder in the country or the town that it is in the interests of good Government that it should not be allowed.]

He says, I am entitled to contend that the tax is unjust and I have the right of speaking out . . .

[LORD SUMNER.—Supposing a pleader of the Court were to get up an agitation which could properly be described as a revolutionary and an anarchistic agitation, could one possibly say then that that was not a reasonable cause for which, if the facts were believed by the Tribunal, they might suspend him from practice? Although you may say it is revolutionary propaganda not in connection with statements of claim or defence or mortgages, but in connection with political rights, could you deny that that would be a reasonable cause?]

It is difficult for me to express an opinion as to what "revolutionary" might mean. It might mean the substitution of a new order of society which is not considered revolutionary.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—Your contention I think must be this that if the man's action is an action which is not of such a criminal character as to cause any moral reflection, then whatever he does outside his duties as a pleader cannot constitute reasonable cause under sec. 13.]

That is so.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—That is your contention?]

Yes.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—If you are right in that, then of course the whole thing falls, but if you are wrong in that and if such conduct as a matter of fact gave rise to the jurisdiction under sec 13, it then becomes a question of degree. The whole question is whether it is within it or without it.]

Yes, my Lord. Applying the general principles of discipline there is no ground for suggesting that the standpoint is different in India from what it is in England or in Ireland apart from the question of degree.

[LORD ATKINSON.—Supposing for instance, the attorney committed murder but he did not happen to do it as an attorney, could not he be removed and would not he be removed under such circumstances because it was a reasonable cause?]

Finding a man guilty of murder according to the accepted notions of Society at the present time is the greatest moral delinquency which one knows.

[LORD ATKINSON.—There are no words that cover murder except the words "reasonable cause"]

That is so, my Lord.

[LORD CARSON.—All the matters that are set out are disciplinary matters in relation to breaches of the standard of honour. Therefore you must contend that except for the breaches of the rules of the profession he cannot be removed.]

SHANKAR GANESH DABIR v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

I do not think it is necessary to go as far as that.

[LORD CARSON.—You say that binding a man over to keep the peace is no slur on him.]

I submit it is not a slur. It is not a conviction for any offence.

[LORD CARSON.—That would depend upon the exact thing for which he was bound over.]

[SIR JOHN EDGE.—I suppose on the authority of that case you referred to in Re Wallace (1), you would argue that the murder was not committed in his professional capacity.]

No. Will your Lordships refer to the case again at p. 295 where the learned Judge says in terms "To offences of that kind there has been attached by law and by long practice a definite kind of punishment, viz, fine and imprisonment. It must not, however, be supposed that a Court of Justice has not the power to remove the officers of the Court if unfit to be entrusted with a professional status and character. If an advocate, for example, were found guilty of crime, there is no doubt that the Court would suspend him."

[LORD ATKINSON.—That must be, because under this provision it is a reasonable cause.]

[LORD CARSON.—That is a general jurisdiction.]

Yes, and I submit the general jurisdiction in this case is in no way different.

There was another case decided in India in In the matter of Koylash Nath Chowdhury (2). There the learned Judges laid down that although the pleader had been convicted, in their opinion there was no moral turpitude to be imputed to the Petitioner in respect of the act for which he was punished.

[LORD CARSON.—What had he done?]

It was under Act No. 20 of 1865

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—Supposing they said that does not come in under sec 12 but still we think we should show some sense of our disapproval of his conduct.]

This shows that the learned Judges attached importance to the question whether they could say there was moral turpitude involved or not.

[LORD SUMNER.—I think your proposition comes to this, that you must read "reasonable cause" in the statute in view of the authorities as meaning reasonable cause of a kind involving either moral turpitude or professional misconduct. That is your first point. The first thing you have to do is to justify putting into the statute, by virtue of this decision or other grounds, words which are not there; but the second difficulty that strikes me is this—you say there is no moral turpitude here. There are some crimes which involve moral turpitude in themselves, sexual offences, for instance. There are some which do not, such as letting a dog out without a muzzle on. The way in which the criminal offence is committed may make all the difference whether it involves moral turpitude or not, but it may be done in such circumstances through heat or ignorance or enthusiasm as to deprive it of its moral turpitude. It may be that this man intended to do as much mischief as possible. All those questions are questions of degree and they must depend upon the view taken of the facts by the Tribunal, and, surely the Tribunal, when, as far as I understand your client's own public statements, he declared that he was investigating one class of persons not to pay the tax, that being a deliberate and persistent course of conduct on his part, had material before them to give them jurisdiction, though the discretion with which they exercised that jurisdiction might in a proper case be questionable.]

I submit not The circumstances under which a man acts might constitute the degree of moral turpitude

[LORD SUMNER.—This man is a pleader and an officer of the Court He assists in the administration of the law. That being so he invites and incites a very large number of people not to assist in the administration of the law but to defy it. Is that proper conduct for a man who is one of the officers of the Court?]

I submit there is no question of defiance

[LORD SUMNER.—Surely there is a question of defiance. He instigates these people not to pay. That is defying the law]

But if a number of people honestly believe that the law is unjust . . .

[LORD SUMNER.—You say that this man is at liberty to conduct any agitation which he pleases lawfully and constitutionally to get a law changed That is his obvious right, but if this man as a pleader says: The way to get this thing done is to break the law; not to get the law altered but to break it and refuse to obey it, then whatever is the discretion which would be exercised by A, B or C it surely gives them the right to exercise it.]

If it were necessary to contend for the broader proposition that a member of the legal profession is entitled to say this is an unjust law and it should not be observed,

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—That may be a perfectly simple thing for a man to do who is under no obligation to the Court, but when the man is an officer of the Court

he is engaged in the administration of the law.]

A member of the legal profession whether in this country or elsewhere is an officer of the Court inasmuch as he is functionally supposed to be a member of the Court I do not resile from that. If a barrister had said to a person here: Do not pay taxes, could it be held that he was unfit professionally?

[LORD SUMNER.—The point is: Would not that give jurisdiction to the authority to consider whether or not this was an offence of such a character as to unfit him?]

I submit there would be no jurisdiction.

[LORD SUMNER.—Why not?]

I submit the Court would have no jurisdiction to suspend because a man expresses his opinion in that way

[LORD SUMNER.—He instigates people to break the law. That is not an expression of opinion You may say that the law is as bad as you like, but instead of trying to change it you defy the law What is the difference between defying this law and any other?]

Will your Lordships read para. 9? The question in controversy was that he urged the agriculturalists not to pay this tax of their own free will and accord.

[LORD ATKINSON.—He said: Do not pay]

And the Government realises by distress warrant

[LORD ATKINSON.—He instigated people to defy an existing law. That is a criminal offence.]

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—You must not assume that this Board expresses any opinion whatever as to whether or not they would have exercised the discretion vested in these Magistrates in the way in which it was exercised; the only question they have to consider is whether there was material here which enabled the discretion to arise. That is the only thing.]

He says here, "then, if you really wish that the injustice of Baluta should be stopped and that Baluta should not be paid, let the Government recover it by attachment; do not pay it of your own will."

[LORD BUCKMASTER. It may be a trivial thing, supposing he had added to that: "barricade your doors and resist the Government coming in," would you say there was no jurisdiction?]

Yes, my Lord.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—You are confusing the right to agitate politically and to do things you are thoroughly entitled to do as a private citizen and the duty as an officer of the Court to assist as far as you possibly can the administration of justice.]

He is advocating leaving the law to take its own course.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—What I was putting to you went further than that. If you admit he was going to such an extent that the jurisdiction arises, it then becomes clear that the jurisdiction attaches because he has attempted to impede the administration of the law.]

Here there is nothing more than proposing to the agriculturalists not to pay voluntarily.

[LORD SUMNER.—You are proposing to them not to pay voluntarily, knowing full well that there are so many of them and what they have to pay is so important to the Government that if they do not pay, the Government has power to compel by legal process and the Government is penalised on account of their refusing.]

That is a possible view.

[LORD SUMNER.—If that were the character of the agitation even although there was no instigation to barricade their houses or pour hot water on the policeman or do anything which the suffragettes did, surely it would be a question of degree whether defiance of that kind was not tainted with moral turpitude unless your proposition, as I rather think it is, is intended to be that so long as a man acts with political motives and in the course of a political agitation though he may offend against the criminal law he does not do so with any sense of moral turpitude.]

Supposing a certain man believes that he ought not to pay a certain tax.

[LORD SUMNER.—You do not divorce political from ethical motives. Do you?]

The question of whether it would be considered revolutionary or unethical would depend on the opinion of the bulk of the people.

[LORD ATKINSON.—To instigate a conspiracy against the Government not to pay is a crime. A conspiracy among a number of debtors not to pay their debts is a crime.]

If all of the unemployed were to bind themselves together and to say the masters must pay the insurance tax and not the employed?

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—You have not faced the point. The point here is not whether this Board would have thought that the offence was one which warranted suspension, they express no opinion whatever upon that because that is absolutely for the Court over there. The question is whether a man who is an officer of the Court and who goes beyond political agitation and adds to it a direct incitement to break the law has not been guilty of something which is a reasonable cause why his conduct should be considered. That is the whole thing.]

Yes. I submit it is not, because in the first place, as your Lordship pointed out, in the case of this barrister and attorney from Nova Scotia he must have known because it is elementary that Judges could not be treated with contempt; he was certainly found wanting in the moral sense which ought to characterise every member of the profession. I submit that this case here simply amounts to this that the executive authority of the country takes the view that in the interests of peace and good order he shall be bound over.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—It is a criminal offence in that case.]

I submit it is too much to say that a professional man should be disbarred because he has been convicted of a criminal offence. It is only those offences which amount to defects of character

[LORD CARSON.—We are only saying it is a matter for the Court to consider.]

Your Lordship is familiar with strong speeches on political and religious questions.

[LORD CARSON.—I have made many myself but that does not show that the Court has not a discretion if a man is brought before them]

Surely that would be laying down for the first time rules of discipline which at the sweet will of the Government of the day would prevent legal practitioners from carrying on their profession.

[LORD CARSON.—It is not the Government of the day; it would be the Courts. I am not going to impute improper conduct to the Magistrates] Neither am I.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—That is a pure question of law: it is a question whether there is a case here sufficient to justify your client in arguing before this Board that the circumstances of this case could not give rise to reasonable cause.]

I ask your Lordships to recommend to His Majesty that this is a case which should be heard on the merits and as the subject is of importance to legal practitioners, should your Lordships take the view that the petition ought to be refused, I would ask that your Lordships should give your reasons so that there may be no misunderstanding at all as to the grounds upon which the petition is refused.

Mr Kenworthy Brown for the Secretary of State.—My Lords, the first thing I want to remind your Lordships of is this. The matter having been before three Courts they all having held that it was an act in which an order under the section should be made, I submit that is a matter which the Court can justly attach a great deal of importance to. Starting from the point that the order under sec 107 was properly made, the position of affairs was this, that the Petitioner, whose right to take legitimate political action I do not want in the least to throw doubt upon, took steps with the object which my learned friend has stated, and the means by which he proposes to take those steps are such as would be likely to lead to a breach of the peace. That being so I think I am on firm ground and I submit to your Lordships that it is undoubtedly a case in which the High Court had a discretion. It is not a question whether the circumstances were such that the High Court had no discretion.

*[LORD BUCKMASTER.—That is the whole point. Mr. Dubé says no discretion exists.]

Yes, my Lord, but the reason why he says that is a reason which leaves me somewhat in doubt, because the final phrase of that new section of the Legal Practitioners Act is expressed in very wide terms; the words are "any reasonable cause."

[LORD CARSON.—The only actual matter set out apart from this is the clause at the end which refers to professional matters.]

Yes, my Lord, that is so, but it has been held in India by a very important Tribunal that you cannot construe the generality of that final clause by the previous clauses which are dealing with matters of professional misconduct.

[LORD ATKINSON.—Supposing a man gets 12 months' penal servitude, he could be removed under the words "reasonable cause."]

I submit that is not the construction that the section naturally bears and in the second place every Court has jurisdiction over its officers.

[LORD ATKINSON.—The argument is that they had no jurisdiction, it is not a question of the exercise of jurisdiction, but they had not jurisdiction.]

[LORD SUMNER.—I think you have this ground for saying that (f) "any other reasonable cause" is not ejusdem generis with the matters mentioned from (a) to (e) for this reason, it is omitting the word "reasonable" or else it is imputing to (a) and (e) that they are all things that are not reasonable and if they meant to say for any other cause ejusdem generis with the others the word "reasonable" was not wanted. On the other hand, as it is there, effect has to be given to it.]

I follow that. Then the question is this. Do your Lordships desire that I should refer to authorities in India in which it has been held that this last clause is not to be controlled by the generic character of the previous clauses. There is a case that came before a very large bench of a Calcutta Court in LeMesurier v. Wajid Hossein (3).

[LORD SUMNER.—That has been authority there ever since.]

Yes, my Lord.

[LORD SUMNER.—For 20 years.]

Yes, my Lord.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—All the Judges were in support of that except Mr Justice (those You say that has been followed without question ever since.)

It has never been questioned.

[LORD SUMNER.—Is there any further decision on the point?]

I do not think so. I cannot say; I have made an exhaustive search.

[LORD SUMNER.—Mr. Dubé did not say that there was any decision in support of his view.]

Mr Dubé.—I purposely refrained from contending that cl (f) is confined absolutely to the other clauses from (a) to (e) and I contended therefore that there must be some moral delinquency

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—Your first argument appears to be a strong one, supported by the case in Re. Wallace (1), that it must be something of a professional nature. Unless that authority is wrong, that is not the case.]

As to the question of the authority the case of In the matter of Jogendra Narain Bose (4) to which reference has been made, the view taken was that cl (e) was confined only to professional misconduct.

[LORD BUCKMASTER.—It was because of that that this case assumed the importance that it did. Directly that is not confined to professional misconduct, then it becomes a matter on each occasion for the Court to consider that.]

Not necessarily, because if there is an act which does not involve any moral turpitude at all, it does not come within that clause. I am asking your Lordships for special leave to consider that broad proposition that in the case of a legal practitioner if it does not involve moral delinquency it cannot come under sec. 13. I do not contend for the proposition that a pleader of the Court can be suspended only on grounds of professional misconduct

[LORD SUMNER — You have been quite lucid. You say professional misconduct or a criminal offence involving moral turpitude. Then your proposition is that being the foundation of the jurisdiction, where is the moral turpitude here?]

Yes.

[LORD SUMNER — Those are the two points.]

Yes.

[LORD SUMNER — You say there is no evidence of moral turpitude.]

None at all. The man is regarded by a vast number of his fellow countrymen as holding the view which was right and proper, though the executive Government may possibly take a different view, but I submit it does not certainly involve moral turpitude.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD BUCKMASTER — As a concession to the urgent request of Counsel, their Lordships will briefly state the reasons why they are not able to advise that leave to appeal should be granted to the Petitioner, but this indulgence must not be taken as recognising any departure from established practice, nor affording any precedent for the future. In expressing the opinion which they hold that this petition ought to be refused, their Lordships expressly desire to make plain that their opinion carries with it no approval of or reflection upon the order against which leave to appeal is sought. That order was entirely one for the discretion of the Court that made it, and the only matter that it has been necessary to consider is whether a prima facie case has been made out to establish that there was no foundation upon which that discretion could properly repose. It appears that the Petitioner was, on the 3rd May 1921 bound over by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate at Basim to keep the peace for a period of one year, and that order was confirmed by the District Magistrate and by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. The offence which he had committed was connected with an agitation against payment of the Mahar Baluta, and it appears that in the course of such agitation he did not confine himself to protests, however vehement, against the tax, or against its injustice, but that he urged an organised resistance to payment, and attempted to establish a system which would have impeded and might have defeated its recovery with grave danger to the public peace. These considerations led to the conviction to which reference has been made, and caused his conduct as a pleader to be brought before the Court in their jurisdiction under the Legal Practitioners Act of 1879. Their Lordships are of opinion that the circumstances to which they have referred were sufficient to found jurisdiction under sec 13, sub-sec. (f) of that Act, which is not confined to acts done in a professional capacity, and for these reasons they think that no leave to appeal ought to be granted in this case, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE

No. 1603 of 1919.

THE INDIA PROVIDENT

Co., LD., Defendants,

Appellants,

v.

GOVINDA CHANDRA DAS

and anr., Plaintiffs,

Respondents.

CHATTERJEE, J

PEARSON, J.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 20 (c) — Cause of action — Jurisdiction — Fraud — Suppression of summons — Suppression of real fact, misleading of Court by — Decree obtained in one District and executed in another — Suit to declare the decree fraudulent and for injunction restraining execution, if maintainable in the latter District — Ex parte decree in Calcutta Small Cause Court — Suit in Sylhet.

Where an ex parte decree obtained in the Calcutta Small Cause Court was transferred for execution to a Court at Sylhet within the jurisdiction of which the judgment-debtor resided, and thereupon the judgment-debtor brought a suit in the Court at Sylhet to have the said ex parte decree declared as fraudulent and for an injunction restraining the decree-holder from executing the decree :

Held—That the Court at Sylhet had jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and that Court was competent to issue an injunction, and in order to grant that relief it had the power to go into the question whether the ex parte decree was obtained by fraud.

KEDAR NATH MUKERJEE v. PRASSANNA KUMAR CHATTERJEE (3) referred to.

Held also—That upon the facts found the ex parte decree was a fraudulent one, and it was not a question of obtaining a decree by perjured evidence

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Upendra Chandra Mukherjee, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zillah

Sylhet, dated the 4th of June 1919, affirming the decree of Babu Jnanendra Mohan Das, Munsif, 2nd Court at Sylhet, dated the 24th September 1918

The facts material to this report are these :—

The suit leading to this appeal was brought under the following circumstances : The Defendant Company who are the Appellants in the present appeal obtained an ex parte decree against the Plaintiffs-Respondents in the Calcutta, Small Cause Court for Rs. 1,217, on the 1st March 1916. The Defendant Company got the decree transferred to the Court at Sylhet in the jurisdiction of which the present Plaintiffs resided, and applied in that Court for execution of the decree. Plaintiffs thereupon brought a suit out of which the present appeal has arisen in the Court at Sylhet for a declaration that the ex parte decree obtained by the Defendant Company against the Plaintiffs in the Calcutta Small Cause Court was obtained by fraud, was void and not fit to be executed, and prayed for the issue of a permanent injunction restraining the Defendant Company from executing the decree. The case of the Plaintiffs was that the Defendant Company without getting any summons served on the Plaintiffs surreptitiously secured a collusive and fraudulent ex parte decree in a false suit brought against them in the Calcutta Small Cause Court, that no summons was served by post upon the Plaintiffs as was alleged by the Defendant Company, that there was no adjustment of accounts although the suit was brought on the allegation that the accounts had been adjusted, and that Plaintiff No 1 was surety only for Rs 1,000, and that nothing was due to the Defendant Company by Plaintiff No. 2, and pro forma Defendant No. 2 who acted as agent of the Defendant Company, and that the surety bond was not forfeited. The defence of the Defendant Company, inter alia, was that the Sylhet Court had no jurisdiction to try this suit, that Plaintiff No. 2 and pro formâ Defendant No. 2 and Plaintiff No. 2 realised money from the Defendant Company's constituents and afterwards sent an adjusted account which shewed that Rs. 1,127 was actually due by Plaintiffs and pro formâ Defendant No. 2, and that the decree obtained by the Defendant Company was not fraudulent, that the summons was sent by the Small Cause Court, Calcutta, under registered covers, and the Plaintiffs and pro formâ Defendant No. 2 deliberately did not accept the summons and the registered covers were therefore returned to the Court of Small Causes as "refused," and that the allegations that the registered letters did not reach the Plaintiffs and the pro formâ Defendant No. 2 and the Defendant Company suppressed the same were false.

The learned Munsif at Sylhet who tried the suit gave a decree to the Plaintiffs. The following portion of his judgment is material: "Although the decree in question was passed by the Calcutta Small Cause Court it was executed here within the jurisdiction of this Court and the present suit is triable by this Court."

From all the above circumstances I am of opinion that the allegation in the plaint of the Small Cause Court suit in which the ex parte decree in question was passed that there was an adjustment of account was not true and that if the facts were truly placed before the Court there could not be a decree without taking an account, that this suppression amounted to fraud and had the effect of misleading the Court. Again the security bond shews that Plaintiff No. 1 stood surety for Rs. 1,000 and if the bond was produced in Court there could not be a decree for the entire claim of that suit against Plaintiff No. 1 of this suit. The next question is whether there was suppression of summons as alleged. Although there is no direct evidence of suppression, there is no evidence either that the present Plaintiffs received summons of that suit or that any registered cover containing summons of that suit was ever tendered to them.

From the above it is quite clear that the Defendant Company presented a fraudulent case before the Calcutta Small Cause Court with the result that the said Court was misled and that the fact of the previous suit was not known to the present Plaintiffs who had no opportunity of defending it. I find accordingly that the decree in question was fraudulently obtained and as such it is liable to be set aside.

The decree in question in this suit is declared to be void and inoperative and a perpetual injunction is granted restraining the Defendant Company from executing that decree."

On appeal by the Defendant Company the learned Subordinate Judge at Sylhet upheld the decision of the Munsif and dismissed the appeal.

The following portion of his judgment will be found material:—

"As to the question of jurisdiction I should observe at the outset that a case like the present falls within the purview of sec. 20 of the Civil Procedure Code. The residence of the pro formâ Defendant No. 2, a co-debtor of the Plaintiffs, cannot help the Court in determining the jurisdiction under that section. Admittedly the Defendant Company was not a resident within the jurisdiction of the Court of first instance. Cls. (a) and (b) of sec. 20 therefore do not apply. Let me see if cl. (c) of that section applies. . . The Defendants in that suit were described as residents within the jurisdiction of the Sylhet Courts and in looking into the plaint as well as the decree sought to be set aside, it appears that they were served with summons under registered covers at the instance of the Defendant Company. The Plaintiffs in the present suit deny the service of summons by registered covers. So it is clear that a portion of the alleged fraud was said to have been perpetrated within the jurisdiction of the trial Court. It is not therefore correct to say that a portion of the alleged fraud was entirely perpetrated in Calcutta. Then I should also add that execution proceedings are part of the same suit. Admittedly the decree in question was sought to be executed within the jurisdiction of the trial Court; and so it can be fairly said that the alleged fraud was continued to be perpetrated within the jurisdiction of the trial Court. In my opinion, therefore, the Court below had jurisdiction to try the suit under cl. (c) to sec. 20 of the Civil Procedure Code.

"I next proceed to consider the merits of the case. The allegation that the accounts had been adjusted was false. The Court trying the Small Cause Court suit in the Calcutta Small Cause Court was certainly misled by the aforesaid false story. Then despite the terms of the agreement the Defendant Company did not hesitate to make the claim against Defendant No. 1 over and above the liability he had agreed to bear. This fact, it is clear, was kept concealed from the notice of the Court which tried the Small Cause Court suit in question. All these are very broad facts and they tend to add to the conviction that the summonses were designedly suppressed. Reading sec. 16 of the Evidence Act and sec. 114 of that Act and bearing in mind that the 'registered covers' were returned as 'refused,'

I think it was the duty of the Defendant Company to shew that really the registered covers were tendered to the Defendants in the Small Cause Court suit. The Defendants in that suit—i.e., the Plaintiffs in this suit emphatically denied to have ever got such covers or that such covers were tendered to them. There is nothing to gainsay their denials—I should therefore declare that the alleged non-service was amply substantiated. . . . Taking into consideration all the above facts I cannot but declare that the claim of the Defendant Company before the Calcutta Small Cause Court was not only false but fraudulent. In my opinion the learned Munsif very justly decreed the suit. The appeal thus fails and is dismissed with costs."

Against this decision of the Subordinate Judge the Defendant Company preferred this second appeal.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitler (with him Babu Heramba Chandra Guha) for the Appellants—I submit the Sylhet Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit. The decree was obtained in Calcutta and the fraud, if any, was practised in Calcutta. The cause of action did not arise at Sylhet. Refers to Umrao Singh v Hardeo (1) and Dan Dayal v Munna Lal (2).

The cases of Kedar Nath v Prassanna Kumar (3), Bank Behary Lal v Pokhe Ram (4), Jawahir v Neki Ram (5) and Khushali Ram v Gokul Chand (6) are distinguishable. In those cases either the properties within the jurisdiction of the Court were attached or sold, or the judgment-debtor was arrested in execution, which gave rise to the cause of action. In this case no such proceedings in execution were taken.

Secondly, I submit that the lower Courts erred in law in holding that the decree was obtained by fraud. The Courts below were wrong in presuming that the summons was suppressed. The finding is based on no evidence. The summons was sent by registered post and the presumption is that it must have reached the addressee. Refers to Harihar Banerji v Ramsashi Roy (7).

The Courts below were wrong in going into the merits of the claim of the Defendant Company. A decree cannot be set aside on the ground that the suit on which the decree was obtained was a false suit and was decided on perjured evidence. Refers to the cases in Kedar Nath v. Hemanta Kumari (8), Nanda Kumar v. Ram Jiban (9), Mosuful Huq v Surendra Nath Ray (10), Lakhmi Charan v. Nur Ali (11), Nistarni v. Nanda Lal (12) and Pran Nath v. Mohesh Chandra (13).

Babu Paresh Lal Shome for the Respondents.—My submission is that the Sylhet Court had jurisdiction to try the suit. The decree complained of was transferred to the Sylhet Court for execution and the decree-holder applied for execution in that Court. In the suit brought at Sylhet there was a prayer for injunction, and as such that Court was competent to grant an injunction restraining the execution and in doing that it had power to determine the question whether the ex parte decree was obtained by fraud. I rely on the case of Kedar Nath v. Prassanna Kumar (3). The case of Banke Behary Lal v. Fokhe Ram (4) is in my favour. There is nothing to shew in that case that any property was attached in execution. The cases of Umrao Singh v. Hardeo (1), Dan Dayal v. Munna Lal (2), cited on the side of the Appellants are not applicable. In Umrao Singh v. Hardeo (1) there was no prayer for injunction, and in Dan Dayal v. Munna Lal (2) execution was not taken out. I submit that part at least of the fraud was committed within jurisdiction of the Sylhet Court, viz, the suppression of summons, and as such part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of that Court. Refers to Jawahir v. Neki Ram (5).

On the question of fraud the concurrent findings of the Courts below are that the registered covers were returned from the Post Office as "refused" and that the Defendant Company failed to prove that the registered covers were tendered to the Plaintiffs. So the presumption referred to in the case of Harihar Banerji v Ramsashi Roy (7) does not arise. I submit that the Courts below were right in holding that the decree was obtained by fraud. It was not a question of a decree obtained by perjured evidence, so the cases cited by the Appellant have no application. In the present case it has been found that the decree was obtained by practising fraud on the Court by suppressing material facts and the Plaintiffs were prevented from placing their case before the Court which was misled into making a decree. Refers to Manindra Nath Mittra v. Hari Mondal (14).

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Defendants who are the Appellants before us obtained a decree in the Small Cause Court, Calcutta, for Rs 1,200 odd on the 1st March 1916. The suit was decreed ex parte. After obtaining the decree, the Defendants got it transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sylhet within whose jurisdiction the present Plaintiffs resided and applied for execution of the decree against the Plaintiffs. The Plaintiffs thereupon instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sylhet for a declaration that the ex parte decree obtained by the Defendant in the Calcutta Small Cause Court was obtained by fraud, was void and not fit to be executed. They also applied for the issue of an injunction against the Defendant No. 1 restraining him from executing the said decree.

The Plaintiffs alleged that as a matter of fact no summons was served upon them in the suit brought in the Small Cause Court, that there was no adjustment of accounts although the suit was brought on the allegation that the accounts had been adjusted and that it was not brought to the notice of the Court that the Plaintiffs were sureties only for a limited sum. The case for the Plaintiffs was that the summons had been fraudulently suppressed, that the decree was obtained by practising fraud upon the Court, and that in these circumstances, the decree was not binding upon them.

The Defendants raised the objection that the Sylhet Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit as the cause of action did not arise in Sylhet, but in Calcutta where the decree complained of was obtained.

The Courts below overruled the objection. They found that the decree was fraudulently obtained and gave a decree to the Plaintiff.

Two contentions have been raised on behalf of the Defendants-Appellants. The first is that the Sylhet Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit.

The learned Pleader for the Respondents has contended that a part of the cause of action arose in the jurisdiction of the Sylhet Court inasmuch as the suppression of process by reason whereof the ex parte decree was obtained in Calcutta took place within the jurisdiction of Sylhet and that therefore it might be said that a part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of the Sylhet Court.

We do not think, however, that the cause of action arose in Sylhet by reason of suppression of processes in that Court, when the decree which gave rise to the cause of action was obtained in Calcutta. However that may be, we think that the Sylhet Court had jurisdiction to try the suit. As stated above, the Plaintiffs asked for a declaration that the decree was void and not fit to be executed, and also prayed for a permanent injunction restraining the Defendant from executing the decree.

The question whether a suit can be instituted in one District for setting aside a decree passed by a Court in another District has been the subject of many decisions and the decisions cannot be said to be uniform. The general principle which may be said to have been established by the cases, however, is that save under special circumstances, a suit to set aside a decree obtained by fraud in which no other relief whatever is claimed, cannot be maintained in any District outside the Dis-strict in which the fraud was committed and the fraudulent decree was obtained [see the case of Umrao Singh v. Hardeo (1)] and in the case of Dan Dayal v. Munna Lal (2) it was held that the addition of a prayer for injunction would not give such Court jurisdiction. A contrary view was taken in the case of Kedar Nath v. Prassanna Kumar (3). Where, however, the decree is obtained in one District and executed in another, it has been held in some cases that the Court in which execution is taken out is competent to try such a suit [see the cases of Banke Behary Lal v. Pokhe Ram (4) Jowahir v. Neki Ram (5) and Khushali Ram v. Gokul Chand (6)]. In these cases the property of the judgment-debtor was attached or he was arrested within the jurisdiction of the Court where the suit was instituted.

In this case it is true that no property of the Plaintiffs had been attached within the jurisdiction of the Sylhet Court, but the Defendant applied for execution of the decree and it was against the threatened execution that the suit was brought and an injunction was asked for. The Sylhet Court was entitled to issue an injunction and in order to grant that relief, it had the power to go into the question whether the ex parte decree was obtained by fraud in which case it would be inoperative. [See the case of Kedar Nath Mukerjee v. Prassanna Kumar Chatterjee (8)].

In these circumstances we are of opinion that the Sylhet Court had jurisdiction to entertain this suit.

The next question is whether the Court below was right in holding that the decree was obtained by fraud. A number of cases have been cited before us, but we think, having regard to the findings arrived at by the Court of appeal below, it must be held that the decree was obtained by fraud. The Judge has found that the summonses were designedly suppressed and that the real facts were suppressed from Court. Now if the present Plaintiffs who were the Defendants in the Small Cause Court suit were prevented by the contrivance of the Plaintiffs in that suit from placing their case before the Court and the Court was misled into making a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs in that suit, we think that the decree was a fraudulent one and that it is not a question of obtaining a decree by perjury.

We are accordingly of opinion that the decree of the lower Appellate Court is right and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

[APPEAL FROM MADRAS.]

LORD BUCKMASTER.	MEDAI DALAVOI
LORD ATKINSON.	THIRUMALAIY-

LORD CARSON.	Appellant,
SIR JOHN EDGE.	v.

Judgment, 31, May.	pondents.

Hindu law—Widow in possession of husband's estate as limited owner—Sale to pay off mortgage debt due by husband—Purchaser is bound to see to application of purchase money—Speculative purchase not necessarily sham—Widow is bound to sell property in bits—Valuation, proper mode of

A widow of a separated Mitakshara Hindu sold property belonging to her husband's estate in her possession as limited owner for Rs. 5,300 in order to pay off Rs. 4,588-2-2 due on two mortgages executed by her husband. The balance of Rs. 711-13-10 was appropriated by the widow to reimburse herself for expenses previously incurred at the marriage of a daughter of the husband's brother.

Held—That the sale was not invalid because a portion of the purchase money (Rs. 711-13-10) was spent on a purpose which did not constitute a legal necessity, as the purchasers were not bound to see how the widow applied the purchase money.

That the fact that the purchaser was able to realise a much larger sum by selling the property bit by bit to cultivating raiyats did not establish that the sale by the widow was necessarily improvident, as it was not reasonable to suggest that the widow should have gone about endeavouring to find persons who would purchase the property in small quantities.

That though the purchase by the widow's vendees was speculative, the sale was a genuine and not a sham sale.

The price at a private sale of a considerable extent of land purchased in lump would depend not so much on the valuation of its component parts, calculated on a regular scale, as on the need of the vendor for money and the competition for lands in that locality at the time of the sale.

This was an appeal from a decree, dated the 9th December 1914, of the High Court at Madras which reversed a decree, dated the 22nd April 1912, of the Subordinate Judge of Tinnevely.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment of the Board.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was instituted by a Hindu reversioner for a declaration that a sale deed executed by the 1st Defendant, a Hindu widow, was not binding on him beyond her life-time. The main contest between the parties was as to whether the sale was for legal necessity.

The Subordinate Judge made a decree granting the declaration asked for but that decree was reversed by the High Court.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and J. M. Parikh for the Appellant.—There was no legal necessity for discharging the marriage expenses and the sale could certainly not be made for this purpose. The purchasers have failed to discharge the onus that is on them of proving necessity.

Sham Sunder Lal v Achhan Kunwar (1) and Nazir Begam v. Raghunath Singh (2).

The price was inadequate. Sale by first widow was to a man of straw and is no criterion of the value. The High Court wrongly accept that sale and reject the Government valuation.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiff in the suit against a decree, dated the 4th December 1914, of the High Court at Madras, which reversed a decree, dated the 22nd April 1912, of the Subordinate Judge of Tinnevely and dismissed the suit. The parties to the suit are Hindus, and the suit is for a declaration to protect the interests of the Plaintiff as a reversioner in certain unmoveable property which was sold for Rs. 5,300 on the 22nd November 1897, by the Defendant No. 1 to the Defendants Nos. 3 and 4.

The Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are the widows of one Medai Dalavoi Shanmuga Kumaraswami Mudaliar (hereafter referred to as Shanmuga), who died childless in 1892. Shanmuga was a separated Hindu, and at the time of his death was possessed of a considerable estate, which was more or less encumbered. That estate included a one-third share in the village Aiyankulam. That village will be hereafter referred to as the Mouza. On the death of Shanmuga the Defendant Nos. 1 and 2 succeeded to his estate as Hindu widows. After the Defendant Nos. 1 and 2 had succeeded to the estate they divided the estate or part of it between them, and thereafter each of them enjoyed separately those parts of the estate which had fallen to her on the division. Part of the estate which was so divided was the one-third share in the Mouza, and thereupon each of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, as between themselves, was entitled to and enjoyed separately her moiety of that one-third share. That one-third share was subject to a mortgage which Shanmuga and a brother of his had granted on the 25th May 1879, on that mortgage the mortgagees had obtained a decree for sale on the 30th March 1897, if the amount due with interest thereon should not be paid on the 15th August 1897. There was also due, on the 22nd November 1897, the sum of Rs. 1,605-5-0, the first Defendant's agreed share of liabilities under a mortgage of the 6th November 1888, which Shanmuga had granted. The total amount due by the first Defendant under those two mortgages on the 22nd November 1897, was Rs. 4,588-2-2, and in order to provide for the discharge of those debts the Defendant No. 1 sold, on the 22nd November 1897 to the Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 her moiety of the one-third share in the Mouza for Rs. 5,300. The balance of Rs. 711-13-10 of the Rs. 5,300, it is alleged, on behalf of the Defendant No. 1, she appropriated to reimburse herself for expenses which had been incurred in connection with the marriage, three years before the sale, of a daughter of Shanmuga's brother. That is the sale which the Plaintiff alleges was invalid as against him as a reversioner.

The Plaintiff is a son of a separated uncle of Shanmuga, and he admittedly is the nearest surviving agnate of Shanmuga. The Plaintiff brought this suit on the 13th December 1909, to obtain a declaration that the sale of the 22nd November 1897, is void as against him as a reversioner. In his plaint he stated that his cause of action arose on the 22nd November 1897, he was of full age in 1897, but no explanation is given of the cause of the delay in bringing the suit. He is a co-sharer in the Mouza, and it appears to their Lordships that it would have been idle for the Plaintiff to have suggested, if he had given evidence in the suit, that he did not know of the sale at the time of the sale or very soon afterwards. The sale was effected by a registered deed. The other 94 Defendants are persons whose titles to parts of the lands in question depend on the validity of the sale of the 22nd November 1897.

In the plaint it is alleged.—

"VIII. The small debt owed by the said estate could have been discharged by Defendants Nos 1 and 2 from the surplus income of the said estate and from the outstandings due to it. But without doing so, Defendants Nos 1 and 2 have, with the evil intention of causing damage to the reversioner's right and fraudulently and against law and justice, been making separate alienations, by way of sale, mortgage, etc, of the properties forming their respective shares, having secretly received larger sums than those mentioned in the particulars of payment set forth in the several deeds, and have been causing damage to the Plaintiff's right

"IX. In like manner, the first Defendant, on 22nd November 1897, intentionally sold to Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 her half-share of the entire properties mentioned in the schedule hereof and situate within the jurisdiction of this Court, for the low price of Rs 5,300, of which a sum of Rs 4,588-2-2 was directed in the deed to be paid towards the debt incurred by the original owner and Rs 711-13-10 was received in cash, and she executed the sale deed and had it registered. The said properties are worth more than Rs 15,000. Further, the sale, made as it was by the first Defendant without the permission of the second Defendant, cannot be valid after the life-time of the first Defendant. According to Hindu law she is not entitled to make such a sale."

The case which the Plaintiff endeavoured to make out at the trial was that the price for which the Defendant No. 1 had in fact sold her half of the one-third share was Rs. 7,300, and that Rs. 2,000 of that price was secretly paid to her by the Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 as an inducement to her to sell her one-half of the one-third share to them.

The witnesses who were called on behalf of the Plaintiff in support of that case of fraud were not believed by the Subordinate Judge or by the High Court. Their evidence has not been relied upon in support of this appeal, and it may be taken that the charge of fraud had no foundation.

The Subordinate Judge who tried the suit, found as fact that Rs. 4,588-2-2 was employed in discharging debts of Shanmuga, and that to that extent there was a legal necessity for selling the moiety of the one-third share in the Mouza. With that, so far as it goes, the High Court and their Lordships agree. As to the sum of Rs. 711-13-10, the Subordinate Judge was not satisfied that the Defendant No. 1 was legally bound to pay the expenses of the marriage or that there was any necessity for raising money to the extent of Rs. 711-13-10 by selling the property. He overlooked the fact that the Rs. 711-13-10 merely represented the balance of the sale price of Rs. 5,300 and that it was not to raise that Rs. 711-13-10 that the property was sold. The High Court Judges were of opinion that it might be accepted that the Rs. 711-13-10 had been required for the marriage of Shanmuga's brother's daughter. From this conclusion their Lordships are not prepared to differ, and the sale would not have been invalid no matter what may have been the purpose to which the Defendant No. 1 applied that Rs. 711-13-10. The purchasers, Defendants Nos. 3 and 4, were not bound to see that the Defendant No. 1 applied it to any particular purpose.

The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the Defendant No. 1's moiety of the one-third share was, at the time of the sale, worth Rs. 12,100, and consequently that the Defendant No. 1 had sold it for less than half its value. He came to that conclusion partly from the fact that the Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 had resold the lands which represented the moiety of that one-third share for some Rs. 11,500. The Defendant No. 3 had been in the employment of Shanmuga and afterwards in the employment of the Defendant No. 1, at and before the date of the sale, and neither of the Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 had apparently any capital; they obviously purchased the moiety of the one-third share as a speculation, and they sold it bit by bit to the cultivating ryots, among whom it is reasonable to conclude that there was great competition to acquire lands suitable for cultivation. The Defendant No. 3, from his having been in the employment of Shanmuga and afterwards in that of the Defendant No. 1, must have known all the ryots who would be competing for the purchase in small quantities of land suitable for cultivation. It is not reasonable to suggest that the Defendant No. 1 should have gone about endeavouring to find persons who would purchase her moiety of the one-third share in small quantities; it was urgently necessary to satisfy the decree for sale which had been made. Although the Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 bought the moiety of the one-third share as a speculation, the sale was a genuine and not a sham sale.

The conclusion of the Subordinate Judge that Rs. 12,100 was the value of the moiety of the one-third share was no doubt, as the High Court pointed out, largely based on a valuation which was made in 1892 by a Revenue Inspector of the one-third share which had belonged to Shanmuga in his life-time. That valuation was made by the Revenue Inspector for the purpose of ascertaining the stamp duty payable on a deed which related to that one-third share. The valuation was not a valuation of a moiety of the one-third share, it was a valuation of the whole one-third share, which the Revenue Inspector valued at Rs. 24,200. As to that valuation the Subordinate Judge in his judgment said —

“I think that the valuation made by the Revenue Inspector in 1892 under Ex F [‘Copy of statement showing the estimated value of lands’] should be accepted as correct. According to this valuation the first Defendant's moiety was worth Rs. 12,100. This price would have been paid by a bona fide purchaser if the vendor—that is, the first Defendant—could confer on him an absolute title. A prudent man will not, perhaps, go in for a transaction of this kind, and a widow desiring to part with her husband's lands partly for paying her husband's debts and partly for her private purposes will not certainly get the best price for it.”

The “private purposes” to which the Subordinate Judge referred had reference to the balance of Rs. 711-13-10 of the sale price of Rs. 5,300. The Revenue Inspector in making that valuation was assisted by two local men, the village munsif and an assistant karman. The Revenue Inspector valued each field, wet and dry, and each tree separately, with a total result of Rs. 24,200. That Revenue Inspector was not called as a witness, and there is nothing to explain on what principle he valued, but the two local men who assisted him say that the valuation is correct. It appears, however, from their evidence that no one on behalf of the Defendant No. 1 was present when the valuation was being made, and that neither of the local men nor the Revenue Inspector asked the owners for any accounts showing income and expenditure for the purpose of valuing the lands. One of those local men, giving his evidence on the 12th April 1912, twenty years after the valuation was made, said in re-examination — "The land has become dear and there are many tenants competing. The Revenue Inspector verbally asked the ryots about the price of lands." The "price of lands." What price? The price which competing cultivating ryots would give for small portions of land adjoining or near to their holdings, or the price which the buyer of an area representing the one-third share of the Mouza would give? How would an ordinary ryot know anything about the price which a man would be likely to give for an area of land representing the one-third share of the Mouza?

Their Lordships agree with the learned Judges of the High Court that it would be easy to attach an exaggerated importance to that valuation as a piece of evidence in the case. As those learned Judges observe in their judgment, the price "at a private sale of a considerable extent of land purchased in lump would depend not so much on the valuation of its component parts, calculated on a regular scale, as on the need of the vendor for money and the competition for lands in that locality at the time of the sale." It would be interesting to know what the Revenue Inspector would have said had he been a witness in this suit and been cross-examined as to his knowledge, if any, of the prices paid for similar areas of similar lands in that district.

At the time of the sale the Defendant No. 1 was living with her father at Idakal. At the hearing of this appeal their Lordships were informed that the father of the Defendant No. 1 was a village munsif. Whether he was a village munsif or not, there is nothing to suggest that he was not a respectable man who would give impartial advice to his daughter, and it is proved that he arranged the sale. It is fair to assume that he arranged the sale for the best price which was in his opinion obtainable. As the Judges of the High Court point out, "No obvious motive is apparent for the first Defendant to wish to benefit the third and fourth Defendants, who are not related in any way to her." They also observe: "The fact that the vendor in this case was a widow would tend rather to low values (prices) being obtained owing to the risk of litigation which intending purchasers might apprehend." They also refer to some other transactions relating to lands, from which it might be inferred that the price obtained by the Defendant No. 1 for the sale of the 22nd November 1897, was under the circumstances a reasonable price; and they say. "The increased values (prices) obtained in recent years on the shares of both the widows appear to be commensurate with the natural rise in prices that has obtained generally in recent years in this Presidency." In conclusion, the learned Judges of the High Court stated: "We are of opinion that the Plaintiff failed to prove that the price realised under

MEDAI DALAVOI THIRUMALAIYAPPA MUDALIAR v NAINAR TEVAN.

Ex. A (the sale deed of the 22nd November 1897) was an improper price or that it indicated that the Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 were not bona fide purchasers."

The High Court by its decree dismissed the suit, and from that decree this appeal has been brought

At the hearing of this appeal it was, on behalf of the Plaintiff (Appellant), contended that Shanmuga was a wealthy man when he died and the Defendant No. 1 could have been under no necessity to sell the moiety of the one-third share, and that she, as his widow, should have paid the Rs. 4,588-2-2, out of the personal property which he left at his death and not by a sale of the immoveable property. As to that contention, the short answer is that there is no reliable evidence that at his death Shanmuga was a wealthy man or left personal property out of which his debts could have been paid; there are some vague statements of witnesses that he had been a wealthy man. He died on the 15th January 1892, and he had been borrowing money on a mortgage on the 25th May 1879, and further money on a hypothecation bond on the 6th November 1888, and he died leaving those debts unpaid, and it was to satisfy the debts secured by those mortgages that the Defendant No. 1 sold her moiety of the one-third share in the Mouza. In their Lordships' opinion there was necessity in law and in fact for the sale of the moiety of the one-third share. They are much impressed with the fact that it was on the advice of her father that the Defendant No. 1 accepted Rs. 5,300 as the price of her moiety of the one-third share, and with the fact that she had no apparent motive for benefiting, to her own loss, the Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 by selling to them her moiety of the one-third share at an under-value. It may be observed that the Plaintiff, who must have known all about the sale in 1897, did not bring his suit to challenge the validity of that sale until the 13th December 1909. The Plaintiff's contention relating to the Rs. 711-13-10 was again put forward in this appeal; their Lordships need not repeat what they have already said on that subject

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), secs. 36, 90 (1)—Examination of witnesses under sec. 36—Jurisdiction of High Court to summon witnesses residing outside Calcutta and more than 200 miles away—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 16, r. 19.

Under sec. 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, the Registrar in Insolvency ordered two persons to attend before him for their examination. On their application to set aside that order on the ground that the order should not have been made as they resided more than 200 miles from Calcutta:

Held—That the High Court has power under sec. 36 to summon before it persons who reside at a greater distance than 200 miles. Proper travelling and other expenses should, however, be paid and so far as possible the convenience of persons required to attend should be considered.

Re : DINARAM SOMANI.

This was an application to set aside an order, dated the 18th August 1922, by the Registrar in Insolvency, under sec. 36 of the Insolvency Act, for the examination of the above-named applicants made on the application of Sadiram Chandanmall, a creditor of Insolvency.

In certain Insolvency proceedings the Registrar in Insolvency ordered the applicants to attend before him to be examined regarding the insolvents, their dealings and properties and to produce some books of account and a mortgage executed by the insolvents in their favour. The applicants applied to the Court for exemption from attendance on two grounds: that the order should not have been made as the applicants reside more than 200 miles from Calcutta and that they were not paid travelling and boarding charges.

Mr. S N Banerjee, Counsel appeared for the Applicants.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

GREAVES, J.—This is an application by two persons to set aside an order for their examination under sec 36 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act made on the 18th August 1922. By the said order, which was made at the instance of a creditor who had proved his debt and in the presence of the Official Assignee, the applicants were ordered to attend before the Registrar in Insolvency on the 14th September 1922 to be examined regarding the insolvents, their dealings and properties and they were required to produce their books of account for the year 1920 and a mortgage executed by the insolvents in their favour on the 4th December 1920. The applicants in fact attended before the Registrar in pursuance of the order on the 14th September 1922, when the matter was adjourned until the 30th

November. The applicants thereupon returned to Darjeeling where they reside, and came down again to Calcutta on the 20th November, one of them was attacked by fever on the 23rd November and they both returned to Darjeeling on the 26th of that month. The application is based on two grounds, (1) that the order should not have been made as the applicants reside more than 200 miles from Calcutta, (2) on the ground that they were not paid travelling and boarding charges. The second ground has not been pressed. So far as the first ground is concerned the applicants rely on sec 90 (1) of the Insolvency Act and on Or. 16, r. 19 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Sec 90 (1) provides that in proceedings under the Act the Court shall have the like powers and follow the like procedure as it has and follows in the exercise of its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction with the proviso that nothing in the sub-section is in any way to limit the jurisdiction conferred on the Court under the Act. Or. 16, r 19 exempts a witness from personal attendance unless he resides within the local limits of the Court's Original Jurisdiction or within 200 miles with the limitation therein provided.

Sec. 36 (1) of the Insolvency Act provides that the Court may, on the application of the Official Assignee or of any creditor who has proved his debt, at any time after an order for adjudication has been made, summon before it the insolvent or any person known or suspected to have in his possession any property belonging to the insolvent or supposed to be indebted to the insolvent or any person whom the Court may deem capable of giving information respecting the insolvent, his dealings or property.

A perusal of the sub-section makes it clear that the person to be summoned does not, at any rate in all cases, fall within the category of an ordinary witness to whom the provisions of Or. 16 relate. It deals rather with the discovery and recovery of property than with the ordinary testimony which a witness can give, and the proviso to sec. 90 (1) of the Insolvency Act makes it clear that it was not intended to fetter the Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction under sec. 36 by any limitation imposed by the Code of Civil Procedure.

I think the contention of the applicants is not well founded and that the Court has power under sec. 36 to summon before it persons who reside at a greater distance than 200 miles. I need hardly add that proper travelling and other expenses should be tendered and that so far as possible the convenience of persons required to attend should be considered.

As the application fails the applicants must pay the costs.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES

Nos. 1655 AND 1747 OF 1920.

MOOKERJEE, J.	RAJA SATIPRASAD
CHOTZNER, J.	GARGA and anr.,
1922,	Plaintiffs, Appellants,

Judgment,	anr., Defendants,

Rent suit—Joint Mitakshara family—Suit for rent by managing member, without making infant co-parcener party, if maintainable—Party—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 188, not applicable to rent suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 1, rr. 1 and 8.

Where the Plaintiffs, who were two brothers governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu law, instituted a rent suit without joining their infant sons as parties thereto:

Held—That the Plaintiffs as managing members were competent to maintain the suit for the entire rent.

A suit for rent instituted by the managing members of a joint Mitakshara family will not necessarily fail, merely because the infant co-parceners have not been placed on the record as joint Plaintiffs or pro forma Defendants.

Sec. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application to the institution of a suit for rent, but the matter is to be determined with reference to the general principles of legal procedure.

The principles underlying the recognition of the representative character of the manager of a joint Mitakshara family discussed and case-law reviewed.

This was an appeal preferred on the 5th July 1920 from a decision of K. K. Sen, Esq., Additional District Judge, Midnapur, dated the 19th March 1920, modifying that of Babu Baroda Prasad Roy, Subordinate Judge, Midnapur, dated the 22nd December 1917.

The facts of the case are as follows:—

The Plaintiffs, who are two brothers governed by the Mitakshara law, sued the Defendant for arrears of rent. The suit was laid at a claim for Rs. 2,526 and odd for arrears of rent, cesses and damages for 2 annas 5 gds. kist of 1322 and for 1323 in respect of a tenure of 731 bighas and 3 kattas of land at an annual rental of Rs. 1,694-14 as. held by the Defendant under the Plaintiffs in Jalpai Mahal Taluk Touzi No. 2639 of the Midnapur Collectorate. The Plaintiffs own twelve and a half annas share in the zamindari and are putnidars under the proprietors of the remaining three and a half annas share, and consequently the Plaintiffs are the immediate landlords of the Defendant. The suit was instituted on the 12th December 1916 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Midnapur. Previous to the institution of the suit, a son was born to the Plaintiff No. 1 on the 16th November 1916, and after the institution of the suit a son was born to the Plaintiff No. 2 on the 15th April 1917.

The defence, inter alia, was that he did not hold one tenure as alleged, but held two tenures, one of 722 bighas and 3 kattas of land and another of 9 bighas of land. On the 28th February 1917 the Defendant filed an additional written statement contending that the suit could not proceed inasmuch as the minor son of the Plaintiff No. 1, born on the 16th November 1916, had not been joined as a co-Plaintiff. On the 20th December 1917 he filed a supplementary written statement objecting that the suit could not proceed as the minor son of the Plaintiff No. 2, born on the 15th April 1917, had not been joined as a co-Plaintiff. The Defendant further contended that the names of the minor sons not having been registered under the Land Registration Act, the suit was not maintainable by the Plaintiffs.

The learned Subordinate Judge of Midnapur who tried the suit held that the Plaintiffs were competent to maintain the suit without joining their minor sons as co-Plaintiffs, and decreed the suit. He, however, found that the Defendant held two tenures as alleged by him and not one, and as to the question of damages held as follows:—"As the suit cannot be taken as a rent suit because two tenures taken as one are subject-matters in the suit, I find that the Plaintiffs cannot be allowed damages under the Bengal Tenancy Act.

I shall allow interest at 12 per cent. per annum over the arrears due from the dates of default. . . . It is therefore ordered that the suit be decreed in part for Rs. 2,248-9-3 with costs in proportion."

In regard to the issue as to whether the Plaintiffs only could maintain the suit without joining their minor sons as co-Plaintiffs, the learned Subordinate Judge held as follows:—

"I therefore hold that the family of the Plaintiffs that is admittedly governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu law had three members instead of two at the time the suit was instituted. There can be no doubt that the Plaintiff No. 1's son became jointly interested in everything belonging to the Plaintiffs with his birth and I am unable to agree with the learned pleader for the Plaintiff in his contention that the Plaintiff No. 1's son is not a necessary party to this suit because when the cause of action for this suit arose he was not in existence. Under Or. 22, r 10 the son of the Plaintiff No. 2 might be made a co-Plaintiff with the Plaintiffs as being jointly interested in the arrears of rent with his birth. . . . According to the Mitakshara law the sons of the Plaintiffs appear to me to be jointly interested with their fathers in the property and the unrealised arrears of rent that fell due before their birth. But I think that the learned pleader for the Plaintiffs is right in contending that according to the circumstances of the present case the Plaintiffs may be taken as acting as managers on behalf of themselves and their minor sons, and that the suit should not be thrown out because the infants have not been brought on the record as co-Plaintiffs. I follow the principle laid down in the case of Krishna Jivan Tewari v. Bishnath (39) and the rulings quoted therein. This issue is also decided in Plaintiffs' favour and the suit is found to be maintainable at the instance of the Plaintiffs only."

(39) 1. L. R. 34 ALL 615 (1912).

On appeal by the Defendant, the learned Additional District Judge held that the Plaintiffs could not maintain the suit for the entire rent in the absence of their sons, but he decreed the claim in respect of twelve and a half annas share, inasmuch as the Plaintiffs had been registered under the Land Registration Act as proprietors in respect of that share. Both the Plaintiffs and the Defendant preferred second appeals (Nos. 1747 of 1920 and 1655 of 1920 respectively) against the decision of the learned Additional District Judge.

The following portion of the judgment of the learned Additional District Judge will be found material to this report:—

"Directly the son of the first Plaintiff was born, he was interested in every property including rents due to the family and this suit should have been brought by the two Plaintiffs and this son, and when a son was born to the second Plaintiff during the pendency of the suit, this son should have been joined as a co-Plaintiff under Or. 22, r. 10, C. P. C. This has not been done." The learned Judge, however, thought that the two Plaintiffs should be considered to have brought the action as managers on behalf of themselves and their sons as Plaintiffs. In this view I am unable to agree. They did not describe themselves as such in the plaint and there is nothing to shew that they sued on behalf of the sons also. The case of Krishna v. Bishnath (29) relied on by the learned Judge has not, to my mind, any application to the present suit. The case of Harhar Pershad v. Mathura Lal (37) appears to be clearly in point. There it was held that even the manager of a Mitakshara family could not sue for rents without joining the other members as parties. I hold that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to a decree for the entire rents and could not maintain the suit in the absence of the first Plaintiff's son at least.

"The learned pleader for the Respondents have tried to support the decree of the lower Court on the ground that the two Plaintiffs were the registered proprietors and under sec. 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, they could recover the entire rent. It appears, however, that the two Plaintiffs have claimed for rents partly as proprietors and partly as putnidars. The D Register shews that they are registered in respect of twelve and a half annas share of the estate. They are thus entitled to a decree for rent in respect of this share. The claim in respect of the rest (three and a half annas share) which is for a putni must be disallowed since there is nothing to shew what is the extent of the interest of the two Plaintiffs and what of their son therein. The appeal is allowed. The decree of the lower Court is modified to the extent as directed above."

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter (with him Babu Probodh Chandra Chatterji) for the Appellants in S. A. 1747 of 1920, and for the Respondents in S. A. No. 1655 of 1920.

S. A. No. 1747 of 1920.—The suit was for arrears of rent due to the Mahasada Raj. Two infant sons born to the Plaintiffs were not joined as parties to the suit. The question is whether the father in a joint Mitakshara family is competent to maintain the suit for rent on behalf of his infant son. I submit the suit is maintainable. The act is beneficial to the infant and the decree is binding on him. The manager of a joint Hindu family so effectively represents all other members of the family that the family as a whole is bound by his act.

Refers to Jogendra Deb v. Fanindra Deb (4) and Kishen Prasad v. Harnarain (5), where the suits were carried on in the name of the managing member alone.

A suit for arrears of rent is outside the scope of sec. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Pramada Nath Roy v. Ramani Kanta Ray (1).

The cases of Sati Prasad v. Radhanath (2) and Satiprasad v. Sanatan (3) are distinguishable as there was a statutory bar under sec. 188, Bengal Tenancy Act.

Refers to Krishna v. Bishnath (39).

The rent accrued due before the sons were born and so the suit would lie at the instance of the Plaintiffs.

At any rate, the Plaintiffs ought to be allowed to amend the plaint and add the infant sons as co-Plaintiffs.

S. A. No. 1655 of 1920.—The Plaintiffs are registered proprietors and under sec. 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, they are entitled to recover the entire rent. Refers to Nilmadhub Patra v. Ishan Chandra Saha (53) and Bhupendra Narain Dutt v. Manmotho Nath Mitter (54).

Babu Mahendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Gopendra Nath Das) for the Respondents in S. A. No. 1747 of 1920, and for the Appellants in S. A. No. 1655 of 1920.

S. A. No. 1747 of 1920.—I submit that in a suit for rent all the members of a Hindu Mitakshara family must join as Plaintiffs. The infant sons not having been joined as co-Plaintiffs, the present suit is not maintainable and must fail. It is not a question of evading payment of rent. The real question is whether the present suit is at all maintainable.

Refers to Mir Tapura Hossein v. Gopinarayan (35), Harihar Prasad v. Mathura Lal (37), Sati Prasad v. Radhanath (2) and Nepal Chandra Ghose v. Mahendra Nath Roy Chowdhry (55), S. C. Sen's Bengal Tenancy Act (4th Edn.) at p. 608, where the point is discussed.

The case of Bhola Ray v. Jung Bahadur (34) is distinguishable.

In the plaint, the Plaintiffs are not described as managers. Plaintiffs ought not to be allowed to amend the plaint because they persisted in not joining the infant sons even after the objection had been taken in the written statement. No amendment ought to be allowed at this stage; the claim is now barred by limitation.

The argument that rent accrued due before the birth of the sons has no substance, because the moment the sons were born they acquired an interest in the estate including the arrears.

S. A. No. 1655 of 1920.—Refers to sec. 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and sec. 78 of the Land Registration Act. The word "rent" in sec. 60, Bengal Tenancy Act refers to the whole rent and the suit must be instituted by all persons entitled to the whole rent. The suit as found by the first Court and not displaced by the lower Appellate Court is in respect of two tenures. So the decree not having the effect of a rent decree, sec. 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application. The Plaintiffs' claim is liable to be dismissed in its entirety.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, J —These two appeals are directed against the decree in a suit for arrears of rent. The Defendant holds a tenure in the zamindari mahal Tamruk situated in the District of Midnapur. The Plaintiffs, who are two brothers governed by the Mitakshara law, own twelve and a half annas share in the zamindari and are putnidars under the proprietors of the remaining three and a half annas share. The Plaintiffs are consequently the immediate landlords of the Defendant as a tenure-holder, and as such they instituted the present suit on the 12th December 1916, for recovery of arrears of rent due from him. On the 12th February 1917, the Defendant filed a written statement, setting forth various objections to the claim. On the 28th February 1917, he filed an additional written statement, contending that the suit could not proceed, inasmuch as the minor son of the first Plaintiff, born on the 16th November 1916, had not been joined as a co-Plaintiff. On the 20th December 1917, he filed a supplementary written statement, objecting that the suit could not proceed as the minor son of the second Plaintiff, born on the 15th April 1917, had not been joined as a co-Plaintiff. The trial Court held that the Plaintiffs were competent to maintain the suit without joining their minor sons as co-Plaintiffs, and, after dealing with the objections on the merits, decreed the claim in part. Upon appeal, the District Judge held that the Plaintiffs could not maintain the suit for the entire rent in the absence of their sons, but he decreed the claim in respect of 12 and a half annas share, inasmuch as the Plaintiffs had been registered under the Land Registration Act as proprietors in respect of that share. Both the parties were dissatisfied with this decree. The Plaintiffs have appealed (No. 1747 of 1920) on the ground that they were competent to maintain the claim for the entire rent as managers of a joint Mitakshara family, even though their minor sons were not brought on the record. The Defendant has appealed (No. 1655 of 1920) on the ground that sec. 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act had been misconstrued and misapplied by the District Judge and the claim should have been dismissed in its entirety. We shall consider first the appeal preferred by the Plaintiffs.

It may be observed at the outset that the Plaintiffs, who are members of a joint Mitakshara family, are joint landlords within the meaning of the sec. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which provides that where two or more persons are joint landlords, anything which the landlord is, under the Act, required or authorised to do, must be done, either by both or all those persons acting together, or by an agent authorised to act on behalf of both or all of them. This provision has no application to the institution of a suit for arrears of rent, which is not something that the landlord is required or authorised to do by the Bengal Tenancy Act; see Pramada Nath Ray v. Ramani Kanta Ray (1). This renders inapplicable the decisions in Sati Prasad v. Radhanath (2) and Satiprasad v. Sanatan (3) where, in cases instituted by the present Plaintiffs, it was ruled that sec. 188 governed a suit for alteration of rent on alteration of area under sec. 52 and a proceeding for settlement of fair and equitable rent under sec. 105. The case before us, which is not subject to the operation of sec. 188, must consequently be determined with reference to what Sir Arthur Wilson called, "the general principles of legal procedure," in Pramada v. Ramani (1).

The proposition that in suits relating to transactions affecting a joint Hindu family all the members thereof need not always be joined was fore-shadowed by Sir James Colville in Jogendra Deb v. Panindra Deb (4), when he observed that cases sometimes occur "wherein the interest of a joint and undivided family being in issue, one member of that family has prosecuted a suit or has defended a suit, and a decree has been made in that suit, which may afterwards be considered as binding upon all the members of the family, their interest being taken to have been sufficiently represented by the party in the original suit." This assumes that in respect of the subject-matter of the litigation, the members of the family had no conflicting interests inter se. This principle has been reiterated by the Judicial Committee in two recent decisions. In Kishen Prasad v. Harnarain (5), where the Judicial Committee reversed the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Shamrathi Singh v. Kishan Pershad (6), Lord Robson observed as follows:—

"The Indian decisions as to the powers of the managing members of an undivided Hindu joint family are somewhat conflicting. It is, however, clear that where a business like money-lending has to be carried on in the interests of the family as a whole, the managing members may properly be entrusted with the power of making contracts, giving receipts, and compromising or discharging claims ordinarily incidental to the business. Without a general power of that sort, it would be impossible for the business to be carried on at all."

Again, in Sheo Sankar v. Jaddo Kumar (7) where the Judicial Committee affirmed the decision of the Allahabad High Court, in Jaddo v. Sheo Sankar (8) Lord Moulton observed as follows:—

"There seems to be no doubt upon the Indian decisions, from which their Lordships see no reason to dissent, that there are occasions, including foreclosure suits, when the managers of a joint Hindu family so effectively represent all other members of the family that the family as a whole is bound. It is quite clear from the facts of this case and the findings of the Courts upon them that this is a case where this principle ought to be applied. There is not the slightest ground for suggesting that the managers of the joint family did not act in every way in the interest of the family itself."

These pronouncements by the Judicial Committee weaken the effect of the decisions in Bal Kissen v. Topeswar (9), Lala Suraj Prasad v. Golab Chand (10), Debi-prasad v. Dharamjit (11) and Biswanath Pershad v. Jugdip Narain (12) which had already been doubted by the Full Bench in Brijnandan v. Bidya Prasad (13), namely, that all the co-parceners are necessary parties to a suit on a mortgage of joint family property, so that if a decree is passed in such a suit without their being joined as parties the decree is not binding on them, and they are entitled to sue for declaration that their interests are not bound thereby. The opinion expressed by the Judicial Committee, namely, that where a suit is brought on a mortgage by or against a manager of a joint Hindu family in his representative capacity, the other members of the family are not necessary parties to the suit, which will consequently not fail by reason of their non-joinder, harmonises with the rule enforced in Allahabad in Horilal v. Munman (14), Madanlal v. Kissen Singh (15), in Madras in Sheikh Ibrahim Tharagan v. Rama Aiyar (16) and in Patna in Abdul v. Sibalal (17), Bajr Nath v. Dalip (18), Muhammad Sadik v. Khedan Lal (19), Girwar v. Mahbunnessa (20) and Raghunandan v. Parmeswar (21). In Bombay a similar result has been reached by a circuitous process, for although it has been held that all the co-parceners are necessary parties to a suit brought on a mortgage by or against the manager, the decree in a suit, not so constituted against all the members, but brought against the manager alone in his representative character, when executed, passes the interest of the other co-parceners also in the property, though the sale may be avoided by them on the ground that they were not liable for the debt contracted by the manager; see Ram Chandra Narain v. Shripatrao Dharamjit (22), Laxman Nilkant v. Vinayak Keshav (23), Chinnana v. Sada (24), Ram Krishna v. Vinayak Narain (25) and Madhu Sudan v. Bhau Atmaram (26). The true position is tersely put by Benson and Sundara Iyer, JJ., in Sheikh Ibrahim Tharagan v. Rama Aiyar (16).

"The ordinary rule no doubt is that all persons in whom the right to any relief exists should be joined as Plaintiffs. But this rule is not of universal application. The language of sec. 26 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, corresponding to Or. 1, r. 1, of the present Code, is 'that all persons may be joined in one suit as Plaintiffs in whom the right to any relief is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally, or in the alternative . . .' Sec. 30 of the Code of 1882, corresponding to Or. 1, r. 8, lays down the general rule of procedure where one or more persons wish to sue on behalf of or for the benefit of themselves and other persons having the same interest in a suit. But it cannot, in our opinion, be laid down that in no case has a person a right to sue on behalf of himself and others, where the procedure laid down in sec. 30 is either not applicable or has not been taken advantage of. There are several statutory exceptions to the rule, and there is no reason why there should not be other exceptions based not on any legislative provision but on the substantive law applicable to the parties. sad v. Harnarain (5), already referred to, shows that the case of the manager of a Hindu family is such an exception."

This view does not militate against the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Balwant Singh v. Rockwell Claney (27) and Ganesha Row v. Tulja Ram Row (28). In the first case, Sri John Edge held that a mortgage by the elder of two brothers was void as against the minor younger brother, even though the mortgage was for discharging the father's debts, inasmuch as the elder brother did not profess to represent the younger brother in the transaction, and acted on his assumed position as absolute owner. In the second case, Mr. Ameer Ali held that where a minor co-parcener has in fact been joined as a party to a litigation, represented by the manager as his guardian ad litem, leave of the Court in accordance with the statutory procedure is essential to the validity of a compromise by the manager on behalf of the minor, see Upendia Nath v. Shib kuman (29). On the other hand, the Judicial Committee held in Gulab Singh v. Raja Seth Gokuldas (30), that a manager would be acting within his powers and authority, if, in order to save the heavily encumbered joint family estate, he placed the same under the charge of the Court of Wards. It is, we think, fairly obvious that even if we assume, contrary to the opinion expressed in Daya Shan-lar v. Hub Lal (31), that the manager of a joint family cannot, as a universal rule, be deemed entitled to sue or liable to be sued on behalf of the family, Padmakar Vinayak Joshi v. Madhab Joshi (32) and Kashinath v. Chimnaji (33), the tendency of modern decisions, specially those of the Judicial Committee, is in favour of recognition of the representative character of the manager, though, no doubt, the question must be decided in each individual case or special class of cases, subject to the operation of relevant statutory provisions, if any, such as the one embodied in sec. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. An instructive example is afforded by the decision in Bhola Ray v. Jung Bahadur (34), where it was ruled that the Plaintiff, who alone had always collected rent as the head of the joint Mitakshara family, was himself competent to maintain the suit, even though he had an infant nephew. The addition of the infant as co-Plaintiff raised, in that case, a question of limitation, it was ruled, that this did not affect the right of the original Plaintiff to continue the suit and to recover the amount due. A stricter view had been previously adopted in Mu. Tapura Hossein v. Gopinarayana (35), where it was ruled that when rent is due to the members of a joint Hindu family, it is not open to the manager alone to maintain a suit for rent without joining the other members, either as Plaintiffs or as Defendants, except when the tenant has dealt with such managing member as sole landlord. In support of this view, reliance was placed, amongst other decisions, on Shamrathi v. Kishan Pershad (6), which as we have seen, has been overruled by the Judicial Committee on appeal; Kishen Prasad v. Harnarain

(5). See also Muhammad v. Khedan (19) and Romesh Chunder v. Bhuyan Bhaskar (36). The decision in Harihar Pershad v. Mathura Lal (37), also harmonises with the less stringent view, though in that case, as in Bhola Ray v. Jung Bahadur (34), the minor member had been placed on the record represented by the adult managing member as guardian ad litem. That, however, is, in most cases really a matter of form, though it has the appearance of substance. As explained in Sham Kuar v. Mahananda (38), a guardian cannot be appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, in respect of the property of a minor who is a member of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law and possessed of no separate estate. In such an event, if the minor is added as a party to the suit, the manager would represent himself and his minor co-parcener as his guardian ad litem. But precisely the same result is reached, if the manager be deemed to have instituted the suit or to have defended the claim in his representative character; and as pointed out in Krishna Jiva Tewari v. Bishnath Kakkar (39), where all the adult members of a joint Hindu family appear on the record as Plaintiffs or Defendants, it is a legitimate presumption that they are acting as managers on behalf of themselves and of the minor members of the family who do not join in the suit; Horilal v. Munman (14), Nathu Lal v. Lala (39a) and Sheo Dulari v. Brij Bhukan (40).

It is well-established that the manager of a joint Hindu family has power to acknowledge a debt and pay interests thereon so as to bind all the members including minors; Saroda Prashad v. Durgaram (41) and Chidambaran v. Ramaswami (42); and he may give a discharge under sec. 7 of the Indian Limitation Act. Banwari Lal v. Daya Shankar (43). It is competent to him to agree to a reference to arbitration on behalf of himself and his minor co-parceners; Harendra v. Salimullah (44) and Uppara v. Gaddam (45). He is equally competent to enter into a compromise, beneficial to his minor co-parceners, with a view to put an end to a threatened litigation; Bai Rewa v. Jetthabhai (46). A decree obtained against him in a suit, to which the other members are not parties, may be operative against the latter under certain circumstances, provided the matter was one in which the manager sued was entitled to represent the whole family; Amrita Sundari v. Serajuddin (47), Balki v. Brojobashi (48) and Jijamba v. Sagniram (49). It is equally well-settled that in a joint Hindu family all the members need not join in granting leases; the manager can grant leases and sue for rents on behalf of the family, Ayyappa v. Venkata (50) and Parthasarathi v. Ranga- swami (51); he can also recognise the transferee of a non-transferable holding, Golapdi Meah v. Purna (52).

In these circumstances, we are not prepared to hold that a suit for rent instituted by the managing members of a joint Mitakshara family must of necessity fail, merely because the infant coparceners have not been placed on the record as joint Plaintiffs or pro forma Defendants. In the case before us, there is manifestly no substance in the objection taken piece-meal by the Defendant. He held the tenure under the Plaintiffs and had always paid rent to them; and it cannot be maintained with any show of reason that he would have secured immunity from a possible claim by the infants if they had been brought on the record and represented by their respective father as guardian ad litem.

The result is that the appeal by the Plaintiffs is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and the decree of the Subordinate Judge restored with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court. The appeal by the Defendant must as a corollary stand dismissed with costs.

Judgment, 20, July. Respondents.

Abatement of rent—Ouster by title paramount—Diara proceeding.

(51) [1916] 4 Mad. L. W. 654.

(52) 21 C. W. N. 774 (1917).

Where a portion of the lands comprised in a tenure was wrongly resumed by the Government in a diara proceeding and formed into a separate estate, and the Government settled it with the tenure-holder and realised rent from him in respect of the same, and the landlord did not object to the resumption proceedings and accepted malikana.

Held, in a suit for rent of the tenure by the landlord against the tenure-holder, that the act of the Government was an ouster of the Defendant from a portion of his tenancy under the Plaintiff by a title paramount, and such title having been admitted by the landlord, the tenant was entitled to an abatement of rent in respect of the tenure to the extent of the amount payable by him to the Government.

This was an appeal preferred on the 24th June 1920, against the decree of Mr. Iradutullah, Additional District Judge of Zillah Fardpur, dated the 27th of March 1920, modifying the decree of Babu Nalini Kanta Bose, Officiating Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of that District, dated the 5th of May 1919.

The facts of the case, material to this report are as follows:—

The Plaintiffs in zemindari and putni right sued the Defendant for recovery of arrears of rent due from 1320 to Aswin Kist of 1323 B. S. in respect of a kaimi jama at an annual rent of Rs. 583-10-2½ p., with cesses and damages, total claim being laid at Rs. 2,776-8-10½ p. The defence, inter alia, was that 30'65 acres of land of Moujas Barankula and Gangnandapur comprised in the Defendant's tenancy under the Plaintiffs were wrongly resumed in 1912 by the Government in a diara proceeding, and the Government caused a new separate taluq to be recorded in the name of the Plaintiffs and a new garmakurari jote from the year 1912 to 1923 to be recorded at an annual rent of Rs. 80 in the name of the Defendant, and since then the Government had been realising the said rent from the Defendant by issuing certificates under the Public Demands Recovery Act, and the Defendant being obliged to pay the said rent had been paying the same under protest, and that in the circumstances there ought to be suspension of rent until the diara proceedings were set aside by the Plaintiffs, and that the Plaintiffs must apply for apportionment even if it be found that the diara proceedings were legal, and that in any view of the case the Defendant was entitled to a deduction of rent.

The learned Subordinate Judge of Faridpur who tried the suit allowed the Defendant abatement of rent to the extent of Rs. 80 for which the Defendant had been made liable to the Government, and so gave a decree to the Plaintiffs for Rs. 1,932 and odd.

The following extracts from the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge will be found material —

“I have found that the lands resumed by Government in diara proceedings are re formations in situ and not accretions to Defendant's jote. It has been contended on Defendant's side that the Plaintiffs gave their consent to the resumption proceedings and actually procured the assessment of these lands with the ulterior motive of getting malikana from the Government as the Plaintiffs had otherwise no chance of getting additional rent for the lands from any body. Ex. G4 copy of the diara proceedings will go to shew that the Plaintiffs did not object to diara presumption proceedings. It is not clear from the proceedings that the Plaintiffs gave their actual consent to these resumptions. . . . It, however, appears that notices were served upon the proprietors

(Plaintiffs). The Plaintiffs did not raise any objection to resumption proceedings although notices were served upon them. Government proposed to grant settlement of the diara lands to the Plaintiffs. They did not appear to take settlement and so Government kept them under khas management and allowed malikana to Plaintiffs. . . . There is nothing to shew that the Government started the resumption proceedings at the instance of the Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs no doubt could object to the resumption proceedings at the time, but they did not object and as a result thereof are getting malikana from the Government. A separate taluq has been created by the Government regarding these diara lands and there is evidence to shew that the Government is realising Rs. 80 per annum as rent from the Defendant. Defendant is now deprived of his right to enjoy the diara lands as part and parcel of his original kaimi jote. These diara lands have been carved out of Defendant's jote. The Defendant paid the dues under protest to Government when certificate was executed under the Public Demands Recovery Act. It has been argued that Defendant could take steps for setting aside diara. There is no doubt that he was entitled to institute a suit for setting it aside. But it will be seen that Plaintiffs as proprietors ought to have objected to diara proceedings and that the Plaintiffs have been benefited by the diara resumption for the present to a certain extent while the Defendant has suffered loss to the extent of Rs. 80 per annum. Here the eviction was by a superior landlord. Considering all the circumstances of the case and the evidence I am convinced that no case for suspension of rent has been made out. But I think it will be equitable under the circumstances to allow the Defendant the abatement of rent to the extent of Rs. 80 per annum and of cesses to the extent of Rs. 2 as, 8 per annum as the Defendant has been made liable for such amount to Government. The circumstances disclosed in this case do not call for an apportionment of rent on any other principle. Accordingly ordered that the suit be decreed for Rs. 1,932-7 as. 10 $\frac{3}{4}$ p. with damages at 25 per cent. with proportionate costs."

On appeal by the Plaintiffs, the learned Additional District Judge of Faridpur disallowed the Defendant's claim for abatement of rent and decreed the Plaintiff's suit for Rs. 2,758 and odd, and directed the Plaintiffs to refund the amount received by them as mahkana to the Defendant.

The following portion of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is material to this report —

"The bed of a Barasia at the time of the revenue survey was undoubtedly permanently settled land and included in the Defendant's jote. The lands which have been resumed are the dried up bed of the river Barasia as it existed at the time of the revenue survey. I hold that the bed of the river at the time of the revenue survey was permanently settled land and that it was included in the jote of the Defendant. From this finding it follows that 30'65 acres of land were wrongly resumed by Government in a proceeding in 1912 and assessed with rent at a jama of Rs. 80. I do not think that the Plaintiffs had any hand in the diara proceeding. The Plaintiffs are absentee landlords and took no part in the proceeding. Both the Plaintiffs and the Defendant seem to have been under the impression at the time of the diara proceeding that there was nothing wrong with it. The result is that both the Plaintiffs and the Defendant are losers. The Plaintiffs have become owners of the lands resumed in the diara proceeding not by choice but by virtue of a statute. The Defendant knew the lands better than the Plaintiffs and it was his duty to maintain the right and the possession of his landlord in the lands included in his jote from the encroachment of persons who have no better right than his landlords. The diara proceeding was unlawful and it is the Defendant's duty to bring a suit to have it set aside. In this matter I think the Defendant is more to blame than the Plaintiffs and he should bear the consequences of his own folly, so far as the Plaintiffs have not reaped any benefit by it. The Plaintiffs have not taken settlement of the diara lands. It appears that the Plaintiffs got only 5 per cent. of the rent assessed upon the diara land and the remaining amount has been fixed as Government revenue. Out of the jama of Rs. 80 fixed upon the Defendant in respect of 30'65 acres, the Plaintiffs only got Rs. 4 and the remaining amount is taken by the Government as revenue. The Plaintiffs, in my opinion, are only liable to refund Rs. 4 a year, besides cesses of 2 as., and not the sum of Rs. 82-8 which the Defendant paid to Government. For the remaining amount the Defendant may sue the Government. I hold that the Defendant is entitled to deduction of Rs. 14-7 as. from the rent and cesses claimed. The lower Court's decree is modified and the suit is decreed in part for Rs. 2,758-8-1 $\frac{1}{2}$ pies."

Against this decision of the Additional District Judge the Defendant preferred this second appeal.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen (with him Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen) for the Appellant.—Upon the facts found, I submit, the Defendant can claim a suspension of rent till the Plaintiffs set aside the diara proceeding and restore the wrongly resumed lands to the Defendant. But the Defendant did not appeal to the Court of Appeal below against the decision of the Munsif disallowing the claim for suspension.

At any rate, I submit, the decision of the lower Appellate Court is wrong and the decree of the Munsif allowing abatement of rent ought to be upheld. The facts found do amount to an ouster of the Defendant from a portion of his tenancy by a title paramount and as such the Defendant is entitled to an abatement of rent to the extent of the amount which is realised from him by the Government. Plaintiffs admitted the paramount title of the Government to the lands resumed, and so the eviction of the Defendant by the Government was by a title paramount.

Babu Shib Chandra Palit (with him Babu Manilal Bhattacharya) for the Respondents, and Babu Upendra Narain Bagchi for the added Respondent.—The Defendant is not entitled to an abatement of rent. It was for him to contest the action of the Government while the diara proceedings were taken. He was in possession and was cognizant of the fact that the lands resumed formed part of his jote. Plaintiffs are absentee landlords.

The facts found do not amount to an ouster of the Defendant from the lands in question by a title paramount. The act of the Government was an act of trespass only as against the tenant. Plaintiffs were not bound to protect the Defendant from unlawful eviction by the Government as a trespasser.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

B. B. GHOSE, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent with regard to a kaimi jama held by the Defendant under the Plaintiffs. The objection of the Defendant which is now material to mention is that the landlords are not entitled to the full rent claimed which is reserved under the lease but that he (Defendant) is entitled to an abatement to the extent of Rs. 80 which amount the Defendant has to pay to the Government under the following circumstances :—There was a river within the estate called Barasia river on the bed of which lands formed. The Government instituted diara proceedings with reference to the lands formed on the bed of the river. It has been found by the trial Court and that finding has not been displaced on appeal, that the Plaintiffs had notice of the proceedings commenced by the Government. As a result of those proceedings, the Government constituted the lands so formed into a separate estate and offered settlement to the Plaintiffs. The Plaintiffs did not accept settlement and it is found by both Courts that the Plaintiffs did not take any step to resist the proceedings taken by Government with regard to the creation of a separate estate of the lands in question. As the Plaintiffs did not take settlement of this estate, the Government settled the lands with the Defendant temporarily and paid malikanas to the Plaintiffs which the Plaintiffs have been accepting without any protest. Upon that, it was found by the trial Court that the Plaintiffs had acquiesced in the possession taken by the Government of the lands so formed on the ground that they were newly formed lands and had been accepting such benefit as they were entitled to under the law, that is, by accepting a malikana from Government. It is, however, found now in this case that the action of the Government in taking proceedings with regard to these lands was wrong as the lands were included within the permanently settled estate of the Plaintiffs and also within the kaimi jama of the Defendant. On the finding, however, that the Plaintiffs had acquiesced in the act of the Government which amounted to a dispossession not only of the tenant but also of the Plaintiffs as landlords with the result that the Defendant had to pay rent of Rs 80 to the Government for these lands as being included within the separate diara estate, that Court held that the Defendant was entitled to an abatement of rent to that extent. On appeal by the Plaintiffs to the District Judge, the learned Judge has varied the decree of the trial Court and allowed the Plaintiffs a decree for rent for the full amount claimed minus the amount of malikana that the Plaintiffs have been receiving from the Government. The Judge was of opinion that it was for the Defendant to contest the action of the Government while the diara proceedings were taken, because, as he said, the Defendant was in possession of the lands and was cognizant of all the facts. The Defendant has appealed to this Court and he contends that the proceedings under which he has been compelled to pay the sum of Rs 80 per year as rent to the Government for occupying these lands amount to an ouster by a title paramount from a portion of the tenancy and that he is entitled to proportional abatement of rent payable to the Plaintiffs. The original Plaintiffs have parted with their interest in the zamindari during the pendency of this appeal and the assignee has on his own application been added as a Respondent to this appeal. The contention on behalf of the added Respondent is that the act of the Government was a mere trespass and, as the landlord is not bound to protect the tenant from unlawful eviction by a trespasser, the Defendant is not entitled to any abatement of rent as against him. As a matter of fact, it has been found by the learned Judge that at the time when the Government took action under the diara proceedings, all parties were under the impression that there was nothing wrong in it. The action of the Government cannot be construed as an act of trespass against the tenant Defendant alone, but they claimed title as against the landlords also, and notice was given to the landlords of the action that they were going to take. The landlords acquiesced in the act of the Government in taking possession of these lands as diara and in the formation of these lands into a separate estate of which the Plaintiffs were recorded as owners without any protest or, in other words, the Plaintiffs admitted the paramount title of the Government which they claimed to these lands. The tenant could not have been expected to be aware of the title of the landlords. If the act had merely been an act of trespass as against the tenant's interest, the Plaintiffs' contention would have been sound. But, under the circumstances of this case, when the Plaintiffs themselves had in a manner admitted the superior title of the Government to take possession of the lands by proceedings taken under the law, the Plaintiffs cannot now turn round and say that it was a mere act of trespass on the part of the Government to dispossess the tenant from his tenure and that the tenant is entitled to no relief. In substance, therefore, it is an ouster of the tenant from a portion of the tenancy under the Plaintiffs by a title paramount and the Defendant is, therefore, entitled to an abatement of rent in proportion. The decree, therefore, of the learned District Judge is set aside and that of the Munsif restored with proportionate costs in that Court as allowed by that Court. The De-

MUKHERJEE, Plaintiff,

Respondent.

The Public Demands Recovery Act (III, B. C., of 1913)—Sale held in 1907 for imaginary arrears of revenue, if a nullity—Suit to set aside such sale, if barred by sec. 36.

When the revenue authorities on the 2nd September 1907 proceeded to sell a property for an imaginary arrear, there was usurpation of jurisdiction on their part and the sale was a nullity. Thereupon a right accrued to the Plaintiff under the law as it then stood to institute a suit to recover the property within 12 years from the date of dispossession; and this right cannot be affected by the retrospective operation of sec. 36 of the Public Demands Recovery Act of 1913.

BALKISSEN v. SIMPSON (1) and COLONIAL SUGAR REFINING CO. v. IRVING (8) referred to.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Lal Behari Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zillah Hooghly, dated the 15th of March 1920, confirming the decree of Maulvi Lutfur Rahaman, Munsif, 3rd Court, Seerampur, dated the 13th of January 1919.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an appeal by the third Defendant in a suit for recovery of possession of land upon establishment of title. The Plaintiff alleged that the disputed property had been sold on the 2nd September 1907 under the Public Demands Recovery Act although there were no arrears due in respect of the land. He consequently prayed for recovery of possession from the representatives in interest of the purchaser at the sale. The Courts below have decreed the suit. That decree has been assailed before us on the ground that the suit was barred under sec. 36 of the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1913. This argument is based on the assumption that the right of the Plaintiff to institute the present suit is regulated by the provisions of a statute which was not in existence when his property was brought to sale. There can be no question that this contention cannot be supported on principle, and, as we shall presently see, is opposed to well-known authorities.

The sale was unquestionably held without jurisdiction. This was explained by the Judicial Committee in the case of Balkissen v. Simpson (1), where a sale had been held under the Revenue Sale Law in respect of an estate which was not in arrears. Lord Watson pointed out that the sale by the revenue authorities was without jurisdiction and that it was consequently not necessary for the proprietor to take recourse to the procedure prescribed in Revenue Sale Law as essential preliminary to the institution of a regular suit for cancellation of sale held under that statute. This view had been previously formulated by this Court in Baynath Sahu v. Lala Sital Prosad (2) and Harkoo Singh v. Banshidhar Singh (3) and was subsequently confirmed by the Judicial Committee in Mahmad Jan v. Ganga Bishun (4) and Mutasaddi Mian v. Mahomed Idris (5). The position, consequently, is that when the revenue authorities on the 2nd September 1907, proceeded to sell the disputed property for an imaginary arrear there was usurpation of jurisdiction on their part and the sale was a nullity, see Janakdhari Lal v. Gossain Lal (6). Thereupon a right accrued to the Plaintiff, under the law as it then stood to institute a suit to recover the property within 12 years from the date of dispossession. This is clear from the decision of this Court in Nandan Misser v. Lala Harakh Narain (7). It is difficult to conceive that a right of this description could be affected by the retrospective operation of a subsequent statute. It is sufficient for our present purpose to refer to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Colonial Sugar Refining Co v. Irving (8), which has been repeatedly applied in this Court. There is nothing in the judgment of this Court in Munjhoori Bibi v. Akel Muhamed (9), which militates against this view nor is the Appellant entitled to invoke the assistance of the decision in Nagendra Nath v. Parbati Charan (10). He is no doubt a purchaser from the purchaser at the sale held under the Public Demands Recovery Act. But that sale was a nullity and when the root of the title set up by the Appellant has been completely destroyed, we cannot imagine how he can present an effective bar to the claim of the rightful owner. We are consequently of opinion that the suit has been rightly entertained.

The result is that the decree made by the lower Appellate Court must be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with cost.

Defendant, Respondent.

Unsuccessful application for sanction to prosecute, if can be the basis of an action for damages for malicious prosecution—Points to be considered in deciding preliminary issues of cause of action and maintainability of the suit—'Prosecution,' what it means in such cases.

In a certain title suit the Defendant impugned the genuineness of a copy of a Will filed by the Plaintiff and applied for sanction to prosecute the Plaintiff. After a good deal of litigation an order of sanction, passed by the District Judge on appeal, was set aside by the High Court in revision. The Plaintiff thereafter sued the Defendant in damages for malicious prosecution, but the lower Courts dismissed the suit on preliminary issues of cause of action and maintainability of suit:

NARENDRA NATH DEY v. JYOTISH CH. PAL.

Held—That the lower Courts were wrong in considering the question of reasonable or probable cause at that stage of the case. That issue cannot be decided until after the Plaintiff has adduced evidence in support of the allegations in his plaint. The only question to be decided was the purely legal question whether the application for sanction to prosecute can prove the basis of an action for damages for malicious prosecution.

The maintainability of a suit for malicious prosecution does not depend on there having been a prosecution in the sense in which the term is used in the Code of Criminal Procedure. The application for sanction was a preliminary or initial stage in a criminal prosecution and it is immaterial that this was done in a Civil and not a Criminal Court. The Plaintiff therefore had a cause of action and should be given an opportunity to prove his case.

CROWDY v. REILLY* (1), DE ROZARIO v. GOLAB (HAND) (2), GOLAP JAN v. ISHOL-NATH (3) and BISHUN v. PHULMAN SINGH (4) referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 20th December 1919 against a decree of the Subordinate Judge of 24-Pergannahs (Babu Paresh Nath Ray Chowdhury), dated the 15th September 1919, affirming a decree of the Munsif at Barasat (Babu Kurnud Kanta Sen), dated the 27th August 1918.

The facts of the case are as follows :—The Appellant brought a title suit against the Respondent. The Respondent alleged that there were interpolations in the copy of the Will filed by the Appellant and applied to the Munsif who tried the title suit for sanction under sec. 195, Cr. P. C., to prosecute the Appellant. There was a good deal of litigation in connection with this application and finally an order for sanction which had been passed by the District Judge on appeal was set aside by the High Court in revision. Thereupon the Appellant brought the suit out of which the present appeal arose claiming damages for malicious prosecution and also for pain of body and mind and injury to his reputation. The lower Courts dismissed the suit on findings against the Appellant on preliminary issues as to his cause of action and the maintainability of the suit. Hence the Appellant preferred the present second appeal to the High Court.

Babus Sharat Ch. Roy Choudhury and Satya Charan Sinha for the Appellant.

Babu Amarendra Nath Bose (for Babus Manmohan Nath Mukherjee and Nagendra Nath Bhattacharjee) for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

NEWBOLD, J.—The Plaintiff who is the Appellant before us instituted a suit against the Defendant-Respondent to recover damages for malicious prosecution. Both the lower Courts have dismissed the suits on findings against the Plaintiff on preliminary issues as to his cause of action and the maintainability of the suit.

The main facts of the case as they appear from the pleadings of the parties are as follows : The Appellant brought a title suit against the Respondent and another person and in that suit he filed Letters of Administration with copy of the Will annexed. The Respondent alleged that there were interpolations in the copy of the Will and applied to the Munsif who tried the title suit for sanction under sec. 195, NARENDRA NATH DRY v. JYOTISH CH. PAL.

Cr. P. C., to prosecute the Plaintiff under various sections of the Indian Penal Code. There was a good deal of litigation in connection with this application and finally an order of sanction which had been passed by the District Judge on appeal was set aside by this Court in revision. After this order was passed, the Appellant brought the suit out of which this appeal arises claiming Rs. 494-8-0 damages for his expenses in the litigation arising out of the application for sanction to prosecute and also for pain of body and mind and injury to his reputation.

Both the lower Courts have fallen into error in considering the question of reasonable or probable cause at this stage of the case. That issue cannot be decided until after the Plaintiff has adduced evidence in support of the allegations in his plaint. The only question now to be decided is the purely legal question whether the application to the Munsif for sanction to prosecute the Appellant can prove the basis of an action for damages for malicious prosecution. As was pointed out in Crowdy v. Reilly (1) the maintainability of a suit for malicious prosecution does not depend on there having been a prosecution in the sense in which the term is used in the Code of Criminal Procedure. The application for sanction was a preliminary or initial stage in a criminal prosecution and it is immaterial that this was done, as the law required, in a Civil and not in a Criminal Court. On behalf of the Respondent reliance is placed on the decisions of this Court in the cases of De Rozario v. Golab Chand (2) and Golap Jan v. Bholanath (3). Both those cases have been distinguished and discussed in Bishun

Prasad v. Phulman Singh (4) and they are distinguishable from the present case on the ground that in them no process issued on the Plaintiff. We hold that in the present case the allegations in the plaint that the Defendant maliciously and without just, reasonable or probable cause instituted proceedings for sanction and that the Plaintiff was obliged to defend the cases are sufficient to disclose a cause of action and consequently the Plaintiff's case should not have been dismissed without giving him an opportunity to prove these allegations.

We accordingly decree this appeal. The decrees of the lower Courts are set aside and the case is remanded to the Munsif at Barasat Second Court for trial on the merits. The Plaintiff-Appellant will get his costs in this Court. He will also have hearing fees in the Courts below which we assess at three gold mohurs. Under sec. 13 of the Court Fees Act we direct that the amount of Court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal presented to this Court be returned to the Appellant.

TEUNON, J.—I agree.

the Legislature in making this provision about the examination of the accused.

In a case under sec. 500, I. P. C., the accused were called upon to plead on the 14th March 1922 and at that time they stated that they pleaded not guilty and also that they would both file written statements. The examination, cross-examination and re-examination of the prosecution witnesses were completed on the 12th April 1922 on which date the case was adjourned until the 25th for the purpose of the accused entering on their defence. On the 12th or the 25th no further examination of the accused took place :

Held—That there was no compliance with the provisions of sec. 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The duty of the Magistrate under sec. 342 arises when the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined, cross-examined and re-examined. The promise to file written statements made at the time of the plea in no way exonerated or exempted the Court from examining the accused at a later stage as required by sec. 342.

In this country it often happens that a prisoner is tried in a language which for one reason or another he understands but indifferently well and for that reason as well as for other equally grave reasons the intention of the statute is that at a certain stage in the case the Court itself shall put aside all counsel, all pleaders, all witnesses, all representatives, and shall call upon an individual accused with the authority of the Court's own voice to take advantage of the opportunity which then arises to state in his own way anything which he may be desirous of stating. It is important also to have regard to the time at which this examination should take place. To ask an accused for his defence before he has the whole of the prosecution evidence in front of him, is not a compliance with the section. And to ask the accused not at the beginning of his defence but later on when his statements may be subject to heavy discount owing to the evidence given in his hearing by his own witnesses in the meantime, is not to be assumed to be a substantial compliance with the requirements of the section.

In this country an accused is not allowed to give evidence on his own behalf and in view of this sec. 342 is of cardinal importance. There is all the difference in the world between a written statement presumably prepared, almost certainly revised, by the lawyers appearing for the defence and a statement made by the accused himself so that the Magistrate can observe his demeanour and his manner while he makes it and come to his conclusions as to the value of his evidence.

The trial became illegal from the moment when, without compliance with sec. 342, the Magistrate called upon the accused to enter on their defence.

These were an Appeal and a Rule against the conviction and order of Mr. A. Z. Khan, the Third Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta.

The cases were first heard before a Bench composed of Newbould and Suhrawardy, JJ., who having differed in opinion, they were referred to Rankin, J., for disposal.

The facts will fully appear from the judgments.

The dissentient judgments of Newbould and Suhrawardy, JJ., were as follows :—

NEWBOULD, J.—Promottha Nath Mukhopadhyaya and Ramendra Nath Ghose have both been convicted of defamation punishable under sec. 500, I. P. C., by the Third Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta. The former has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 500 or in default of payment to undergo three months' simple imprisonment and has appealed to this Court. On the latter a non-appealable sentence of Rs. 50 fine with one month's simple imprisonment in default has been passed and he has obtained a Rule against the conviction and sentence and this Rule has been heard with the appeal.

The complainant in this case is Mr. F. W. Kidd, Deputy Commissioner of Police, South District, Calcutta. Promotha Nath Mukhopadhyaya is the Editor and Ramendra Nath Ghose, the Printer and Publisher of a daily newspaper called the Serrant. The charges framed and found to have been established against the accused relate to certain allegations against the complainant published in the issues of this paper, dated 20th and 23rd January 1922. Two charges were framed in which were set out the statements in each issue said to be defamatory. Those set out in the first charge were (a) "That a lady of 40 named Sm. Hem Nalini Ghose was severely assaulted from behind by a European Officer reported to be Mr. Kidd," (b) "That gentlemen present report that Mr. Kidd dealt the deadly assault on the lady." Those set out in the second charge were (a) "He (Mr. Kidd) hit her (Hem Nalini) on the top of the head from behind," (b) "Kidd went up to her (Hem Nalini) and struck her (Hem Nalini) on the head from behind," (c) "Mr. Kidd hit a woman on the head."

That these statements are on the face of them defamatory cannot be disputed. Nor do the accused deny their responsibility for the publication of these statements. On behalf of the second accused the point was taken that as printer he should have been charged with an offence punishable under sec. 501, I. P. C., and that this being a separate offence the joint trial of the two accused was

Even if a separate charge had been framed under this section there would have been no illegality in the joint trial. But Ex. 6, the signed declaration of the second accused shows that he was publisher as well as printer and this evidence is un rebutted. The main lines of defence taken before us were based on the first and ninth Exceptions to sec. 499 of the Indian Penal Code. Reliance was also placed on the general Exception in sec. 79 and Exp. 4 to sec. 499, I. P. C.

The first Exception to sec. 499, I. P. C., declares that it is not defamation to impute any thing which is true concerning any person if it be for the public good that the imputation should be made and published. For the prosecution it was not contended that the publication would not be justified if the facts stated were true. Whether the imputation contained in the statements contained in the charge is true or not is the most important issue in the case. The facts that are admitted and the different stories of the prosecution and the defence are fully set out in the judgment of the lower Court and it is not necessary for me to repeat them. The learned Magistrate has held that the defence has failed, since if Hem Nalini the injured woman had been the complainant and Mr. Kidd the accused in a case brought for assault, Mr. Kidd would be given the benefit of the doubt. I agree that the plea of veritas set up by the defence fails but after an examination and careful consideration of the whole evidence I have no hesitation in coming to a positive finding that Mr. Kidd did not strike the blow that caused the wound on Hem Nalini's head. The case for the defence is greatly weakened by the omission in the accused's written statement of any plea that the imputation was true. This was no bar to the plea being argued after evidence had been given in support of it. But having regard to the fact that the written statement was filed on the 20th May when practically the whole of the evidence on both sides had been given and also to the absence of any explanation of the failure to take this plea it is hard to resist the conclusion that at that time the accused's legal advisers took the same view of their case on this point that I do, namely, that it had entirely failed. The principal difficulty in the way of the defence is the evidence of Hem Nalini herself. She has deposed that she was struck near the place where the central meeting was held at the time when the ladies got up to go and that the weapon used was a policeman's baton. On all these points she contradicts the defence story of the occurrence which is that she was struck at a place about 50 ft. to the south-west of the place of meeting, that it happened some little time after the ladies had gone from the place of meeting and the weapon used was a cane carried by Mr. Kidd which is about twice the length of a policeman's baton but much lighter. The person who was actually struck was not likely to be mistaken on all these three points but if Hem Nalini is correct on any one of these the whole case for the defence breaks down on this main issue. Having regard to the admitted facts that Hem Nalini received an injury on the head and that Mr. Kidd was beating people with a cane it is not surprising that the rumour should have started that he caused this injury. The youngmen present were greatly excited and there would be little difficulty in getting witnesses from among them to support the story published by the accused. A comparison of the evidence of the alleged eye-witnesses and their statements at different times fully supports the contention of the learned Standing Counsel that the story has been altered from time to time to try and make it agree with facts that could not be disputed. The last version of the story was that Mr. Kidd struck the woman not deliberately but in the course of indiscriminate hitting and mistaking her for a man. But even this contention fails. Apart from the other reasons for distrusting the defence witnesses it is significant that none of them speak of Mr. Kidd raising his stick to strike people on the head except when he struck Hem Nalini. Mr. Kidd has expressly denied that he ever struck any one on the head with his stick. I am unable to share the difficulty felt by the trying Magistrate in acting upon Mr. Kidd's testimony "with the same confidence as he is entitled to by his position and standing." I do not attach the same importance to his omission to mention that he had struck any one when he was partially examined on the 17th February. Nothing really turns on the mistake he made as to the position of the mosque and his first wrong impression that the wounded person was a boy and he has given reasonable explanations of these errors. As regards the so-called confusion of a palm tree and cocoanut tree, Mr. Kidd's botany is correct. In argument before us Mr. Kidd's conduct has been severely commented on because he made no enquiry to find out who assaulted the woman. But there is no evidence that there was no such enquiry made and obviously Mr. Kidd who was the accused would have been the last person to hold such an enquiry. He has also been attacked because he rendered no aid to the wounded person. This seems unfair when the evidence shows that offers of assistance from the police were rejected with insult. It is also said that there was no justification for using force since the illegal meeting had come to an end when the ladies left the place. But it was on their departure that the control they had exercised came to an end. The Police were confronted with an unruly mob. But in this case the conduct of the police is not the important issue nor is it necessary to decide who actually wounded Hem Nalini. We are only concerned with the truth or falsity of the allegation that Mr. Kidd wounded her and I have no hesitation in holding that this allegation is absolutely false. This finding disposes of the plea based on the first Exception to sec. 499, I. P. C.

The ninth Exception to this section has now to be considered. This exempts from criminal liability an imputation made in good faith for the public good. The learned pleader for the accused relied on the decision of this Court in the case of In the matter of Shibo Prosad Pandah (1) and some later cases of other High Courts in India following this ruling. The principle there laid down is stated in the head note as follows: "In dealing with the question of good faith the proper point to be decided is not whether the allegations put forward by the accused in support of the defamation are in substance true but whether he was informed and had good reason after due care and attention to believe that such allegations were true." The learned Standing Counsel on behalf of the Crown accepted this principle in its entirety but urged that the accused had failed to show due care and attention as a basis of their alleged belief of the defamatory statements. Here again if we refer to the written statement of the principal accused, we find that a very weak case is set out. He admits the necessity for enquiry before publication of the first information that reached him. He then goes on to say that he deputed two representatives of his Press to make enquiries and that he published the information on the basis of their reports and a bulletin received from the Congress Publicity Board. But he refuses to disclose the names of the representative on whose reports he relied. But sec. 105 of the Evidence Act throws the burden of proving the applicability of the ninth Exception on the accused. They cannot therefore escape their criminal liability by relying on professional etiquette though they may minimise the moral stigma of a conviction. The evidence adduced at the trial was certainly insufficient to discharge this burden. Narendra Nath Sett (D. W. 14), a vakil of this Court, has deposed that he advised the first accused to verify the news before publication and that on this advice one person was sent to the hospital to see the wounded lady herself and another to the South Congress Office. But no evidence has been given to show that reports or that any reports were received before the story of Mr. Kidd assaulting this lady was published. It is urged that the report itself shows by intrinsic evidence that a reporter, was sent to the hospital. Even if he were, his report could not have confirmed the story that the wound was caused by Mr. Kidd. Nor can I see why the volunteers should be considered more credible because they repeated before the Congress Board the story which the Editor hesitated to believe when it was told by them at his office. The enquiry held by Mr. J. M. Sen Gupta is relied on as justifying the publication of the statements which form the subject of the second charge. He held this enquiry as the representative of a body whose declared policy was to disobey a lawful police regulation. It was an ex parte enquiry and the statements there made were not sufficient authority to justify the contradiction of the Government communique. An ingenuous remark of one of the defence witnesses Nirode Bandhu Guha (D. W. 10) reveals the true object of this enquiry. I quote his own words, "The enquiry of Mr. Sen Gupta was made with a view to publish in the papers that Mr. Kidd had assaulted the woman." On this issue I am in full agreement with the trying Magistrate that there was an entire absence of due care and caution and hold that the plea of good faith entirely fails.

I fail to see how any case can be made out under the general Exception of sec 79, I. P. C., when the plea under the ninth Exception to sec. 499, I. P. C. has failed, since "good faith" must be proved in either case. Nor can the defence based on explanation 4 to sec 499, I. P. C. be supported after my finding that the plea under the first Exception to that section has entirely failed.

I would therefore dismiss this appeal and discharge this Rule.

SUHWARADY, J.—The accused in the appeal and in the connected Revision case stand convicted by the Third Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta under sec. 500, I. P. C.; the accused Promotha Nath Mukerjee has been sentenced to a fine of Rs. 500, in default to simple imprisonment for three months and the accused Ramendra Nath Ghosh to a fine of Rs. 50 in default to simple imprisonment for one month. The first accused has appealed and the second accused has obtained a Rule, against their conviction. The two accused were the editor and printer and publisher respectively of a daily English newspaper called "Servant." They were charged under two heads for publishing statements containing libel against Mr. F. W. Kidd, a Deputy Commissioner of the Calcutta Police, in two issues of the newspaper. The first head of the charge is that they committed an offence under sec. 500, I. P. C., by publishing in the issue of "Servant" of 20th January 1922, "the following imputation concerning the said Mr. Kidd, to wit (a) that a lady of 40 named Sm. Hem Nalini Ghosh was severely assaulted from behind by a European Officer reported to be Mr. Kidd, (b) that gentlemen present report that Mr. Kidd dealt this deadly assault on the lady, intending to harm or knowing or having reason to believe that such imputations would harm the reputation of Mr. F. W. Kidd, etc." The second head is that they committed the above offence by making and publishing in the issue of the said paper of the 23rd January 1922 "the following imputation concerning the said Mr. Kidd, to wit that (c) he (Mr. Kidd) hit her (Hem Nalini) on the top of her head from behind, (b) Kidd went up to her (Hem Nalini) and struck her (Hem Nalini) on the head from behind" and (c) "Mr. Kidd hit a woman on the head." The accused have been convicted on both the heads and sentenced as above.

The admitted facts of the case are that on 20th November 1921, the Commissioner of the Calcutta Police issued a notification prohibiting the holding of meetings within his jurisdiction for a period of three months. In violation of that notification meetings were held previous to the date of occurrence by persons belonging to the political party of the accused in other parts of Calcutta and dispersed by the Police. On the 19th January 1922, a similar meeting was intended to be held in Harish Park in Bhowanipur but the Police having guarded the place the venue was changed to a plot of vacant land to the north-west of Mr. C. R. Das's house and on the west of the Russa Road. When the meeting was being held the Police at Harish Park getting scent of it, Assistant Commissioner Kunja Behari Mukerjee, Sub-Inspector Hem Chandra Lahiri and Inspector Purna Chandra Mukerjee with one or two other Indian Police Officers and several constables arrived at the meeting at about 4-15 P.M. They found that about a dozen ladies were seated in the middle surrounded by a number of youngmen known as "volunteers" with a ring of spectators round them. The Police Officers first tried to separate the volunteers and the ladies from the outer group by wedging in a ring of Policemen between them. They then told the ladies among whom was S^m. Urmilla Devi, sister of Mr. C. R. Das, who virtually regulated the meeting, that the volunteers and they could not hold the meeting against Police orders. No heed was paid to the warning, and as each youngman got up to read a speech he was arrested by the Police. When about 20 of such men were arrested and kept within a cordon of constables and about half-an-hour after the arrival of the Police, Mr. Kidd appeared on the scene. Before the arrival of Mr. Kidd the Police did not use any force beyond pushing the crowd back (P. W. 7 Assistant Commissioner Kunja Behary, p. 13 of the paper-book). He began to push back the outer group of the spectators and shortly after the meeting broke up with a shout. "The ladies formed a sort of procession and surrounded by the volunteers proceeded eastward to the Russa Road. Mr. Kidd ran after them and ordered the Police present to separate the volunteers from the ladies. The volunteers were partly dispersed. Mr. Kidd pushed them, drove them and struck some of them with a leather mounted thick cane (Ex. 1) that he was carrying." I quote this from the Magistrate's judgment.

The case for the prosecution is that Mr. Kidd went with the ladies a short distance, came back to the pavement, then went towards the north as some stones were being thrown from that direction, came again to the road side and from there noticed a group of people numbering 20 to 30 on the south-west of the place of the meeting near a cocoanut or palm tree as Mr Kidd describes it. Thinking that another meeting was being held there he asked Sub-Inspector Hem Lahuri to go and disperse it. The Sub-Inspector went there and found a woman lying on the ground wounded on the head and bleeding with a number of volunteers and spectators stooping over her. He came back to Mr Kidd and reported that a woman was lying injured. Mr. Kidd did not understand him to say that it was a woman. He personally went to the spot and found somebody lying there injured whom he took for a boy. It is said that the volunteers refused Police help, treated the injured person with ice and subsequently secured a taxi cab and removed her to the Sambhunath Pandit Hospital. It is admitted that she was unconscious when removed to the Hospital (Ex. 2, p. 73). I have given the main facts of the case and will deal with the defence version of the occurrence and other admitted facts of the case when considering the pleas of the accused.

The accused have filed a written statement in which they admit the making and publishing the statements and imputations stated in the charge but plead good faith and privilege. The learned vakil for the accused has urged several points before us of which two demand serious consideration. I will deal with the other points at the end of my judgment. He has chiefly relied on Exceptions I and IX to sec. 499, I. P. C. He first contends that the imputations alleged to be defamatory were true, or in other words, that in fact Mr. Kidd did strike the woman and cause the injury on her head. He has taken what is technically known as the plea of veritas. He next submits that whether the imputations were true or not, his clients made and published them in good faith and in either case for public good.

I shall deal with the first plea first. The defence having admitted the publication of the defamatory statements, it is conceded, and that is the law, that the onus is on it to prove their truth. The accused in their written statements (which I may remark were filed after the entire evidence in the case both for the prosecution and the defence was concluded) does not specifically and pointedly take the plea that the imputations were true. But it is urged by the learned Advocate for the defence that, as the cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution and the evidence led by the defence were directed towards establishing the truth of the imputations, we ought in law and justice to consider the plea; and decisions have been cited to show that where in a criminal case the evidence adduced establishes the innocence of the accused on a ground not taken by him, the Court ought to give effect to it. It is not incumbent on me to accept any such general rule but considering the importance of the case in which conduct and reputation of a responsible Police Officer are involved, I propose to examine the evidence bearing on this point. The learned Magistrate has also tried this issue and devoted a considerable portion of his able and exhaustive judgment to a consideration of the evidence on this question. Besides, Exception I to sec. 499, I. P. C., may be taken to be covered by Exception IX to that section for if the truth of the libellous matter is established, the good faith of the maker cannot further be questioned, if of course the publication is made for the public good. The accused are therefore entitled to prove good faith either by showing that the imputations were true or that they did not act carelessly and negligently in believing them to be true.

As the prosecution chose to advance evidence first in anticipation of the defence, I propose to discuss that evidence before considering that for the defence. In examining the evidence for the prosecution two points strike me markedly which, to my mind, should have been cleared but were allowed to remain unexplained.

The first is that no explanation was offered nor was any suggestion made either in the evidence for the prosecution or in the cross-examination of the defence witnesses as to how the woman, Hem Nalini, came by her injuries. It is admitted that the people assembled at the meeting carried no weapon and offered no resistance. P. W. 7 Mr. Kunja Behary says—“They did not resist arrest and were saying ‘come arrest us.’ There was no demonstration of force on the side of the people assembled, only the crowd was pressing forward, as is usual when there is a large gathering.” It may therefore be safely presumed, and that is the suggestion of the prosecution, that it was some Policemen who had struck the woman, but no attempt was made to find out the assailant. Sub-Inspector Hem Lahiri’s evidence, if believed, read with that of Mr. Kidd, is to the effect that the Sub-Inspector informed Mr. Kidd that a Bengali Police Officer had struck the woman. It is strange that Mr. Kidd being a superior Police Officer and receiving information that a woman was severely assaulted, probably by a subordinate of his, did not think it worth his while to enquire into the matter either on the spot or ever afterwards and to find out the real culprit, as any such discovery would have completely exonerated him and given a complete quietus to the defence contention. Mr. Kidd is quite positive on the point. He says: "I have not tried to find out who assaulted the woman. If it is proved that another man is the culprit I am exculpated. I should like to know who the culprit was and it has always been my desire. I enquired from Hem Lahiri as to what he knew about this occurrence, but not definitely upon the point. I have received no information from anybody as to who assaulted the woman. Hem Lahiri said that he had reason to believe that a Bengal Police Officer had struck the woman. I took no steps to find out whether there was anything in the suggestion or not." One should have expected otherwise from a Police Officer of the rank and position of Mr. Kidd.

The other point which presents itself is closely connected with the preceding one. It is that no enquiry was made by Mr. Kidd or any other Police Officer into the case of the injured woman. Mr. Kidd and Kunja Babu offer an explanation for this apparent indifference by saying that as it was a non-cognizable case no enquiry was instituted. I regret that the explanation does not commend itself to me. Mr. Kidd and Hem Babu found a person whether a boy or a woman lying unconscious with a wound on the head and bleeding. How could they on the spot decide that it was a non-cognizable case? In fact Mr. Kidd says that he did not enquire whether the wound was serious or not or whether the person was likely to die or not. He adds that he did not think it his duty to make any further enquiry. I regret I am unable to agree with him. Kunja Babu frankly admits that he assumed that it was a non-cognizable case. He says in cross-examination: "I made no enquiries in this particular matter because there was no complaint at the Thana and we generally do not enquire into non-cognizable cases. I assumed that it was a non-cognizable case. I gave no orders for any enquiry to be made. To my knowledge nothing has been done in regard to the assault on this lady." The explanation does not seem to me to be satisfactory. I now pass on to consider the evidence adduced in the case by the prosecution. As regards the occurrence six witnesses have been examined, three of whom, the complainant, Assistant Commissioner, Kunja Behary and Sub-Inspector Hem Chandra, are Police witnesses. The other three, S. M. Kassim, Satyendra Mohun Roy and Madhuri Mohun Mukerji, are outside witnesses said to be present at the time. The evidence of the Police witnesses is, as it is expected to be, merely negative. As I have observed, it does not offer any explanation or suggestion about the assault on the woman. It is not necessary that it should, but it contains certain internal indications of not being quite straightforward which led the Magistrate to cast suspicion on portions of it. I will take those points in the order in which they have come out.

(1) It is admitted by the prosecution that the complainant, after the dispersal of the meeting, used his stick and struck several boys. Kunja Babu says—"I saw him strike 2-3 boys with his hand and cane throughout the whole time. I think he kicked one boy; this is the boy on the western footpath." Witness No. 6 Kassar says—"I saw Mr. Kidd actually hitting one boy. I saw him rush towards people who fled on seeing him rush. I saw Mr. Kidd strike the boy from behind and the stroke fell on the boy's leg. Besides Mr. Kidd I did not see any other Police Officer striking all the time that I was there. I saw Mr. Kidd rushing at the outer edge of the crowd and hitting out with his stick but it fell on the empty air as the people moved away on seeing him." To the same effect is the evidence of witness No. 9 who says that he saw the complainant strike one or two men and also make a rush at the people. All the prosecution witnesses speak in the same vein but the complainant himself did not say a word in his examination-in-chief about his striking any one or using his stick on that occasion. He no doubt said something to that effect when he was recalled after the examination of the above witnesses but the learned Magistrate rightly doubts that the omission was merely accidental and I agree with him. (2) The mistake made by the complainant that the person injured was a boy. Hem Babu says that he told Mr. Kidd that a woman was injured. Kunja Babu was near by and he heard him say so, but Mr. Kidd somehow carried the wrong impression that it was a boy, although it appears that on the following morning the Officers collected at Alipore and discussed the incident. Even in the report he submitted to the Government afterwards he stuck to the story that it was a boy. This error and the omission noticed in the preceding paragraph render the case open to the construction that the complainant tried at the outset to create an impression that he did not strike any one at the meeting and if he did, he never hit a woman. These undesirable understandings have led the learned Magistrate to remark that he could not act upon Mr. Kidd's testimony with such confidence as was due to his position and standing.

(3) The introduction of the name of Sergeant Sullivan in the case. The complainant knew that the case for the defence was that he was the only European Officer present at the meeting (vide Ex. 3, the statement of Urmilla Devi published in the issue of the "Servant" of the 23rd January), yet when he was examined on the 17th February he makes no mention of the presence of any other European besides himself. On the 6th March all the other prosecution witnesses speaking to the occurrence were examined-in-chief in the following order—Assistant Commissioner Kunja Behari, S. M. Kassim, Satyendra Mohun Ray, Madhuri Mohun Mukerji and Sub-Inspector Hem Chandra Lahiri. None of the witnesses preceding Hem Babu spoke of the presence of Sullivan or of any other European Officer at the time of the occurrence. It is the Sub-Inspector Hem Lahiri who first introduced Sullivan in the opening sentence of his examination-in-chief. The Police witnesses took up the cue and in their cross-examination which came some days later spoke of the presence of Sullivan from the time of the arrival of the Police on the scene. Kunja Babu makes curious statements regarding Sullivan. In his examination-in-chief on the 6th March he says—"The two Inspectors assisted me and Mr. Kidd supervised. There was no European there at the time. Four Sergeants came about 10 to 15 minutes afterwards." He was recalled on the 23rd March ostensibly for the purpose of asking him about Sullivan. He then said that Sullivan was at the meeting from before the arrival of Mr. Kidd but this fact had escaped his memory until he read the statements of some other witnesses in the papers. In cross-examination he made the following statement—"I was specifically asked by the Public Prosecutor if there was any other European Officer at that time and I definitely stated that there was none until 4 Sergeants arrived." Within a week of the meeting, and before the institution of the present case, a joint statement was prepared by Kunja Babu and Hem Babu and strangely enough Sullivan was totally ignored at the time. With reference to this matter, the only remark that can be made is that it does no credit to the prosecution or help in presenting its case as ungarbed truth. I may add that this Sergeant Sullivan has not been put in the box to support this portion of the prosecution story.

(4) Sub-Inspector Hem Lahiri says that the persons surrounding the injured woman told him that it was a Bengali Police Officer who had struck the woman and he said so to Mr Kidd. Assistant Commissioner Kunja Behari in whose presence the information about the injured person was conveyed to Mr. Kidd by Hem Babu does not speak to this conversation. Mr. Kidd himself does not mention a Bengali Police Officer in his examination-in-chief though he improves upon the story in his cross-examination after the examination of Hem Lahiri. The only other witness who speaks about it is Satyendra on whose evidence I will comment later. It was consistently the story of the defence from the beginning that it was an European who committed the assault as is evident from the statements published in the "Servant" of the 20th January. I feel no hesitation in holding that this story has no foundation on fact. It is worthy of note that the officers met at Alipore the following morning and discussed the incident, at which meeting it may be presumed, that, if it was a fact, it must have been mentioned that the "volunteers" themselves had accused a Bengali Police Officer with hitting the woman. But in the Government communique (Ex 2, p 73) which was based on Mr. Kidd's report, no mention is made of this important fact; on the other hand, it is stated there that so far as Mr Kidd saw, no member of Police force struck any woman.

In discussing the above points I have generally commented on the evidence of the Police Officers. Of the other three prosecution witnesses to the occurrence said to be bystanders, the learned Magistrate has rightly pronounced the witness Madhuri Mohun Mukerjee as unreliable and unworthy of belief. I entertain no better opinion of the witness Satyendra Mohun Ray. He was a chance witness and the reason he gives for his presence at the meeting is not satisfactory. His story is that he was told by a broker that a plot of land near the Kalighat Tramway Depot was for sale by the Improvement Trust and he went there alone to inspect it without knowing where it was. Not being able to identify it, he went to Hem Babu, an old friend of his, at the Tollygunj Thana, to obtain some information about it where he found the Sub-Inspector proceeding to Kalighat with the Assistant Commissioner in a car. He followed on foot. He witnessed all that happened at the meeting. He heard Mr. Kidd forbid the people (to hold the meeting) himself and through other Police Officers but they paid no heed. Mr. Kidd does not say so. He again found Mr. Kidd allow all persons to go who wanted to accompany the ladies and did not obstruct them. Mr. Kidd's version is that he was trying to the volunteers from the ladies. no chance to talk to Lahiri on the and went home by tram, and then he adds in the same breath that he met Lahiri on the road near the Russa Bioscope. He did not know the plot of land up till the day he was examined in Court nor did he make any further enquiry about it from the broker or the Improvement Trust. He even does not know the name and address of the broker. I cannot put any reliance on a witness like this. The production of such evidence mars a good cause and excites suspicion where it ought not to exist.

The only witness who may be fairly treated as independent is S. M. Kassim. During the 15 or 20 minutes that he was there he found Mr. Kidd striking the outer edge of the group. He saw him strike a boy and run towards the maidan and scatter the crowd. He saw him thus for 5 minutes and then went away. He does not speak of seeing injured person; so the incident must have happened after he had left. His evidence does not carry the complainant's case far and the defence does not challenge it as it does not militate against its case, rather, in its view, supports it.

I now turn to the evidence for the defence as far as it relates to the point under consideration. The accused have examined 5 eye-witnesses, Nos. 6, 7, 9, 11, and 12, to prove their case that the assault on the woman was committed by the complainant. Had the case rested on the evidence of these witnesses, I should have felt considerable difficulty in rejecting the whole of this evidence in view of the flaws in the complainant's case which I have pointed out, but it seems to me that the case for the defence has been given away by the injured woman. In the statement (Ex. 17) she made to the Assistant Commissioner on the day following the day of occurrence, she said that a Sahib was dispersing the crowd and when the other ladies stood up she also stood up when some one struck her on the head with a lathi. The summary of her evidence in Court is this. She received a hurt on the head with a black lathi-like thing, a little over a cubit in length. The stroke fell on her head from behind. Looking at Ex. 1 (the stick Mr. Kidd was carrying she said that the stick with which she was struck might have been like that, but blacker. She was shown a Policeman's baton (Ex. 2), and she said, "The thing with which I was struck was just this thing." Attempt was made in examination to improve matters, but it created more confusion. The suggestion of the defence was, as it is here, that the woman became dazed after the blow on her head and could not really notice the weapon. But she said in re-examination that she saw the stick when she turned round to see after the blow. If she saw the stick she must have noticed the striker, but she concluded that the person who struck was a Sahib, because she saw the Sahib by her side with a stick. In her statement to the Assistant Commissioner (Ex. 17) she says that she could not say who had assaulted her. She further said in her examination in Court that as she was getting up, she got the blow and fell down at the spot. She is more explicit in her statement, Ex. 17. There she said "The Sahib began dispersing the people then Mr. C. R. Das's wife, daughter and sister stood up. I also stood up. At this time some one struck me from behind with a stick or lathi on my head. I reeled and fell and some people held me." This story is totally inconsistent with the version of the affair given by the other witnesses for the defence, which is that when the ladies had left the place of the meeting and reached Russa Road, Mr. Kidd followed them beating people up to Russa

PROMOTHO NATH MUKHOPADHYA v. KING-EMPEROR.

Road; then he came back from the pavement beating people all the way and as this woman was going towards Rup Chand Mukherjee's Street, he struck her on the head with a stick. The learned vakil for the defence asks us to hold that the woman, as the result of the blow, got dazed and confused and could take no notice of her surroundings. He therefore invites us to hold that the story given by the witnesses is a true narration of facts. That may or may not be, but it is difficult to discard the version of the chief actor in the tragedy. The learned Magistrate has rightly observed that if Mr. Kidd were the accused in an assault case, with the woman as the complainant, it would not be possible to convict him on the evidence adduced in this case.

The conclusion at which I have arrived is that the accused have failed to substantiate beyond doubt the plea of veritas and the exemption claimed under Exception I, therefore, fails. But though I hold, in the state of the evidence in this case, that the defence has not succeeded in establishing the truth of the charge, I confess that I entirely agree in the observation of the learned Magistrate that the net result of the evidence on either side is that it is very doubtful whether Mr. Kidd hit the woman and that even if the complainant is not entirely absolved of the charge, he is entitled to the benefit of doubt.

The next question that demands consideration, and which in my opinion is the most important, is whether the imputations were made for the public good in good faith under the 9th Exception to sec. 499, I. P. C. It is conceded that if the imputations were made in good faith they must, considering the position of the accused, be taken to have been made for the public good. The question then remains have the accused shown that they acted with good faith in making and publishing the statements mentioned in the charge?

"Good faith" has been negatively defined in sec. 52, I. P. C., as—"Nothing is said to be done in good faith which is done or believed without due care and attention." The learned vakil for the accused argues that even if he does not succeed in establishing the truth of the allegations, he is entitled to show that his clients were "informed and had good reason after due care and attention to believe that such allegations were true" and reliance was placed for this proposition on the case of In the matter of Shibo Prosad Pandah (1) and other cases in different High Courts following the above case. The cases do not lay down any new rule of law different from that contained in the 9th Exception to sec. 499 read with sec. 52 of the Penal Code. Sec. 79 of the Penal Code does not limit or expand the defence available under the 9th Exception; and it seems to me that that section does not apply to a case where the Code expressly provides similar ground of exoneration in respect of a particular offence. In a case of defamation the accused has to establish good faith, if he pleads it, as any other fact and the question whether he committed a mistake of fact or law does not arise. Sec. 105 of the Evidence Act, 1872, lays the burden on the accused to prove that they acted in the matter with due care and attention, but when evidence is adduced on both sides the question of onus loses its importance.

I now turn to the evidence in the case. I have discussed at some length the evidence on the first issue as, in my judgment, it has considerable bearing on the question under consideration. If the imputation conveyed by the defamatory statements were entirely unwarranted, the Court would jealously and stringently scrutinize the evidence of good faith; but where circumstances existed casting suspicion on the absolute innocence of the prosecutor, it seems to me that stringency would be relaxed on production of sufficient evidence to strengthen that suspicion.

The case for the defence is that some volunteers of the Congress Committee shortly after the meeting came to the office of the newspaper and reported the incident to the accused naming the complainant as the assailant. Babu Narendra Nath Sett, a vakil of the High Court, happened to be present at the time. The first accused asked his advice as to whether he could publish it in his paper. Narendra Babu advised him to make further enquiries and he sent a representative to the Hospital and another to the office of the Calcutta South Congress Committee. The latter interviewed the Assistant Secretary of the Congress Committee who referred him to the report submitted by the former to the Congress Publicity Board. The reporters brought certain information to the accused who also obtained a copy of the above report or "bulletin." In these circumstances the accused plead that they honestly believed in the truth of the report and published it in the paper.

I will first deal with the imputations made in the issue of the paper of the 20th January. The learned Magistrate is of opinion that he is "not satisfied that the editor made any enquiry worth the name which would show his good faith before rushing into print and publishing the report received from the volunteer boys and the Congress Publicity Board, if any." He has not indicated what further enquiry the editor should have made in order to justify himself for publishing the report beyond observing that he should have made a personal enquiry from the complainant himself. The learned Standing Counsel has also laid stress on the failure of the Editor to appeal to Mr. Kidd, for information.

If it is attempted to lay down as a rule of law that a person before publishing defamatory statements should, even as a matter of prudence, seek information as to the truth of the imputations from the person against whom they are made, I regret I cannot persuade myself to be a party to laying down any such dangerous doctrine. I fail to perceive that the position of the person defamed should make any difference, for however highly placed a person may be, he may not be above human frailties. The contrary view would make the 9th Exception to sec. 499 superfluous. For if the person against whom the imputation is to be made admits the truth of it, protection is given by the first Exception: if, on the other hand, he denies the truth of it, the defamer will not be entitled to plead good faith under the 9th Exception under any circumstances.

The learned Standing Counsel has argued with great vehemence that the accused should not have believed in the information supplied to him by the Congress volunteers or the report submitted to the Publicity Board and that he acted without due care and attention in placing such trust. In order to determine whether the accused was justified in believing the truth of the reports one has to place oneself in the place of the accused and survey the situation from his stand-point. It may be true that a disinterested listener outside the fold of the party will consider it prudent to institute further investigation into the truth of the accusation or even disbelieve the informants, but a person professing the same political or religious creed as that of his informants may honestly take a different view. The Court in determining whether the accused should or should not have placed implicit reliance on the credibility of his source of information should not in my opinion place before itself the standard which it would demand to convince it of the trustworthiness of the persons supplying the information. It should take into account the mental attitude of the person, his prejudices and predilections and the surroundings in which he is placed. This view is supported by the case of Emperor v. Abdool Wadood Ahmed (2) following Bhawoo Jiraji v. Mulji Dayal (3). The learned Judges there observe, "Good faith under this 9th Exception requires not logical infallibility but due care and attention. But how far erroneous actions or statements are to be imputed to want of due care and caution must in each case be considered with reference to the general circumstance and the capacity and intelligence of the person whose conduct is in question. It is only to be expected that the honest conclusions of a calm and philosophical mind may differ very largely from the honest conclusions of a person excited by sectarian zeal and untrained to habits of precise reasoning." It is conceivable that there may be mutual confidence or a code of honour even among criminals.

The accused belong to the same political party and profess the same political faith as their informers. According to their estimation they are following a course which is commendable and does not attach to itself ignominy or moral obloquy. I am not aware that the profession of a particular political or religious belief, not inconsistent with accepted ideas of moral decency, necessarily imports dishonesty of purpose or detracts from the trustworthiness of a person holding such belief. You may abhor his faith but not necessarily his character. The accused say that they received certain information from their reporters. It is true that those reporters have not been examined because, it is said, it is a breach of etiquette for the editor of a paper to divulge his sources of information, but whatever information the editor may have received, it was confirmed and strengthened by a copy of the report which was submitted by the Congress Committee to their Publicity Board and which, it is evident, came into the hands of the editor. At being the official document of his party it can hardly be said that it was an error of judgment on his part to believe in its accuracy. That this report, with slight verbal alterations, was published in the issue of the paper of the 20th January is borne out by the evidence of defence witness No. 15, Assistant Secretary to the Congress Committee. I do not agree with the Magistrate in thinking that this witness was a made-up one for he is a responsible officer of the organisation through whose hands the report may have, in the ordinary course of business, passed, though he was not the writer of it. The accused have been charged with publishing defamatory statements contained in this report. To a person situated as the accused editor was, the report bore intrinsic evidence of infallibility. Its veracity was further augmented by a report of the statement of witnesses recorded by Mr. J. M. Sen Gupta, Barrister-at-Law and published in the issue of the 23rd January. It began with the statement of Urmilla Devi, a lady of high respectability and position, who spoke to every incident that happened on that day except the actual assault. She, however, within a few minutes of the occurrence received information that a woman was assaulted, after she had left, by a European Officer and according to her Mr. Kidd was the only European Officer on the spot. She further saw that the woman was carried on a taxi unconscious and bleeding. This evidence was supplemented by three eye-witnesses, young men working in the Congress cause. I am not called upon in this case to consider whether this evidence or that which has been produced in Court is sufficient to convict the complainant of the assault. I have held it is not. I have only to consider whether it was sufficient to produce in the mind of the accused, circumstanced as he was, a reasonable belief in the accuracy of his information. I cannot hold that the above circumstances coupled with the remarkable apathy of the Police to which I have already adverted and the further fact that the complainant was the only European Officer on the spot, which I believe to be true, using his stick, I take it for a lawful purpose, did not afford a reasonable ground to the accused to believe that the statements he published were true. I am therefore of opinion that the accused have succeeded in establishing their plea of good faith in publishing the imputations.

I think it proper to refer to an observation made by the learned Magistrate which finds place in two places in his judgment and on which he seems to have laid great stress. I refer to the passages in his judgment in which he charges the defence with change of front in that the case of the defence originally was that the assault on the woman by the complainant was deliberate; whereas in Court the case was changed into one of indiscriminate assault. This is what he says:—"This charge of indiscriminate assault has been sprung up and developed in the course of the trial of the case. In the original publications, which I have quoted and which form the basis of this case, that charge is that Mr. Kidd deliberately and brutally hit the woman from behind. This was the first report that the 'Servant' received and published. The statements of some witnesses about this not being deliberate act and being in the course indiscriminate and wanton assault came much later on." I wonder what led the learned Magistrate to fall into this error. It appears that in the statements published on the 20th and 23rd January it is said that the complainant was assaulting people indiscriminately and "right and left" (see pp. 72, 75 and 76 of the paper-book, Ex. I and Ex. 3). At p. 87 it reads that a witness in reply to a question put by Mr. Surendra Nath Mullick at a non-official enquiry said, "I think it was a random blow not particularly meant for the lady."

If having been found that the imputations made in the issue of the 20th January were made in good faith, it will follow that those published in the issue of the 23rd January were similarly made. In fact between the 20th and 23rd January the accused obtained further materials to strengthen their conviction, viz., the statements of witnesses recorded by Mr. J. M. Sen Gupta (D. W. 13) which, the witness admits, were published in the newspaper but he did not go through them line by line.

I now refer to two other minor points urged by the learned vakil for the accused.

(1) He also claims protection under Exception IV to sec. 499, I. P. C., on the ground that as it was well known that Mr. Kidd was in the habit of striking people in such meetings, the imputations charged did not lower his character in the eye of the public. I do not think there is any substance in this argument. It is not proved that Mr. Kidd had such wide notoriety or that the public had formed such estimate of his character. In fact the prosecution has adduced sufficient evidence to prove that the imputations were calculated to harm the complainant's reputation.

(2) It is also argued that the conviction of the second accused under sec. 500, I. P. C. is wrong inasmuch as he is a printer and as such, if the offence is proved, should be convicted under sec. 501, I. P. C. The second accused was charged as printer and publisher and he does not deny that he was a publisher also. Besides, alteration of the section of the Code will not materially help the accused nor vitiate their joint trial.

In the above view of the case, I am of opinion that the charge fails and both the accused should be acquitted.

Mr. B. L. Mitter, Standing Counsel (with Rai Tarak Nath Sadhu Bahadur) for the Crown in both the appeal and the Revision.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

In my opinion this case must be disposed of on the footing that there has not been a compliance by the Magistrate with the provisions of sec. 342 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

According to the order sheet the accused were properly called upon to plead. That was on the 14th March 1922 and at that time they stated that they pleaded not guilty and also that they would both file written statements. The duty of the Magistrate under sec. 342 is not in question at that stage. It arises when the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined, cross-examined and re-examined and according to the order sheet that process was completed on the 12th April 1922, on which date the case was adjourned until the 25th for the purpose of the accused entering on their defence. It is quite clear that the promise to file written statements made at the time of the plea in no way exonerates or exempts the Court from examining the accused at a later stage as required by sec. 342. There is no minute in the order sheet to the effect that on the 12th April or on the 25th April anything purporting to be an examination of the accused took place, nor is there any indication of the questions put and the answers obtained upon such examination. It appears from the report made by the Magistrate that at the close of the prosecution case he had discussions with the learned Counsel for the defence as to the number and nature of the witnesses the accused were going to call. It also appears from the Magistrate's report that he always understood, and so far as he now remembers he was told, that the accused would file the written statements promised by them. In these circumstances the Magistrate has said in his report, "it will thus be seen that I did examine the accused and give them the fullest opportunity to make their statements. And they did so in their written statements filed on the 20th May 1922, when not only had the prosecution witnesses been cross-examined and re-examined but also their own defence been finished."

Now, the first question which I have to address myself to is the question whether there has been a compliance with the section. In this country it often happens that a prisoner is tried in a language which for one reason or another he understands but indifferently well and for that reason as well as for other equally grave reasons the intention of the statute is that at a certain stage in the case, the Court itself shall put aside all Counsel, all pleaders, all witnesses, all representatives, and shall call upon an individual accused with the authority of the Court's own voice to take advantage of the opportunity which then arises to state in his own way anything which he may be desirous of stating. In the case of an accused who is in no difficulty in understanding the proceedings, a question addressed to his Counsel in his hearing and answered by his Counsel in his hearing may perhaps be taken in certain circumstances as a compliance with the section. It is not a full compliance with the section, but I say nothing whatever to create any more trouble than is absolutely necessary in any case of that character. What is necessary is that the accused shall be brought face to face solemnly with an opportunity given to him to make a statement from his place in the dock in order that the Court may have the advantage of hearing his defence if he is willing to make one with his own lips. Now, I cannot think that the fact that there was a discussion with Counsel about the number and nature of the witnesses is the same thing at all as what the section requires. It is important also to have regard to the time at which this examination took place. In the decided cases it has been pointed out that to ask an accused for his defence before he has the whole of the prosecution evidence in front of him, is not a compliance with the section. In my opinion to ask the accused not at the beginning of his defence but later on when his statements may be subject to heavy discount owing to the evidence given in his hearing by his own witnesses in the meantime, that is not to be assumed to be a substantial compliance with the requirements of the section. In the present case I have an instance not on the side of the accused but on the side of the complainant of this very matter and it is a very good illustration because in this case much difficulty has been caused and much criticism has been made because the complainant whose examination was not finished till after the other witnesses for the prosecution had been examined had introduced matters the value of which might have been taken quite differently if they had been introduced at the earliest possible opportunity. In like manner an accused who is only given an opportunity to state his defence after the witnesses called by himself have been examined and cross-examined may not be in as good a position as if he had been invited to make his defence at the proper time and before those witnesses were heard. The fact that the accused were asked to put in written statements in my opinion is of no great moment for this purpose. There is all the difference in the world between a written statement presumably prepared, almost certainly revised, by the lawyers appearing for the defence and a statement made by the accused himself, so that the Magistrate can observe his demeanour and his manner while he makes it and come to his conclusions as to the value of his evidence. In this country an accused is not allowed to give evidence on his own behalf and, in view of this sec. 342, is of cardinal importance. I say these things not because I am desirous of introducing any new technicalities or any new difficulties as regards procedure in the lower Courts. I quite appreciate that the Specially Magistrates in the City of Calcutta have to get through a mass of important and difficult work and that some slips are not only natural but inevitable. At the same time the question whether a non-compliance with sec. 342 is fatal to the proceedings is a question as to which I am not prepared, sitting as I now am, to call into question the decision given in the case of Mazahur Ali v. King-Emperor (4). The importance of that case is that the learned Chief Justice distinctly stated thus: "On the merits, as far as I can see, there is nothing to be said in support of this application, but these are the words of the section which, in my judgment, expressly provide that the Magistrate shall question the accused generally on the case at a certain stage in the proceedings." It is no doubt arguable that the words of the section are mandatory, but that it does not follow that every non-compliance is more than an irregularity. In the present case on the facts it is also argued with great plausibility that if it is a proper question to entertain whether or not these accused have suffered any prejudice, the answer should be in the negative. It seems to me highly undesirable that the ruling in the case of Mazahur Ali v. King-Emperor (4) should be whittled down by a Court which is not entitled to overrule it: and I expressly reserve my opinion on the question whether that case did or did not go too far. That, however, is the measure of justice and strictness which was meted out to the accused there and I am not going to exact a lower scale in the present case.

In Mr. B. L. Mitter's argument there was a contention that whether or not failure to comply with the section properly amounts to an irregularity or to an illegality vitiating the proceedings depends on the question of merits, that is to say, on the question whether the accused person has been prejudiced or has not been prejudiced. I must point out that there are some manifest difficulties in this view. My duty, I think, is clear, namely, to follow the decisions of a Division Bench of the Court and to treat this trial as having become illegal from the moment when without compliance with sec. 342, the Magistrate called upon the accused to enter on their defence.

The case is therefore sent back to the same Magistrate to begin the proceedings anew as from the end of the re-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution, that being the point at which in my opinion, for non-compliance with sec. 342, the proceedings became illegal under the authority to which I have already referred.

Mr. Sanyal must excuse me if I do not discuss certain matters which he has mentioned in arguing this part of the case, but I have to remember that anything I might say at the present moment might seriously embarrass one or the other of the parties when the proceedings begin afresh in the lower Court.

The result therefore is that the convictions of the accused are set aside and the case sent back to the same Magistrate to begin the trial afresh from the point which I have indicated.

The fines, if paid, must be refunded.

The same order is made on the revision petition at the instance of the second accused, the printer.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 113—Contract for sale of land—Intending purchaser if beneficial owner or has a charge on the property—Right to sue for possession without claiming specific performance—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 54.

Under a contract of sale of land, no charge is created in favour of the intending purchaser, who does not by reason of such contract alone become entitled to sue for possession, absolutely or conditionally on his fulfilling his part of the stipulations in the contract.

A suit to enforce his rights under the contract with reference to the property is essentially one for the specific performance of a contract to which Art. 113 of the Limitation Act applies.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court at Madras, dated the 14th February 1916, which reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot, dated the 22nd April 1901.

The suit out of which the appeal arose was instituted by the manager of the Court of Wards on behalf of Rajah Kumar Venkata Perumal, a son of the Rajah of Karvetnagar, for a declaration of his rights and title to four villages and for possession thereof.

The suit was based on an agreement, dated the 25th August 1888, between Saravana Pillai (the original first Defendant) and the Plaintiff which provided that on taking an account Rs. 99,568-15-6 had been found due to Pillai and that he should sell the suit villages to the Plaintiff on payment of that sum and that if the Plaintiff were unable to pay the full amount in cash a mortgage should be taken on the villages agreed to be sold.

Saravana Pillai (since deceased) and five mortgagees from him were made Defendants and it was alleged that Pillai was a trustee for the Plaintiff.

The suit was tried by the Subordinate Judge of Arcot who decided that the parties were bound by the terms of the agreement and that Pillai was the owner of the villages but that the Plaintiff's remedy was an action for specific performance which had, however, become barred by limitation, and he dismissed the suit and passed a decree accordingly.

From this decree the Plaintiff appealed to the High Court at Madras (Subrahmanya Ayyar, Officiating C. J., Benson and Bhasham Ayyangar, JJ.), who found that the agreement proceeded on the footing that the Plaintiff was the beneficial owner of the villages and that the first Defendant held the same for his benefit. They accordingly set aside the judgment of the Court below and remitted the case (on the 15th December 1903) for findings on three specific issues.

The issues remitted were tried by the District Judge of North Arcot who recorded his findings thereon and the proceedings terminated in a final decree of the said High Court, dated the 14th February 1916, which settled the amounts due by the Plaintiff to the first Defendant and provided for redemption by the Plaintiff and for sale in default subject to certain terms and conditions.

From this decree the principal Defendants appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and B. Dubé for the Appellants.—The High Court have taken a wrong view of the construction of the contract. It was in reality an agreement in which Saravana Pillai agreed to sell the villages to the Plaintiff for a fixed sum. The suit therefore is in reality a suit for specific performance of a contract and is barred by Art. 113 of the Limitation Act.

Reference was also made to Ramchand Manjmal v. Goverdhandas Vishindas Ratanchand (1) on the question as to whether the Appellants were justified in bringing this appeal seeing that no appeal had been filed by them against the order of the High Court of 15th December 1903.

Mr. J. M. Parikh for the Respondents submitted that if the appeal were allowed, it should be without prejudice to the claims of Respondents Nos. 8, 9 and 10 who were mortgagees from the first Defendant.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by LORD CARSON.—In this suit the present Rajah of Karvetnagar seeks to recover possession from the Defendants of certain villages on payment of such sum, if any, as may be found due.

Both the Subordinate Judge of North Arcot and the Judges of the High Court of Judicature at Madras were in agreement that the legal relation between the Plaintiff and the first Defendant is settled and determined by a contract in relation to the said villages entered into on the 25th August 1888, between Sri Maharajulangu, the Plaintiff's father, and the first Defendant. Saravana Pillai, who was the first Defendant, is now dead, but is represented in this appeal. The remaining Defendants claimed to be bonâ fide purchasers for value from the first Defendant without notice of any claim by the Plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge held that upon the construction of the said contract Saravana Pillai was the owner of the villages, and agreed to sell the same to the Plaintiff for a consideration of Rs. 99,568-15-6, to be paid or secured as stated in the fifth paragraph of the said contract of the 25th August 1888. The High Court, on the other hand, held that upon the true construction of the contract the Plaintiff was the beneficial owner of the villages and Saravana Pillai only the legal owner, and that in the matter of pecuniary obligations incurred by Saravana Pillai in connection with the purchase of the villages, and in the matter of the other money dealings between him and the Plaintiff, there was found due from the Plaintiff a sum of Rs. 99,568-15-6 in settlement of accounts. It is admitted in the judgments of the High Court that if the said contract were a contract for sale the suit would essentially be one for the specific performance of a contract, and in that case it would be clearly barred under Art. 113 of the Limitation Act. It is well to bear in mind that the terms of this section relate to any contract.

On the view taken by the High Court of the contract, however, it was held that the suit is really one for the possession of immoveable property by a beneficial owner thereof against the legal owner on payment, if necessary, of such sum, if any, as may be found due; that the execution of a conveyance by the first Defendant to the Plaintiff was not essential, and is unnecessary if he gets a decree for the recovery of the villages as beneficial owner.

The villages in question originally belonged to the Plaintiff's late father—the then zamindar of Karvetnagar. They were sold in 1883 in Court auction in O. S. No. 5 of 1879, and purchased by the first Defendant as stated in the contract. It is alleged by the Plaintiff that this purchase was made on behalf of the Plaintiff's father; that a part of the purchase money was paid out of his funds and the balance obtained from one Krishnama Chari, to whom the villages appear to have been sold by the first Defendant subject to a condition of reconveyance on payment of a stipulated sum. A suit to compel such reconveyance was instituted in the High Court at Madras, and on the 16th October 1889, a decree directing reconveyance was made. In pursuance thereof a conveyance was duly executed on the 7th February 1890, and since that date the first Defendant had until he died been in possession of the villages, acting as the absolute owner thereof. The contract of the 28th August 1888, was entered into during the pending of the original suit. It recites briefly the facts above stated and refers to the pendency of the said suit, and then proceeds as follows:—

“Under these circumstances, under the order of Sri Maharajulanguaru the accounts were looked into in their presence in respect of items due to the said Saravana Pillai relating to the said villages, and also relating to all money transactions between Saravana Pillai and Sri Maharajulanguaru. On looking into the accounts, the amount found due to the said Saravana Pillai was Rs. 99,568-15-6. Saravana Pillai consented to receive this sum of rupees, etc., and sell the aforesaid villages to Sri Maharajulanguaru.”

Whatever may have been the original nature of the purchase by Pillai or the arrangements entered into to raise the purchase money, this contract was a settlement of questions of account in relation to the said villages and other matters, and under the terms of it Pillai is treated as the legal and beneficial owner. The second clause of the contract further strengthens this construction. It provides that as soon as Pillai obtains a decree in the suit already referred to (which, as pointed out, he did obtain), he should sell the villages to Maharajulanguaru, and the said Maharajulanguaru should purchase the same for the sum of Rs. 99,568-15-6. “He should not sell to others without the consent of the Maharajulanguaru”—a provision which would be meaningless unless he was the legal and beneficial owner. The fifth clause of the agreement provides for payment of interest on the purchase money until paid, and that until the principal and interest are paid the Maharajulanguaru should mortgage the villages “which Saravana Pillai has consented to sell, or other villages, etc.”—properties which are acceptable to Saravana Pillai as security for the said principal and interest—and execute a document therefor. The Plaintiff took no further action in the terms of the said contract. In the year 1899 his estate was taken under the management of the Court of Wards, and this suit was instituted by the Manager appointed by the Court of Wards on the 24th August 1900. Before instituting this suit, it is to be observed that on the 23rd August 1900, the Acting Secretary to the Court of Wards, by a notice in writing, called upon the first Defendant to execute a conveyance of the villages to him on behalf of the Plaintiff and to tender a mortgage for execution by him on behalf of the Plaintiff.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

No. 161 of 1922.

Their Lordships agree with the Subordinate Judge that no charge is created by the contract over the villages in question, and that the Plaintiff had no right to recover possession of the property absolutely or conditionally on his executing a mortgage deed or making a payment to the first Defendant.

The suit, therefore, becomes one for the specific performance of a contract which is barred by the section of the Limitation Act already referred to.

This Board are, for the reasons stated, of opinion that this appeal should be allowed and the judgment of the Subordinate Judge restored, and that the Appellants should have their costs in the Courts below and of the appeal. It is unnecessary, having regard to this conclusion, to consider the case of the Respondents, the legal representatives of Defendant No. 3—for whom Mr. Parikh appeared—further than to say that it was agreed in the course of the argument by Mr. DeGruyther, Counsel on behalf of the Appellants—that the interests of Mr. Parikh's clients should not be affected by any question of any statutes of limitation which might be raised in answer to their claim, owing to the delay which has been occasioned by the institution and the carrying out of the proceedings in this suit, and their Lordships so determine.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

MAKHANLAL MOOKER-JEE, Respondent.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), sec. 21—Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), sec. 89—Hindu Will's Act (XXI of 1870), sec. 2—Residue left by Will for the maintenance and worship of idol—Idol, if residuary legatee—Letters of administration, who is entitled to, shebait or priest.

Where a testatrix, a Hindu widow, by her Will, after providing for expenditure on the occasion of her obsequious ceremonies and payment of certain legacies, directed that the residue of her estate should be devoted to the maintenance and worship of the idol established by her husband's ancestors, and the executor named in the Will did not take out probate:

Held—That the idol was the residuary legatee within the meaning of sec. 89 of the Indian Succession Act, which is applicable to Hindus, and that the person entitled to letters of administration under sec. 21 of the Probate and Administration Act was the shebait of the idol.

Held, further—That the appointment of a priest (purohit) to conduct the worship of the idol by the shebait does not transfer the management of the debutter estate from the shebait to the priest; and that the priest is not entitled to the grant of letters of administration as residuary legatee or otherwise.

KALIKRISHNA RAY v. MAKHANLAL MOOKERJEE

It is well-settled that when the worship of an idol has been founded, the shebaitship is vested in the founder and his heirs, unless he has disposed of it otherwise or there has been some usage or course of dealing which points to a different mode of devolution.

This was an appeal from a decision of A. J. Chotzner, Esq., District Judge, 24-Parganas, dated the 1st March 1922.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Rupendra Kumar Mitra and Pasupati Ghose for the Appellants.

Babus Probodh Kumar Das and Panchanan Ghose for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This appeal is directed against an order for the grant of letters of administration, with copy of the Will annexed, to the estate left by one Bidhumoni Debi. The lady made a testamentary disposition of her properties on the 29th November 1898 and died on the 16th December 1898; she directed the expenditure of Rs. 600 on the occasion of her obsequious ceremonies and Rs. 1,400 in the payment of specified amounts as legacies to various persons. The residue, she directed, would be devoted to the maintenance of the worship of the idol Sri Sri Iswar Lakshmi Janardan established by the ancestors of her husband. The executor named in the Will did not take out probate and it was not till the 5th November 1904 that one Rajendra Nath Roy, a first cousin of the lady, came forward to take out letters of administration with copy of the Will annexed. We are not now concerned with the history of the management of the estate by this administrator. It is sufficient to state that on his death, one Makhanlal Mookerjee, the priest of the testatrix, applied for letters of administration. In the first instance, an ex parte order was made in his favour; this was subsequently re-called and the case was reheard in the presence of Kalikrishna Ray and Satis Chandra Ray who are the grand-sons of the brother of the testatrix and have come forward to obtain letters of administration. The District Judge has made a grant in favour of the priest under sec. 21 of the Probate and Administration Act. We are now called upon to consider whether this order can be sustained.

Sec. 21 runs in these terms:—

“When there is no executor and no residuary legatee or representative of a residuary legatee, or he declines or is incapable to act, or cannot be found, the person or persons who would be entitled to the administration of the estate of the deceased if he had died intestate, or any other legatee having a beneficial interest, or a creditor, may be admitted to prove the Will, and letters of administration may be granted to him or them accordingly.”

The District Judge has made an order in favour of the priest on the ground that he was the residuary legatee. In our opinion this position cannot be supported; and, indeed, in the course of argument, the view that the priest was the residuary legatee has been abandoned. The Will directs the payment of a legacy of Rs. 50 to the priest; this clearly does not make him the residuary legatee. But it has been admitted before us that this sum has already been paid to the priest out of the estate. He cannot consequently be regarded as a legatee having a beneficial interest in the estate. The residuary legatee is unquestionably the idol established by the ancestors of the testatrix. It is to the idol that the residue of the estate is bequeathed, and under sec. 89 of the Indian

KALIARISHNA RAY v. MAKHANLAL MOOKERJEE

Succession Act, which is applicable to Hindus under sec. 2 of the Hindu Wills Act, a residuary legatee may be constituted by any words that show an intention on the part of the testatrix that the person designated should take the surplus or residue of his property. Consequently, the person entitled to letters of administration, as residuary legatee under sec. 21 of the Probate and Administration Act, is the shebait of the idol. It cannot be suggested that the priest is the shebait. The shebait appoints the purohit to conduct the worship, but that does not transfer the management of the debutter estate from the shebait to the purohit; Maharani Indurjeet Koor v. Chandemun Misser (1) and Nagar Chandra v. Kailash Chandra (2). Where the appointment of a purohit has been at the will of the founder, the mere fact that the appointees have performed the worship for several generations will not confer an independent right upon the members of the family so appointed, and will not entitle them as of right to be continued in office as priest; Nanabhai v. Trimbak (3) and Narayana v. Ranga (4). We are consequently of opinion that the Respondent is not entitled to the letters of administration as residuary legatee or otherwise and the order made in his favour cannot be supported.

The result is that the appeal is allowed and the application for letters of administration made by Makhanlal Mookerjee dismissed with costs, both here and in the Court below. The hearing-fee in this Court will be assessed at two gold mohurs.

The case will be remitted to the lower Court so that the question of grant of letters of administration to the Appellants or other persons may be further considered. The residuary legatee is the person entitled to the office of shebait. We are not in a position to decide, from the materials on the record, who is entitled to the shebaitship. But we may add that it is well-settled that when the worship of an idol has been founded, the shebaitship is vested in the founder and his heirs, unless he has disposed of it otherwise or there has been some usage or course of dealing which points to a different mode of devolution; Sree Gredhareejee Goswamce v. Rumanlalji Gossamce (5), Jagadindra Nath v. Hemanta Kumari (6) and Mohan Lalji v. Gordhan Lalji (7). In this connection, it must be borne in mind that as stated in the Will of the lady, the worship of the idol was established by the ancestors of her husband. She is consequently not the original founder; nor can she be regarded as a founder because of her subsequent benefaction which is nothing beyond an accretion or addition to the existing foundation; Annaswami Pillai v. Ramakrishna Mudaliar (8) and Appasami v. Nagappa (9). The question of shebaitship is thus a matter for careful investigation, and we direct that the application for letters of administration made by the present Appellants be re-heard, after notice to the heirs of the husband of the lady and to the Government Pleader as representing the Crown.

Appeal—Witness, credibility of—Weight to attach to opinion of trial Court—When question does not depend upon witness's demeanour and manner in the box but on inferences from facts, Appellate Court as good judge of fact as trial Court.

When the question of credibility of a witness depends upon the light which is thrown upon it by his demeanour in the box, by the manner in which he answers the questions and by how he seems to be affected by the questions that are put to him and so on, the trial Judge has an advantage not shared by the Appellate Court. But when the views upon credibility are founded upon argumentative inferences from facts which are not disputed, then the Court of Appeal is really in as good a situation as the Judge of first instance

These were two consolidated appeals from two decrees of the High Court at Madras, dated the 10th December 1917, which reversed two decrees of the Temporary Subordinate Judge of Nellore, dated the 15th August 1916.

The facts are shortly as follows:—

One P. Chenchuragava Reddi died on the 26th October 1914 after a somewhat protracted illness.

On the 20th November 1914, the Appellants instituted a suit against the first Respondent who is the widow of Chenchuragava Reddi.

They alleged that the latter died intestate, and that the widow was fabricating a Will, and they prayed for a declaration that they were the nearest reversioners of the deceased and that the Will was not genuine.

On the 9th December 1914 the impugned Will, dated the 22nd October 1914, was unsuccessfully presented for registration by the widow, and on the 30th September 1915 the widow and her nephew instituted the second suit under sec. 77 of the Registration Act.

Both suits were tried by the Subordinate Judge of Nellore, and by consent the same evidence was accepted in each.

The learned Subordinate Judge decided against the genuineness of the Will propounded by the widow but held that the Plaintiffs had not established beyond reasonable doubt that they were the nearest reversioners to the estate of the deceased.

In the event he passed decrees dismissing both the suits.

Against these decrees the parties presented appeals to the High Court at Madras which were heard together and one judgment was delivered on 10th December 1917 by Abdul Rahim and Oldfield, JJ.

The learned Judges decided in favour of the genuineness of the Will, reversed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and passed decrees directing the Sub-Registrar to register the Will on its presentation by the Appellant within 30 days from the date of the decrees.

Against these decrees the Appellants appealed to His Majesty in Council.

LORD DUNEDIN.—One Palchur Chen-

churagava Reddi, an inhabitant of a village in the District of Nellore, died on the 26th October 1914, at the age of about 60, and was possessed of considerable property. He left a widow, but no children and no near relatives except such as were relations of his wife. His wife had a sister, who had a son, Vemireddi Babureddi. On the 9th December 1914, his widow and his nephew presented for registration a Will before the Sub-Registrar. The registration was opposed by the Appellants in the present suit, who allege that they are the nearest agnates of the deceased and as such are entitled in reversion to succeed to the estate after the termination of the widow's interest, upon the ground that they conceived that the deceased had died intestate. Registration was refused, as it was considered that sufficient proof had not been given that the Will was duly executed, and this decision of the Sub-Registrar was confirmed on appeal by the Registrar.

The present Appellants brought a suit for a declaration that they had the position of nearest agnates, and that the so-called Will was not executed in fact, and was, if executed, executed by the testator while in a condition of unsound mind.

To this suit defences were lodged for the widow and Vemireddi Babureddi, who was the chief taker under the Will, in which they alleged that the Will had been duly executed. A counter-suit was brought by them to have it declared that the Will was genuine, and also to have the Registrar enjoined to register the Will. These two suits came before the Subordinate Judge.

In this state of matters, what might be called the natural order would be first to take up the question of whether the parties who were attacking the Will had any title to raise the question, because, of course, unless they had such title—that is to say, unless they proved their relationship—they had no right to be heard, whether there was a Will or not. But the learned Judge approached the questions in the other order, and after a prolonged investigation he held that the Will had not been executed at all, and was a forgery. He then took up the question of relationship, and held that the relationship had not been sufficiently proved. In the result, therefore, he dismissed both suits. On appeal, naturally the High Court took up the matter in the same order as the learned Subordinate Judge had done, and they came to the conclusion that the Will had been duly executed. That being so, it did not become necessary to go into the question of relationship. The High Court gave these Respondents here a decree in their suit and dismissed the appeal in the other suit.

From these decrees these consolidated appeals are brought to His Majesty in Council. The question of whether the testator was in a sound state of mind has really dropped out. As the Subordinate Judge found that the Will had not been executed, it was not necessary for him to go into the question of mental testamentary capacity; it was very feebly insisted upon before the High Court, and it was, quite rightly, entirely given up before their Lordships.

Sir William Finlay, who argued the case exceedingly well, really put the only point in the case. He said that the execution of the Will was necessarily a question of fact; that the fact depended in such a case upon credibility; that the Judge who had heard the witnesses had come to a certain conclusion; and that there was no sufficient reason for the PALCHUR SANKARAREDDI v. PALCHUR MAHALAKSMAMA.

High Court to alter that. He quoted certain well-known authorities which, although authorities in the Courts in India, really represent a canon which is equally good in every system of law, namely, that when you have to deal with a pure question of credibility very great weight ought necessarily to be given to the judgment of the Judge who saw the witnesses. Their Lordships are not at all likely to throw any doubt upon that doctrine, nor do they think that the High Court threw any doubt upon it. It was just as alive to the doctrine as are their Lordships.

There are two ways in which one may approach the question of credibility. When the question is whether a witness is speaking the truth or not, light is thrown upon it by the demeanour of that witness in the box, by the manner in which he answers questions, and by how he seems to be affected by the questions that are put to him, and so on. No doubt there the trial Judge has an advantage which cannot possibly be shared by any Appellate Court. But when the views upon credibility are founded upon argumentative inferences from facts which are not disputed, then the Court of Appeal is really in just as good a situation as the Judge of first instance. Their Lordships think that it is quite evident from their judgment that the High Court entirely recognised this, and they agree with the criticisms which were made by the High Court upon the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge.

There really were two matters bearing upon the question of whether the Will was really the Will of the deceased or not. The first was inspection of the Will itself. It was said against the Will that the signature of the deceased was in a shaky hand. It is to be noted that it was not said that the signature was uncharacteristic, but merely that it was shaky. Their Lordships do not think that that is an objection in which there is much weight. Indeed, so far it seems almost in favour of the Will being genuine, because, if a man sets himself to commit a forgery, he would naturally try to make the signature as exactly like the genuine signature as he could, and certainly would not introduce shakiness into the signature. The shakiness in the signature is perfectly easily accounted for by the fact that the Will was only made a few days before the testator's death, and that he was very ill and probably suffering a good deal of pain. Then comes the other matter—the story itself. As the learned Subordinate Judge says, the story of execution of the Will is quite perfect. The question is whether the story can be taken as true or not. It is spoken to by quite a considerable number of witnesses, and the point is whether there are really any sufficient criticisms against those witnesses. The Appellants, in their story, are in rather a curious position. They do not wish to say what in most cases would be the natural thing to say. This man had no intention of making a Will at all; he meant to die intestate. On the contrary, they rather put in the forefront that this man had every intention of making a Will, and there has been a great deal of evidence that there was a certain amount of hearsay, based, no doubt, on something that the testator had said, and which had been communicated to the witness Chengiah—against whom there is nothing to be said—that he had some intention of devoting a very large portion of his fortune to a charity in connection with a school for boys. Now this is a rather difficult position for the Appellants to put themselves into, because the moment that they assert that there was another Will they put themselves out of Court, because their only right to prevail is upon intestacy, and, therefore, they rather hint that it was most likely that the man would make a Will, and then go on to say it is pretty apparent from what we have heard that if he did make a Will, this is not the sort of Will that he would have made. It is really the old position of wishing to wound and being afraid to strike. Their Lordships cannot help thinking, and the Appellate Court probably thought too, that unfortunately this notion that the deceased meant to make a Will in favour of the school got so much into the mind of the learned Subordinate Judge that his judgment was swayed by that predominating opinion to begin with, and that he then looked at each witness with a sort of idea of trying to find out why the witnesses could not be reliable, instead of beginning with the witnesses and then seeing if there was any special reason why they should not be speaking the truth.

Their Lordships do not propose to go through the matter by examining the evidence of each of the witnesses, because they entirely concur with a single sentence of the learned Judges in the High Court, who say this, speaking of the evidence of the various witnesses: "We do not find that enough has been shown to justify us in distrusting their evidence and in saying that they were all participants in a forgery."

There is another matter which has great weight, namely, the attitude taken by the widow herself. The widow herself propounded the Will. It is quite true that in the later development of the case she no longer went along with the second Defendant, who is now the second Respondent in this case, and there has been light to a certain extent thrown upon her attitude. It is quite evident that she was anxious for a certain disposition to be made of part of the property. She seems to have been willing to give up so much of her own life interest as was secured to her by the Will, and she was anxious that the second Respondent, who was the principal taker, should go along with her in order that a settlement should be made upon a relative of her own who was going to be married. When she found that the second Respondent would not go along with her in that, she seems, so to speak, to have turned round, but only turned round in this way, that she absented herself: she did not take the active part of coming to the Court to deny that the Will had been executed, though when they came to the High Court she instructed her Counsel to go further. Under those circumstances it is impossible not to remember her original attitude, and their Lordships are inclined to believe that her original attitude was prompted by the fact that she knew it was the truth.

For these reasons their Lordships think these consolidated appeals fail, and should be dismissed, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. The Appellants will pay the costs of the second Respondent, who alone appeared.

Judgment, 25, May.

THE FORT PRESS

Appellants,

v.

THE MUNICIPAL

CORPORATION OF

THE CITY OF

BOMBAY and anr.,

Respondents.

Compulsory acquisition of land on behalf of Municipality—Starting of proceedings, if precludes parties agreeing as to price—Court's power to enforce agreement—Power of Collector to proceed with valuation, in spite of agreement.

After proceedings for compulsory acquisition of land have been set on foot, the parties to the proceedings remain as competent as before to come to a binding agreement regulating the amount of the purchase price, and an agreement so made is capable of being enforced in the Courts in the ordinary way.

Semhle.—The power of the Collector to determine what in his view the price should be, after he had evidence of a complete contract on the point, remains, notwithstanding such agreement.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Bombay, dated the 31st July 1919, confirming a decree of the same Court in its Original Jurisdiction, dated the 24th February 1919.

The questions arising for determination arose out of proceedings instituted by the Bombay Municipality for the compulsory acquisition of certain lands belonging to the Appellants.

During the pendency of the negotiations for the said purchase an agreement was entered into between the parties as to the purchase price.

This agreement was later repudiated by the Appellants, and the Respondents instituted the present suit claiming declarations that the agreement was valid and that the Appellants were not entitled to claim before the Collector more than the amount therein agreed.

The suit was tried by Macleod, J., who passed a decree for the Respondents and made the declarations prayed for.

From this decree an appeal was preferred to the High Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction and was dismissed by Marten and Heaton, JJ.

The original Defendants now appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. G. J. Talbot, K. C. and Wootton, K. C. for the Appellants.—Once proceedings are begun under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, the parties are no longer competent to enter into an agreement as to compensation. At most the agreement amounted to mutual admissions as to the value.

The contract was in any event left inconclusive as certain easements were by its terms left to the determination of the Collector.

The agreement was an agreement to oust the jurisdiction of the Collector and as such was illegal.

Reference was made to Ezra v. Secretary of State (1).

Mr Upjohn, K. C. (with him Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and E. B. Raikes) for the Respondents.—There was undoubtedly power to enter into an agreement before calling in the Collector and there is nothing to prevent our coming to terms even after the Collector has been called in to adjudicate.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD BUCKMASTER.—In this case the Corporation of Bombay entered into negotiations during the years 1916 and 1917 with the Appellants (The Fort Press Company, Limited) for the purpose of acquiring from them by agreement certain lands that were needed for local purposes. Those negotiations were not successful and on the 26th July 1917, while they were still pending, the Government issued, under the Land Acquisition Act, at the request of the Corporation, a notification that the lands were required to be taken by the Government for a public purpose. That notification was followed in due course by a notice on the 22nd August 1917, signed by the Deputy Collector of Bombay. The Collector proceeded in accordance with the powers conferred upon him by the Act to hear the dispute, but on the 12th September 1917, the negotiations between the Appellants and Respondents were reopened and a proposal was made by the Fort Press Company stating that they were willing to accept without prejudice Rs. 1,45,517, inclusive of 15 per cent. for compulsory acquisition, and the cost of the chimney as the price of the property, subject to certain specified deductions. This proposal was accepted and approved on behalf of the Corporation of Bombay. This alteration in the position of the parties was brought before the Collector in due course, but at an adjourned hearing on the 27th January 1918, it was denied on behalf of the Appellants that any agreement had been reached, and the Collector accordingly further adjourned the proceedings, in order that, as their Lordships understand the report of what took place, the parties might take the necessary steps to settle whether or not a bargain had been made. Those steps were taken with promptitude by the Respondents, who instituted proceedings in the High Court of Judicature at Bombay on the 12th March 1918, asking for a declaration that there was a contract and for a very large number of points of ancillary relief. They succeeded before both Courts, namely, that exercising Original and that exercising Appellate Jurisdiction and from the latter this appeal has been brought. The foundation of the Appellants' case rests on the assertion that when once proceedings for compulsory acquisition have been set on foot the interested parties cannot come to any binding agreement regulating the amount of the purchase price. There is nothing whatever in the Land Acquisition Act itself to negative any such right. If the parties before the institution of the proceedings contemplated by that Act, chose to agree, they were perfectly competent to do so and there is nothing whatever in the words of the Act to suggest that this power is thereby taken away. The Act certainly does not directly affect such a result, nor can their Lordships ascertain any reason why the fact that compulsory powers have been invoked in order to secure property from unwilling vendors, should be regarded as denuding all parties of rights they possessed before the proceedings began.

In the present case, the Corporation of Bombay enjoys by virtue of its Municipal Act of 1888, express power to acquire immoveable property at certain terms and rates and prices as may be thought right by the Commissioner when approved by the Corporation, and consequently the Board is not faced with the consideration of the question, as to whether there was any initial informality in the power of the Respondents to do what they have done.

Their Lordships think that the agreement made, which is now established beyond dispute, is an agreement which bound the parties and that the High Court exercising their Appellate Jurisdiction, were right in the view they took.

Their Lordships' opinion is not intended to interfere with the jurisdiction of the Collector. It may be a very unusual thing that he should proceed to determine what in his view the price should be, after he had evidence of a complete contract on the point, but if he thought right to do so their Lordships' judgment will not affect his taking such a course. All they decide is that the parties who were competent before the proceedings to agree what they thought was the right price for the property remain competent after the proceedings and an agreement so made is capable of being enforced in the Courts in the ordinary way.

For these reasons, in their Lordships' opinion, this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

SUIT No. 372 OF 1915.

RANKIN, J.	} ROBINDBRA DEB MANNA v. JOGENDRA DEB MANNA.
22, June.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, cl. 3—Order of reference to arbitration made by Court, whether power may be given to arbitrators to extend time—Court's jurisdiction to supersede arbitration proceedings—"The Court . . . shall fix such time as it thinks reasonable for making of the award"—Provision, if mandatory—Misconduct of arbitrator, time for filing, after award.

Matters in difference in a suit were, by a consent order, referred to two arbitrators under the provisions of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code. The order provided, inter alia, that the arbitrators should make their award within six months from the date on which an office-copy of the said order should be served on them or within such further time as they might allow themselves by endorsement on the said office-copy. The arbitrators, from time to time, enlarged the time for making their award under the said order. After a considerable number of sittings had been held extending over a period of two years, the Plaintiff applied that the reference should be recalled or superseded and the suit proceeded with:—

Held, re-calling the reference—That the provision in cl. 3 of Sch. II of the Civil Procedure Code, viz, "the Court shall . . . fix such time as it thinks reasonable for the making of the award," is mandatory; an order which allows the arbitrators to enlarge the time, in the manner aforesaid, for making their award is not a compliance with it; and, if by such an order an unlimited authority to extend the time was meant to be given to the arbitrators, it was bad and of no effect.

Under Sch. II of the Civil Procedure Code, the only time for entertaining charges of misconduct against an arbitrator is when the award has been filed.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

RANKIN, J.—This suit was brought in 1915 on the 24th of March. It is an administration and partition suit between brothers as regards the family estate descending to them from their grandfather and under their father's Will. Jogendra, the first Defendant, may be said to be the main Defendant as his intromissions with the joint estate are apparently the main object of attack. Jogendra, Defendant No. 2, appears to side with him the other brothers support the Plaintiff. A Receiver of the estate has been appointed by the Court at an early stage of the suit.

By order dated 27th July 1917 and made on the Plaintiff's application, the matters in difference in the suit were referred to two arbitrators under the Second Schedule to the Code. The order provided that the arbitrators should make their award in writing within six months from the date on which an office-copy of this order of reference be served on them or within such further time as they may allow themselves by endorsement on the said office-copy order. In case of difference of opinion between the arbitrators, they were to nominate an umpire who was to make his award within three months of the date of reference to him.

The joint remuneration of the arbitrators was agreed upon at Rs. 160 per sitting for the first ten sittings and thereafter Rs. 100 per sitting. Two clerks were appointed at Rs. 32 per sitting. The arbitrators appear to have held the sittings in the evening and for about two hours at a time. They began on the 20th December 1917 and on the 13th September 1919 they held the 122nd sitting. By this time they had not finished the Plaintiff's case: indeed they had heard two witnesses only, viz., the Plaintiff and one Jugal Kishore Pyne. The cross-examination of the third witness had only lasted for nine sittings and had not been completed. The manner in which the time has been expended can be found in the affidavits whose contradictions on detail leave the general result an undoubted scandal. The Plaintiff was examined-in-chief for some 15 sittings and cross-examined for 33. Many sittings seem to have been expended in other ways than in taking evidence, e.g., 10 days on discussions as to amending pleadings. The arbitrators' fees had amounted to about Rs. 16,700-0-0. The total law costs of the parties are put by the Plaintiff at a further sum of Rs. 30,000. Robust optimism on the part of the main Defendant puts it at Rs. 6,000 only. The Plaintiff says he has six more witnesses to call (making nine in all) though the main Defendant undertakes to deny this. In any case, four years after action brought, two years after the order of reference, 122 sittings having been held, the arbitrators in September 1919 were not yet in sight of the Defendants' case.

Since then nothing has been done. So far as the arbitrators are concerned, the reasons are as follows. Applications in connection with the Receivership and certain other matters came before me in January and again in May 1919, and I appear to have commented upon the unfortunate position. Moreover, in the absence of any decision about the estate or the parties' rights, and with costs apparently running mountains high, I could not see my way to order the Receiver to make distribution among the parties. These comments appear to have been carried to the arbitrators who, on the next day, 28th May 1919, enlarged their time for making their award till the end of the year and passed the following order—

"The Plaintiff does not produce the witness Babu Benode Behari Bannerjee, nor is there any application on his behalf although he verbally states that the witness is ill. It seems that the proceeding before us cannot go on in this way; the fees of the arbitrators and of their clerks have not been paid for a considerable period, and it does not appear that some of the parties are at all willing to pay them. Under the circumstances we adjourn the further sittings sine die."

Shortly afterwards this spirit of hopelessness took for a passing moment the form of a spirit of compromise and the good offices of the arbitrators seem to have been employed in assisting a settlement. At a sitting on the 9th July the parties present—not all were present—were thought to have come to terms. The arbitrators recorded in their minute:—"The parties discussed and settled the terms of settlement. It is proposed that a petition should be made before the arbitrators embodying the terms of settlement herein.

Next meeting on Friday 18th instant." The terms—many and complicated, as they necessarily were—were not at the time reduced to writing by the arbitrators or, as far as I can find, by anybody else. Only the Plaintiff and Defendants Nos. 1 and 5 were present. Each side, accordingly, drew up "without prejudice" a statement of terms of settlement, and these were widely discrepant. The Plaintiff maintained that there was a settlement, and pointed to the arbitrators' minutes and demanded that the arbitrators find out what it was. The main Defendant (and Defendant No. 2 who sides with him and who was not even present at the sitting) denied that any final settlement had been completed. The arbitrators in the end found—very rightly, as I think—that no settlement had been concluded. The Plaintiff on this and on other matters desired to apply to the Court and objected to the arbitration going on then the mother of this contending family died. This made no real difference to the case—none that could not have been adjusted in a few minutes—but the Plaintiff took six months to reconstitute the suit, and his application to the Court is filed on the 12th April 1920. From June 1919 to April 1920 the time has been wholly lost, and I give judgment now in June 1920 after the sheer waste of a year.

The Plaintiff applies to me in the first place to record, under Or. XXIII, r. 3, his version of the terms of settlement, or some other to be found upon the evidence. I think it clear that there was no concluded settlement and no proof even of authority to settle as regards Defendant No. 2.

But the Plaintiff further applies that the reference should be recalled or superseded, first by reason of misconduct of one of the arbitrators in giving private interviews to the first Defendant, and secondly by reason of the scandal, mishandling, expense, and delay of the arbitrators' proceedings. The charge of misconduct relates to visits to the arbitrators' house by the first Defendant on five occasions in August and September 1918, and on one occasion on 22nd July 1919. The allegations as to 1918 are utterly belated and their only possible effect is to discount the case upon the later incident. On the affidavits it is very difficult to decide a question upon which the reputation of a professional gentleman would depend. I am of opinion that under the 2nd Schedule the only time for entertaining charges of misconduct against an arbitrator is when the award has been filed, and I think, it would be wrong of me to pass any judgment whatsoever at this stage upon the point.

The main question is, whether in view of the hopeless waste of time, money and effort, I have any power to supersede the arbitration. The Advocate-General has pressed me strongly to do so and although I see no reason to think that the Plaintiff is not equally to blame with the other parties whose contentiousness and loquacity have utterly overcome the arbitrators, I think so little of the chance of any reasonable termination of the proceedings that I should have no hesitation in so doing if it is within my power. The arbitrators have failed to cope with their task. It was a difficult task, but they have made no adequate effort in the matter. Long ago they should either have retired or insisted on sitting de die in diem, and making some headway with the case. It is obvious that with sittings for two hours only at a time, half the time is lost. In (say) another year the case will have become so stale and overloaded that neither they nor anybody else will have much chance of arriving at a right decision.

Sir Benode Mitter for the main Defendant contends that there is no power to interfere at this stage. He points to cl. 3 of the 2nd Schedule and contends that the doctrine of an inherent power in the Court to interfere at any stage with the arbitrators is without warrant in the Schedule and contrary to its intention. His client is apparently willing to promise to be more reasonable and expeditious but he objects to the costs already incurred before the arbitrators being thrown away, and he suggests that the Plaintiff deserves to get rid of the arbitration merely because he is getting the worst of the battle.

Upon considering the 2nd Schedule it strikes one at once that the Court is in a position in which the Statute intended that no Court should ever be. The scheme of the Schedule is simple and effective. When an order of reference is made, the Court is to fix a reasonable time for the making of the award. When that time elapses, either there is an award or there is not. If there is, the award can be set aside for certain well-defined reasons. If not set aside, it can be confirmed. If, on the other hand, the time originally fixed by the Court as reasonable has elapsed and there is no award, the matter comes back to the Court and thus is founded the right of the Court either to enlarge or not to enlarge the time. If in its discretion it refuses any further time, the reference is at an end and the suit must be re-instated for trial. There is no need whatever in this scheme for any power of interference during the period limited to the arbitrators, and it is very much better that no interference should take place. The arbitrators are to be given their chance to make their own award. There are not to be two different authorities in operation at this stage doubling the litigation and expense; the Court checking the arbitrators throughout or riding them on the curb. The Court will stay its hand altogether until the time limited has expired; it can part with control temporarily because the time-limit will bring the matter back to the Court after no more than a reasonable time either to deal with the award or to consider whether more time should be given, or whether the reference should be superseded. The pivot of the whole scheme is the limit of time, and I can see no reason to suppose that any better scheme could be devised. That limit is the condition or the form of the Court's control over the arbitrators. The Court is not authorised either to abandon control or to substitute any other form of control.

In the present case after about three years of ill-directed labour and expense, the Court is said to be without control. There is no provision in the 2nd Schedule under which I can interfere, now, or for that matter in another two years' time, why? Because the order of reference imposed no limit of time by which the arbitrators (collectively) are bound. They were given unlimited power to extend the time at their own hand. This they have exercised and, as the main Defendant contends, can go on exercising till they see fit to stop. Pressed by the Plaintiff with the argument that the Court in such a case must have inherent power on some terms and at some time to end a scandal, and by the main Defendant with the argument that the right to interfere is not merely absent from the 2nd Schedule and incapable of inference therefrom, but is negatived by the terms of cl. 3, I suggested at the argument that there was a third view, possibly more correct than either, viz, that this reference as ordered flouted a cardinal principle of the 2nd Schedule from the outset. This view was adopted for the Plaintiff and was fully argued. It was resisted for the main Defendant whose Counsel laid stress on the fact that many orders of reference have been made in the same terms; and argued that even if such an order be wrong, there is no defect of jurisdiction. A strict compliance with cl. 1 is matter of jurisdiction, but on this view a strict compliance with cl. 3 is not. There is also a fourth view possible, viz, that in fixing six months from the date of service of the order, the Court fixed the time which it thought reasonable and that the order is only bad in so far as it purports to delegate to the arbitrators the Court's own duty to decide as to the enlargement of the time. On this view the Court could not enlarge the time, or supersede the reference under cl. 8.

There seems to be no doubt that in this Court a great many orders have been made in the present form. The reason is not far to seek. Apart from express limit contained in the submission, an arbitrator had at common law his whole life in which to make his award. But at common law all submissions were revocable at will. By the Arbitration Act of 1889 a submission is not revocable without leave, and unless the submission provides otherwise the award must be made within three months or within such further time as the arbitrators may in writing allow themselves from time to time. The Indian Arbitration Act follows this in principle. But in cases under these Statutes there is always power in the Court to give leave to revoke the submission, and this is the proper remedy where excessive delay or other injustice can be shewn. If, however, this well-known form as to time-limit be incorporated into the 2nd Schedule and if the last part of cl. 3 and the general scheme of the Schedule deprive the Court of any inherent power of revoking the reference, it is obvious that what was right and reasonable in the one class of cases is altogether out of the question in the other. If the main Defendant's contention be right, the Court has not in this case that control over a reference in this suit which it would have had in similar circumstances had the arbitration been an ordinary private arbitration. The present difficulty would seem to be the result of a false analogy.

By the first part of third clause of the 2nd Schedule two matters are dealt with uno flatu. First, that when sec. 1 has been complied with, the Court must make the order of reference. Secondly, that the Court by its order must fix such time as it thinks reasonable for the making of the award. The same clause by its second part forbids the interference of the Court save in the manner and to the extent provided in the Schedule. Here there are three things which go together, the Court must part with its jurisdiction to decide, it must part with it for a specified time and no more, during that time it must stand aside. If a Court should wrongly refuse an order of reference and insist upon deciding the suit, I apprehend that its decree would be bad apart from any question of the merits. If after an order of reference a Court wrongly proceeded to try the suit, it would contravene an express prohibition. If by the order of reference no time is fixed at all, the error is of the same class: no time-limit means no control; and the Court is not authorised to abandon control save to the extent and upon the terms laid down. In Raja Har Narain Singh v.

Chaudhram Bhagwant Kuar (1), the Privy Council dealt with this matter upon the terms of sec. 508 of the Code of 1882. They reversed the decision of the High Court at Allahabad that the words of that section were directory only, that is, that they amounted "to no more than the imposition of a public duty on the presiding officer of a Court of Justice," and that "the neglect of it could not affect the substantiality of the proceedings of the arbitrators," Har Narain v. Bhagwant Kuar (2). The judgment delivered by Lord Morris, after pointing out that the case must be decided entirely upon the construction of the sections, says "Their Lordships are of opinion that sec. 508 is not merely directory but that it is mandatory and imperative. Sec. 521 declares that no award shall be valid unless made within the period allowed by the Court, and it appears to their Lordships that this section would be rendered inoperative if sec. 508 is to be treated as merely directory." On the facts of that case this ruling was not applied. The actual decision was that after an award had been made the Court could not enlarge the time under sec. 514, and that, as the time had run out before the making of the award, it was invalid under sec. 521 and no Court could make a decree upon it. This latter question was undoubtedly put upon a new footing in some respects by the Code of 1908. Cl. 15 of the 2nd Schedule altered sec. 521: an award made out of time, or otherwise invalid, is no longer a nullity: it is liable to be set aside by the Court, but, if not set aside, a decree made for its enforcement is not without jurisdiction. [Shib Kristo Daw v. Satish Chunder Dutt (3)]. But the wording of sec 508 is retained in cl. 3 of the 2nd Schedule with two differences, upon which nothing turns for the present purpose. The question is whether what the Privy Council said of the same words is now inapplicable because sec. 521 has been altered. It seems to be very difficult indeed so to hold. It is still true that a part of cl. 15 would be rendered inoperative if cl. 3 is to be treated as merely directory, and on a broad view of the Schedule the provision for a limit of time is a main pillar of the scheme. Without it the character of the reference is entirely changed: the power of the Court to see justice done is materially diminished. Indeed, it is cut off at the very point at which the Statute intended it to be applied.

If the words of the 3rd clause have the same meaning as before, it would seem that consent of the parties will not alter the position. "We should have been disposed," said the Court in Lachmandas v. Abparkash (4), "to regard that as an irregularity which would be cured by the acquiescence of the parties were it not for the clear and explicit language of their Lordships of the Privy Council."

If then the provision in the third clause is mandatory, what is it that is thus imperatively required—"The Court shall fix such time as it thinks reasonable for the making of the award." Is it a compliance with that provision for the Court to say to the arbitrators?—"You can have any time you like. So long as you are both agreed, the time is left wholly to you. Endorse the order yourselves, and at your own hand the time will be enlarged indefinitely and as often as you like." With all respect for the opinions of other people, I am very clear that this is no compliance at all. It is not a defective compliance or an absence of strictness in compliance. It is exactly as if the order should recite "whereas by the third clause of the 2nd Schedule this Court is required to fix such time as the said Court thinks reasonable for the making of the award, now therefore this Court does not think fit to do so accordingly." It may be that it is open to the Court to define the time by reference to a condition; to give the arbitrators a certain length of time after the happening of a future event, v.g., the service upon them of the order. This latter form of order appears to be fairly common: in my experience it has proved an undesirable form of order, but I do not say that it is not a compliance with cl. 3. Nor where the clause has been obeyed in substance need undue stress be placed upon a mere defect of form—c.g., in the case cited Raja Har Narain Singh v. Chaudhram Bhagwant Kuar (1), a date was fixed by the Court for the hearing of the case and this date was taken as the limit of time given to the arbitrators. But what is necessary is that the Court should impose its own limit upon the arbitrators. In the present case, it seems to me that the Court has either not applied its own mind as to what is a reasonable limit or in any case it has refused to fix or specify it and has flatly declined to impose it upon any body. There would seem to be one thing which cannot serve as a condition by reference to the Court to fix the time, and that is the will of the arbitrators. To leave the arbitrators (collectively) with a free hand as to time, subject to no limit imposed by the Court, is exactly what the Statute is taking measures to avoid.

I cannot assent to the view assumed in the case of Co-Operative Hindusthan Bank

(1) I. L. R. 13 All. 300, 303 (P. C.) (1891).

ROBINDRA DEB MANNA v. JOGENDRA DEB MANNA.

v. Bhola Nath Borooah (5) that upon this form of order the Court must be taken to have fixed six months as the time which it thought reasonable. It gave "six months or such further time, etc." If it had really decided that six months was reasonable it had no right to give any more. It was bound by the Statute to limit the arbitrators in accordance with that opinion. But in any case it seems impossible to say that it either fixed or specified in the order six months as the time for making the award. The words of cl. 3, "shall fix such time as it thinks reasonable for the making of the award"—mean "shall fix such time for the making of the award as it thinks reasonable in that behalf." They are not complied with by mentioning a time and in the same breath letting some one else impose a different time as that within which the award may be made. This is clear, if only from cl. 15, where the time is referred to as "the period allowed by the Court."

If the intention of this form of order is to simply comply with cl. 3, but to throw away cl. 8, I think the attempt is impossible. In my view no time is "fixed" or "specified" within the meaning of cl. 3, unless it be so fixed and specified for the making of the award, that on the expiry of a period laid down by the Court, because the Court itself thinks it sufficient, the Court will have power under cl. 8 to supersede the arbitration.

If the words now in cl. 3 are not merely directory, it can make no difference whether the order is said to have failed entirely to comply with an imperative requirement or to have contravened an express prohibition. The same thing has a positive and a negative aspect. The Court must preserve a certain form of control; it does not do so. The Court has no authority to abandon control: it professes to do so.

I desire, however, to put the matter on a broader footing than a mere construction of cl. 3. The question then arises in the form whether it is competent by consent to delegate to the arbitrators the Court's function of control as to time. Upon this there is a dictum of Chitty, J., sitting at first instance in this Court, [Co-Operative Hindusthan Bank v. Bhola Nath Borooah (5)] In that case the arbitrator under the present form of order had purported to enlarge his own time after it had expired. The decision was that he could only do so beforehand. Having expressed this opinion the learned Judge makes the following observation obiter—"It was suggested that the order of this Court was ultra vires in so far as it permitted the arbitrator to enlarge the time for making his award. I do not think that is so. The Court proceeded by consent of the parties and there could be no objection to the functions of the Court with regard to the enlargement of time being delegated to the arbitrator if the parties so desired." I gather that the learned Judge was not put by the circumstances of that case or by the argument in sight of any objection at all to the course which he describes. He deals with none as he was proceeding on another ground they mattered little at the time. The circumstances of the present case put me in a very different position, and I cannot take shelter under this dictum. I find what I think to be a scandal proceeding under the authority of this Court and in connection with a suit which this Court has yet to decree and I am told that I cannot interfere because the pivot of the 2nd Schedule has been removed "The functions 'of the Court with regard to the enlargement of time' are the functions of the Court with regard to superseding the arbitration (cl. 8) To delegate a function of control to the party to be controlled is not in general a process to which objection is far to seek. If the argument be that because the Court has power to enlarge the time which it has fixed, it must therefore have power by consent and at the outset to let the arbitrators enlarge it without a limit this is merely to argue that because the Court has a duty to control the arbitrators, it has, therefore, power to throw the control away. The parties to a particular suit are not the only persons interested in the question whether a statutory duty shall be abandoned by the Court. If all parties desire to have a suit dismissed by consent and then to go to arbitration, no doubt there are ways in which this can be done. But under the 2nd Schedule the suit is still a suit, the arbitration is under the Court and the award will be binding, if at all, by virtue of an order of the Court. In any suit and particularly when as here a Receiver has been found necessary, interminable delay in the arbitration may mean a large number of quite unnecessary applications to the Court. For these reasons it cannot be assumed that it is no part of the intention of the Statute to limit the power of the Court as to what it may do by consent of parties. On the contrary, the general object is to lay down the terms upon which a reference may be ordered when all parties do consent, and the language of sec 89 as well as that of the Schedule leaves little room for doubting that the statutory scheme is, in all its main features, compulsory. If so, the Court cannot by consent abandon control while retaining the suit; this would be to abandon the general principle which governs the character of the reference which is authorised by the Code. I cannot agree with Sir Benode Mitter that the only thing in the 2nd Schedule which cannot be changed by consent is the first clause.

ROBINDRA DEB MANNA v. JOGENDRA DEB MANNA.

I do not think that such a case as Official Trustee of Bengal v. Kumudini Das (6) is really in point here. That the Probate Court does not act without jurisdiction in the sense of sec 50 of the Probate and Administration Act or in the general sense when it gives a grant to a person who is not entitled to it or who is an improper person to take it, is no doubt a clear and correct decision. But I do not understand this case to lay down, as applicable to all subject-matters, that jurisdiction to entertain an application involves jurisdiction to do anything whatever by order made upon such application, statutory prohibitions notwithstanding. It is a mistake to suppose that a matter does not go to jurisdiction because it affects the limits, and not the mere existence, of jurisdiction. To delegate the functions of the Court, or, as I should prefer in this case to say, to declare in advance that a certain function of control shall not be exercised at all, is to do an act of a class altogether different from those which a Court authorised to hear an application for a reference is empowered to do. Jurisdiction is involved because the order professes to abrogate jurisdiction. A forum competent to entertain an application to refer a suit is not clothed with jurisdiction to throw the suit "out at window". It is not in the least necessary, so far as general principles are concerned, to hold that the whole order of reference is bad. But the professed abandonment of control is nugatory. Further, I am far from saying that because cl. 3 has not been complied with or because the abandonment of control as to time was wholly without jurisdiction, that an award in this case if made and not set aside under cl. 15 would not give rise to a decree valid and unappealable under cl. 16. Under the Code of 1882 that may have been the position, but steps have been taken to alter this. Now, where there is an award, cl. 16, where it applies, cures invalidity in the interest of finality. However invalid the award, the decree can be valid because on applications under cl. 15 the Court has jurisdiction to determine whether the award is invalid in consequence of non-compliance with cl. 3, or for any other reason.

I have proceeded upon the footing that there is no inherent power on the part of the Court to supersede this reference. On this point I desire to adopt what was said by Piggot, J., in Chatarbhuj v. Raghubar Doyal (7) "In an arbitration conducted under the orders of the Court, the Court has very large powers of control. Against 'interminable delays' at any rate it can provide at once by its order specifying the period within which the award is to be returned. It seems to me unsound on general principles to invoke the inherent jurisdiction of the Court in a matter for which provision appears to be made in the Code itself." If this inherent power does exist I should in this case recall the arbitration. If, as I think, it does not exist, then the Court's control as against interminable delays is entirely dependent upon the limit of time, and the minimum result of the considerations which I have canvassed is that the unlimited authority to extend the time is bad and of no effect, if it is to be read as given to the arbitrators irrevocably, and without reservation to the Court of any shred of its original control. If it should so be read, as the original six months have long ago elapsed, I can supersede the arbitration now. If, however, the reservation can be implied, the same result follows, as the office-copy order served on the arbitrators is endorsed with extensions of time which run out on the 30th June 1920, and the award cannot be completed within the next few days (cf cl. 8).

According to a recent Patna case [Patto Kumari v. Upendra Nath Ghose (8)], where an application is made under cl. 15 to set aside an award as having been made out of time, questions of estoppel may arise, and the Court is not then obliged to set the award aside. Assuming that this doctrine founded on the cases under the Common Law Procedure Act is correct and that it also applies in all cases where the award is 'otherwise invalid,' I would point out that the position here is very different. The whole of the present difficulty arises because there is no award and no more than a distant prospect of any. By consenting to the order of 27th July 1917 and by his conduct under it till last September, the Plaintiff is not estopped from objecting to the continuance of the proceedings ad infinitum, or after they have proved themselves incorrigible. Nothing that he can do will entitle any one else to insist as against the Court upon the continuance of discreditable and inept proceedings under the Court's authority, and in a suit which is still before the Court.

The order will be that all proceedings under the order of reference, dated 27th July 1917, be discontinued and that the suit be restored to its proper prospective list for trial. Liberty to apply for any

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE
No. 2556 OF 1920.

PRAMATHA NATH SEN
GUPTA, Plaintiff,

Appellant,

v.

SHEIKH ABDUL AZIZ
MEAH, Defendant,
Respondent.

Commissioner pleader, taking from a party a mortgage bond in discharge of an untaxed bill of fees, etc.—Bond, if legal and can be sued upon—Duties of a Commissioner—Liability of party at whose instance appointment made to indemnify Commissioner.

A pleader Commissioner took a mortgage bond from a party, at whose instance he had been appointed, by which the said party promised to pay a certain sum as his fees, etc., and the Commissioner sued upon that bond.

Held—That the taking of the mortgage bond by the Commissioner was a breach of duty towards the parties and to the Court and it could not be sued upon as being an illegal contract. The duties of a Commissioner are inconsistent with approaching an individual party and getting him to pay sums of money in discharge of an untaxed bill of costs. It is an improper advantage obtained by an officer of Court by abuse of his position as such officer.

GOPALARATANAMAYYAR v. BUPALANARASIMMA NAYADU (1) distinguished.

There should be no doubt cast on the broad rule that a Commissioner appointed by a Court must keep himself clear of any ambiguous conduct towards any party in the matter of his fees.

The work done by the Commissioner is not work done for the party but work done for the Court. His right to sue the party at whose instance he was appointed does not arise out of a contract of employment with that party, but upon a different principle, namely, that where one party does work or incurs an obligation at the instance of another, there is, in certain circumstances, an implied provision of indemnity.

This was an appeal preferred on the 16th of November 1920, against the decree of Moulvie Abdul Khaleque, Esq., Officiating Subordinate Judge of Zillah Noakhali, dated the 12th of July 1920, reversing the decree of Babu Dwijendra Nath Pal, Munsif, 3rd Court at Sudharam, dated the 2nd of December 1918.

A certain partition suit was referred to arbitration by the Court and the Court empowered the arbitrator to appoint a pleader Commissioner. The Plaintiff in that suit deposited Rs 100 in terms of that order and a pleader Commissioner was appointed who asked the former to put in certain additional sums as further fees and in the end the Commissioner got ready his report and informed the Plaintiff that unless two hundred rupees more were paid he could not be expected to file his report. Thereupon a mortgage bond was given to the Commissioner by the Plaintiff promising to pay Rs 200. On that bond the Commissioner brought the present suit. The first Court decreed the suit and the lower Appellate Court dismissed it, whereupon the Commissioner preferred the present second appeal to the High Court.

Babus Cunada Charan Sen and Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta for the Appellant.

Babus Krishna Kamal Moitra (for Babu Jotindra Mohan Choudhuri) and Subodh Chandra Ray Chaudhuri for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows.—

RANKIN, J.—This is a second appeal brought by the Plaintiff who acted as a Commissioner in a partition suit which was referred to arbitration under the second Schedule of the Code. It appears that an arbitrator having been appointed, certain petitions were made to the arbitrator including one by the Plaintiff in the suit asking that in respect of a certain property there should be a local enquiry. On the 8th March 1915, the Court, having appointed the arbitrator to determine all the matters in difference between the parties in the suit, empowered him to dispose of all the petitions filed before him including the Plaintiff's petition for the appointment of a pleader Commissioner. The order gave the arbitrator power to appoint "whomsoever he likes" and directed the Plaintiff to deposit Rs. 100 at present as Commissioner's fees, etc., within seven days. The Plaintiff deposited Rs. 100 in terms of that order and the Plaintiff in the present suit was appointed Commissioner under that order. His actual appointment was made by the arbitrator under the power given to him by that order of the Court. The present Defendant who was then Plaintiff was applied to from time to time by the Commissioner to put in certain additional sums as further fees and in the end the Commissioner got ready his report and approached the Plaintiff in the suit on the footing that unless a couple of hundred rupees more were paid he could not be expected to file his report. Thereupon a mortgage bond was given to the Commissioner by the then Plaintiff promising to pay Rs. 200. On that bond the Commissioner has now sued.

The first Court has decreed the suit and the lower Appellate Court has dismissed the suit on the ground that the mortgage bond taken by the Commissioner in that way is taken contrary to law and cannot be sued upon. I shall, for the present purpose, put on one side altogether any question except this, whether the taking of that mortgage bond by the Commissioner was such a breach of his duty towards the parties, to the arbitrator and to the Court, that it cannot be sued upon as being an illegal contract. In my opinion, that proposition ought to be affirmed, and none the less so that it is good law that when one party at the instance of another has done work or come under an obligation, there may be an implied contract by the party at whose instance the work has been done to indemnify the other. The Commissioner, if sufficient fees were not forthcoming, was quite entitled to go to the arbitrator and to object to do the work without remuneration. It was quite proper for the arbitrator, if he thought fit, to require the Plaintiff to pay further sums of money into the arbitrator's hand. It was quite open to the arbitrator to enquire as to the amount due, to fix the terms of the Commissioner's remuneration and to deal with the matter as justice should require. It appears that no actual rate was fixed by contract with any body. It is said that the rate usually allowed under the rules of the High Court was taken as a guide in assessing what was due to the Commissioner. But the Plaintiff was not in so good a position as the arbitrator to dictate to the Commissioner any terms, to tax his bills, to query entries in the diary and to see that he did his duty properly. It is quite true that in all probability, the arbitrator would feel obliged to make the Plaintiff and no other party deposit the amount necessary to meet the Commissioner's claim. What happened was that at a time when the Commissioner was assisting the arbitrator to discharge judicial duties as between one party to a partition suit and another, he was approaching the Plaintiff from time to time, and getting sums of money on account, and finally as a condition of rendering his report, he took from the Plaintiff this mortgage bond for a fixed sum of money, viz., Rs 200 which the Plaintiff thereby promised to pay. In my judgment, this is entirely contrary to the duty of a Commissioner whether he be regarded as appointed by an arbitrator or whether he be regarded as appointed by the Court, the arbitrator having power to nominate the individual. It is quite incredible that the duties of a Commissioner should be thought consistent with approaching an individual party and getting him to pay sums of money in discharge of an untaxed bill of costs upon the footing that unless this is done the report will not be filed. In my judgment, there is no doubt about the principle. The Commissioner's duty was to keep all parties at arm's length, to receive no favour from any one, to look to one no more than to another. If he wanted his money he had the arbitrator as the person whose duty it was to put proper pressure on the right party and to provide for an adequate remuneration in a reasonable and proper way. For the Commissioner himself to put any sort of pressure upon one party so as to make the immediate payment of an untaxed bill, a condition without which the Commissioner's duty would not be done, or would be done at another time, is not merely ill-advised conduct, it is improper and illegal conduct. No such bargain so procured can stand. It is an improper advantage obtained by an officer of Court by abuse of his position as such officer. The case of Gopalaratnamayyar v. Bupalanarasimma Nayadu (1) is a case with reference to a suit for fees by a Commissioner after the litigation in question has come to an end. That is another matter altogether. It is not the case that the Commissioner is the servant of the party at whose instance the Court or the arbitrator makes the appointment. The work done is not work done for that party. It is work done for the Court and the right to sue a party at whose instance the Court appoints a Commissioner is not the right to sue a party for whom the Plaintiff has worked. It must be based upon a different principle of law, namely, that where one party does work, or incurs an obligation at the instance of another, there is, in certain circumstances, an implied provision of indemnity. It seems to me necessary that there should be no doubt cast on the broad rule that a Commissioner appointed by a Court must keep himself clear of any ambiguous conduct towards any party in the matter of his fees. I think the conclusions at which the learned Subordinate Judge has arrived are correct and that his decision should be upheld.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

PANTON, J.—I agree.

tiffs, Respondents.

Hindu widow—Alienation by document executed over 40 years—Recital of legal necessity not challenged by reversioner, value of, as evidence—If alienation can be impeached by a third party—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 43, where applicable.

Where a Hindu widow sold her right, title and interest by deeds of sale executed over 40 years ago for legal necessities as recited therein and the transaction was not challenged by her then next reversioner during her life-time

Held—(1) That the presumption of there having been legal necessities as recited in the sale deeds stood unrebutted, and (2) that the sale being voidable only by the reversioner himself, any person other than the reversioner could not impeach it.

Held further—That sec. 43 of the Transfer of Property Act did not apply to persons who merely signed a sale deed whereby another person who had no title professed to transfer the property as her own.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Banamali Sen, Subordinate Judge, Second Court, of Zillah Mymensingh, dated the 10th of March 1919, modifying the decree of Babu Anrita Lal Mookerjee, Munsif, 2nd Court, Tangail, dated the 8th of December 1917.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakravarty (with him Babu Tarakeswar Pal Choudhury) for the Appellants in S. A. Nos. 1244 to 1249 of 1919—The first three appeals relate to Mouza Dubail and the other two to Balina. The first Court has rightly dismissed the Dubail cases of the Plaintiffs, and has given joint decree to the extent of $1\frac{1}{2}$ annas in Balina. The lower Appellate Court has given Plaintiff, 2/5 of $1\frac{1}{2}$ annas wrongly as the Plaintiffs do not at all claim $1\frac{1}{2}$ annas of the Balina Appellants. It is unnecessary to discuss the validity of purchase of Balina Appellants. The proper question for the Court was and should have been what was the Plaintiffs' extent of share. The law as to khamar bari is settled since Hulodhur Sen v Gooroo Das Roy (1) and fully explained recently by Mookerjee, J., in Dwijendra Narain v Purnendu Narain (2). The lower Appellate Court has clearly stated that the Plaintiffs' pleader had given up the point as to legal necessity. On the basis of this admission of the pleader all findings and propositions of law as to legal necessity discussed by the lower Court are necessary and cannot be accepted as such. All the five brothers of Nalini were parties to the sale to Balina Appellants. The deduction of 2/5 of $1\frac{1}{2}$ annas out of it cannot legally stand. The Court should determine what was Plaintiffs' share. There should accordingly be a remand though not for the Balina lands at any rate for the Dubail lands. There is a finding of civil death of the widow Siba Sundari which gives a valid title to Nalini and his four brothers.

Babu Mahendra Nath Ray (with him Babus Surendra Nath Ghosal and Haripada Ghose) for the Respondents in the above five appeals.—These five appeals are concluded by findings of fact. As to incongruous and inconsistent findings against the Plaintiffs we have preferred three separate appeals. Both Courts have found the lands to be khamar of Plaintiffs. As to Balina it has been rather conceded that there is no case of the Defendants-Appellants. There are five distinct findings of fact in Plaintiffs' favour upon evidence on record. The kobala Ex 2 has been found to have been with lawful consideration. It is found as a fact to be a transaction which took place about 41 years ago and the proposition of law as laid down by the Subordinate Judge to the effect that in case of recitals in the kobala that there were necessities—at least when the parties to the transaction are dead and most of the persons likely to know them cannot be found—is good presumption in law and there is a series of rulings of the Judicial Committee in support thereof. It is a mistake to think that there is a finding of fact as to civil death of the widow. In fact what has been found is otherwise. The Defendants' five appeals should therefore be dismissed. We have won the other three appeals Nos. 1281, 1322 and 1323 which relate to Dubail only. Sec. 43 of the Transfer of Property Act has been wrongly applied. There were the two kobalas by Siba Sundari, one as guardian of the minor son and the other as heir to that minor son after his death, both found as a fact upon the evidence on record to have been amply supported with legal necessities. The recitals in the kobala over 40 years ago when parties and witnesses are not available are some evidence of necessities. This has been always held to be the correct proposition of law. The sale to Baliati Respondents with representation during the life-time of Siba Sundari as belonging to the mother of the five brothers of Nalini was invalid; accordingly subsequent sale cannot validate the title by application of sec. 43 of the Transfer of Property Act. [Vide Shephard and Brown, 7th Ed., p. 133], also Nurul Hossein v. Sheo Shahai Lal (3) and Oodey Koowar v. Musstt. Ladoo (4)]. The questions of legal necessity were not at all given up. It is a misconception of the argument of the pleader who contended "conceding for the sake of argument" (vide Ground No. 4 of memo of appeal). There is also an affidavit here in support thereof.

The point whether the Defendant can question the legal necessity of the Plaintiffs' purchase is the 16th issue in this case, and has been also wrongly decided by the Subordinate Judge as he holds that the Defendant can raise it, for the Defendant claims through Baliati Babus who acquired 12 gundas share of Nalini and Jogendra. This is legally wrong. The only persons competent to question the legal necessity are not the Baliati Babus nor Nalini and Jogendra nor the Defendants. As a matter of fact the reversioners who alone have the privilege by law had not at all questioned it and therefore third persons are disentitled to question the same.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakravarty in reply—The point as to legal necessity was not taken in the grounds. The affidavit cannot be made to amplify at this late stage.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

WALMSLEY, J.—The Plaintiffs in the suits from which these appeals arise are Prosonna Kumar and Chandra Kumar, sons of the late Krishna Kumar Nag. They instituted five suits, two of them relating to land situated in Mouzah in Balina, three relating to land situated in Mouzah Dubail. In the first Court they won in the two suits relating to Mouzah Balina while they lost the other three. That decision gave rise to five appeals, three by the Plaintiffs and two by the Defendants. In the lower Appellate Court the Defendants' appeals were dismissed, and the Plaintiffs' appeals decreed almost in full.

JABEDALI SHEIKH v PRASANNA KUMAR NAG.
